Conclusions

Referencing the different perspectives of each gospel's account of Christ's resurrection, N. T. Wright says: "The stories exhibit, as has been said repeatedly over the last hundred years or more, exactly that surface tension which we associate not with tales artfully told by people eager to sustain a fiction and therefore anxious to make everything look right, but with the hurried, puzzled accounts of those who have seen with their own eyes something which took them horribly by surprise and with which they have not yet fully come to terms."[3]

Wright is correct. The same critics who try and point out contradictions in the gospels would no doubt cry 'collusion' if they found exact verbal parallelism and a singular account of the resurrection.
In the end, and contrary to what Emil Brunner wrote, the recordings of the resurrection found in the four gospels are found to harmonize quite well upon closer examination, and perhaps most importantly, strongly agree on the one key fact that has universal life impact: Christ is risen from the dead![4]

The Resurrection of Jesus Appearances "Chronologically" Arranged

When we encounter the resurrection accounts in the New Testament, we face a challenge in putting all the pieces together in such a way that the sequence of events flows in logical order. This is due to the fact that no one Gospel presents all or even most of the information. Some of the accounts seem to conflict. I have opined before that these apparent conflicts are usually not in fact true conflicts. Another difficulty with putting all the facts together in a coherent manner is that the timeline of the events is unclear in some of the accounts. Luke and John are the clearest as to the timing of the events they describe; Matthew and Luke give us very few parameters. Both Acts and Paul also supply accounts in which the timeline is not always clear.
Nevertheless, I want to propose to you a possible, dare I claim even likely, sequence of the resurrection events. The work is my own and I make no claim that this scenario is certain or backed up by recognized ancient authority. St Augustine has done quite a lot of work in this matter and you can read that by clicking HERE. My proposition here is simply the fruit of 25+ years of praying over and pondering the events of those forty days between the Lord's resurrection and His ascension. My reflections are based as solidly as possible on the Bible, with a sprinkling of speculation.
I realize that my attempt to do this will irritate some modern biblical scholars who seem to insist that it is wrong to attempt any synthesis of the texts since the authors intended no such synthesis. Nevertheless, I press on boldly, hoping that the average believer will benefit from it and find such a synthesis interesting. Take it for what it is: the work of an obscure pastor who has prayed and carefully sought to follow the sequence of the forty days. You may wish to offer correction or an alternative interpretation; I encourage you to do so in the comments.

- I. The morning of day one
  - A. Very early in the morning a group of several women, including Mary Magdalene, approach the tomb to complete burial customs on behalf of Jesus (Matt 28:1; Mk 16:1; Jn 20:1).
  - B. They behold the tomb opened and are alarmed.
  - C. Mary Magdalene runs off to Peter and John with the distressing news of likely grave robbers (Jn 20:2).
  - D. The women who remain at the tomb encounter an angel, who declares to them that Jesus has risen and that they should tell this to the brethren (Mk 16:5 Lk 24:4; Mt 28:5).
  - E. At first the women are filled with fear and depart from the tomb afraid to speak (Mk 16:8).
  - F. Recovering their courage they decide to go to the Apostles (Lk 24:9; Mt 28:8).
  - G. Meanwhile Peter and John go to the tomb to investigate Mary Magdalene's claim. Mary follows behind them, arriving back at the tomb while Peter and John are still there. Peter and John discover the empty tomb; they encounter no angel. John believes in the resurrection; Peter's conclusion is not recorded.
  - H. The other women report to the remaining Apostles what the angel at the tomb said to them. Peter and John have not yet returned from the tomb and these remaining apostles are at first dismissive of the women's story (Lk 24:9-11).
  - I. Mary Magdalene, lingering at the tomb, weeps and is fearful. Peering into the tomb, she sees this time two angels who wonder why she weeps. Jesus then approaches her from behind. Not looking directly at Jesus, she supposes Him to be the gardener. When He calls her by name, Mary recognizes His voice, turns, and sees Him. Filled with joy she clings to Him (APPEARANCE 1) (Jn 20:16).
  - J. Jesus sends Mary back to the Apostles with the news to prepare them for His appearance later that day (Jn 20:17).
  - K. The other women have now departed from the Apostles and are on their way, possibly back home. Jesus appears to them (Mt 28:9) (after having dispatched Mary). He also sends them back to the Apostles with the news that He has risen and that He will see them (APPEARANCE 2).
- II. The afternoon and evening of day one
  - A. Later that day, two disciples on their way to Emmaus are pondering what they have heard about rumors of Jesus' resurrection. Jesus comes up behind them but they are prevented from recognizing Him. First Jesus breaks open the word for them; then He sits at table with them and celebrates the Eucharist, whereupon their eyes are opened and they recognize Him in the breaking of the bread (APPEARANCE 3) (Lk 24:13-30).

- B. The two disciples return that evening to Jerusalem and go to the Eleven. At first the Eleven disbelieve them just as they had the women (Mk 16:13). Nevertheless they continue to relate what they have experienced. At some point, Peter draws apart from the others (perhaps for a walk?). The Lord appears to Peter (APPEARANCE 4) (Lk 24:34; 1 Cor 15:5). Peter informs the other ten, who then believe. Thus the disciples from Emmaus (still lingering with the Apostles) are now told (perhaps by way of apology) that it is in indeed true that Jesus has risen (Lk 24:34).
- C. Almost at the same moment, Jesus appears to the small gathering of Apostles and the two disciples from Emmaus (APPEARANCE 5). Thomas is absent (although the Lucan text describes the appearance as being to "the eleven," this is probably just shorthand for the Apostles as a group). They are startled but Jesus reassures them and opens the scriptures to them (Lk 24:36ff).
- D. There is some debate as to whether He appeared to them a second time that night. The Johannine and Lucan accounts have significantly different descriptions of the appearance on that first Sunday evening. Is it merely a different recounting of the same appearance or is it a wholly separate appearance? It is not possible to say for sure. Nevertheless, since the descriptions are so different we can call it APPEARANCE 6 (Jn 20:19ff), though it is likely one and the same as "Appearance 5."

- III. Interlude
  - A. There is no biblical account of Jesus appearing to anyone during the week that followed. The next account of the resurrection says, "Eight days later," namely the following Sunday.
  - B. We do know that the apostles exclaimed to Thomas that they had seen the Lord, but that he refused to believe it (Jn 20:24).
  - C. Were the apostles nervous that Jesus had not appeared again each day? We do not know; there are no accounts of what happened during this interlude.
- IV. One week later, Sunday two
  - A. Jesus appears once again (APPEARANCE 7) to the gathered Apostles. This time Thomas is with them. He calls Thomas to faith, and Thomas now confesses Jesus to be Lord and God (Jn 20:24-29).
- V. Interlude two
  - A. The apostles had received instructions to return to Galilee (Mt 28:10; Mk 16:7) where they would see Jesus. Thus they spent some of this interlude journeying 60 miles to the north, a trip that would have taken a considerable amount of time. We can imagine them making the trek north during the intervening days.
- VI. Sometime later
  - A. The time frame of the next appearance is somewhat vague. John merely says "after this." It is likely a matter of days or a week at best. The scene is at the Sea of Galilee; not all of the Twelve are present. They have gone fishing and Jesus summons them from the lakeside. They come to shore and see him (APPEARANCE 8). Peter has a poignant discussion with Jesus and is commissioned to tend the flock of Christ (Jn 21).
  - B. The Appearance to the 500 – Of all the appearances, you might think that this one would have been recorded in some detail since it was the most widely experienced. It would seem that many accounts would have existed and that at least one would have made its way into the Scriptures. Yet there is no account of it other than that it did in fact happen. Paul records the fact of this appearance in 1 Cor 15:6: Then he appeared to more than five hundred brethren at one time, most of whom are still alive, though some have fallen asleep (APPEARANCE 9).Where did this take place? What was it like? What was the reaction? We simply do not know. Proof once again that the Bible is not a history book in the conventional sense. Rather, it is a highly selective telling of what took place, not a complete account. The Bible makes no claim to be something it is not. It is quite clear that it is a selective book (Jn 20:30).
  - C. The Appearance to James. Here again we do not have a description of this appearance, only a remark by Paul that it did in fact happen 1 Cor 15:7: Then he appeared to James (APPEARANCE 10). The time frame of this appearance is not clear, only that it happened after the appearance to the five hundred and before the final appearance to the apostles.

- VII. The rest of the forty days
  - A. Jesus certainly had other appearances to/with the disciples. Luke attests to this in Acts when he writes, To them he presented himself alive after his passion by many proofs, appearing to them during forty days, and speaking of the kingdom of God (Acts 1:3).
  - B. During this time there is perhaps the one appearance we can attribute specifically to this time period as recorded by both Matthew (Mt 28:16ff) and Mark (Mk 16:14ff). It takes place on "a mountaintop in Galilee." Mark adds that they were reclining at table. I refer to this appearance (time frame uncertain) as APPEARANCE 11. It is here that Jesus gives the great commission. Although Mark's text may seem to imply that Jesus was taken up from this mountain, such a conclusion is rash since Mark only indicates that Jesus ascended only "after he had spoken to them" (Mk 16:19).
  - C. Evidently Jesus had also summoned them back to Jerusalem at least toward the end of the period of the forty days. There they would be present for the feast of Pentecost. We can imagine frequent appearances with ongoing instruction, for Luke records that Jesus "stayed with them." Most of these appearances and discourses are not recorded. Luke writes in Acts, And while staying with them he charged them not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait for the promise of the Father, which, he said, "you heard from me, for John baptized with water, but before many days you shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit" (Acts 1:4).
- VIII. The final appearance and ascension
  - A. After forty days of appearances and instructions we have a final account of the last appearance (APPEARANCE 12) wherein He leads them out to a place near Bethany and gives them final instructions to wait in Jerusalem until the Holy Spirit is sent. And then He is taken up to Heaven in their very sight (Lk 24:50-53; Acts 1:1-11).

So here is a possible, and if I do say so myself likely, chronology of the resurrection appearances. It is a synthesis that attempts to collect all the information and present it in a logical sequence. There are limits to what we can expect of the Scriptural accounts; fitting perfectly into a logical sequence is not what the texts primarily propose to do. Yet such a chronological sequence can prove helpful and it is in that spirit which I present it.

Jesus' Appearances after His Resurrection

Each of the Gospels and a few other NT books mention various appearances by Jesus after his resurrection, but only Luke notes that Jesus ascended to heaven from the Mount of Olives just outside Jerusalem. Luke also recounts Jesus' discussion with the two disciples on the road to Emmaus (likely modern Qaluniyah, not the Emmaus of the intertestamental period, which lay too far west). Matthew and John note that Jesus also appeared to his disciples in the region of Galilee.

Alternate View

The Three Commissions

It will be seen that there were three separate Commissions given to the Eleven Apostles, at different times, on distinctly specified occasions and in varying words.

The first is recorded in Luke 24:47. This was given in Jerusalem on the evening of the day of the resurrection. It was given, not to the Eleven only, but also to "them that were with them." (v. 33). The commission was the continuation of His own ministry and that of John the Baptist (Matthew 22:1-10). They were all to proclaim "repentance and remission of sins". The New Covenant had been made, in virtue of which this message of pardon could be declared. (Matthew 26:26-29, Mark 14:22-25, Luke 22:14-23, Acts 3:19), first in Jerusalem, and then to all nations. This was done by Peter (Acts 2:38;3:19, etc.).

The second is recorded in Mark 16:15-18, and was given when the Lord appeared to the Eleven as they sat at meat; and it was carried out by "them that heard Him", as foretold in Matthew 22:4-7, and fulfilled in Mark 16:20, as confirmed in Hebrews 2:3.

The Acts of the Apostles is the inspired history of the fulfillment of this commission, so far as it is necessary for our instruction. It was given for the personal ministry of the Apostles, to be fulfilled by them before the destruction of the Temple and of Jerusalem.

The third is recorded in Matthew 28:19, 20, and was given on a mountain in Galilee. It was the proclamation of the King, who had left Jerusalem, according to the Parable (Luke 19:12), until He returned in power to set up His kingdom (26:64). It is the summons to the Gentile nations to submit to the Lord Jesus, as the King of Israel, according to Psalms 2:10-12. It was the proclamation of "the Gospel of the Kingdom" for a witness to all nations, immediately before the end of the age (Matthew 24:14, Revelation 14:6).

Matthew 28:1-8,11-15 - When the Sabbath (Saturday) was over, just as the first day of the week (Sunday) was dawning ...

- The Sunday morning after the Good Friday of the Crucifixion. In Jewish reckoning, Friday is day one, Saturday day two, and Sunday day three - hence the three days between crucifixion and resurrection -

... Mary from Magdala and the other Mary (mother of James the Younger and Joseph) went to look at the tomb. At that moment there was a great earthquake, for an angel of the Lord came down from Heaven, went forward and rolled back the stone and took his seat upon it. His appearance was dazzling like lightning and his clothes were white as snow. The guards shook with terror at the sight of him and collapsed like dead men. But the angel spoke to the women, "Do not be afraid. I know that you are looking for Jesus who was crucified. He is not here - he is risen, just as he said he would. Come and look at the place where he was lying. Then go quickly and tell his disciples that he has risen from the dead. And, listen, he goes before you into Galilee! You will see him there! Now I have told you my message."

Then the women went away quickly from the tomb, their hearts filled with awe and great joy, and ran to give the news to his disciples. ...

- In verses 9 and 10 (Part 37 following) Jesus stands before them in his first appearance, and tells the women he will see his disciples in Galilee:

(Verse 11 ....) And while they were on their way, some of the sentries went into the city and reported to the chief priests everything that had happened. They got together with the elders, and after consultation gave the soldiers a considerable sum of money and told them, "Your story must be that his disciples came after dark, and stole him away while you were asleep. If by any chance this reaches the (Roman) governor's ears, we will put it right with him and see that you do not suffer for it." So they took the money and obeyed their instructions. The story was spread and is current among the Jews to this day.

Mark 16:1-8 - When the Sabbath was over, Mary of Magdala, Mary the mother of James (the Younger), and Salome (mother of the apostles James and John) bought spices so that they could go and anoint him. And very early in the morning on the first day of the week, they came to the tomb, just as the sun was rising.

"Who is going to roll the stone back from the doorway of the tomb?" they asked each other.

And then as they looked closer, they saw that the stone, which was a very large one, had been rolled back. So they went into the tomb and saw a young man in a white robe sitting on the right-hand side, and they were simply astonished. But he said to them, "There is no need to be astonished. He has risen; he is not here. Look, here is the place where they laid him. But now go and tell his disciples, and Peter, that he will be in Galilee before you. You will see him there just as he told you."

And they got out of the tomb and ran away from it. They were trembling with excitement. They did not dare to breathe a word to anyone.

- Mark's Gospel ends here in most of the early manuscripts.

Luke 24:1-12 - But at the first signs of dawn on the first day of the week (Sunday), they (the women who accompanied Jesus from Galilee and who after his resurrection, had rested throughout the Saturday Sabbath in obedience to the Fourth Commandment) went to the tomb, taking with them the aromatic spices they had prepared. They discovered that the stone had been rolled away from the tomb, but on going inside, the body of the Lord Jesus was not to be found. While they were still puzzling over this, two men suddenly stood at their elbow, dressed in dazzling light. The women were terribly frightened, and turned their eyes away and looked at the ground. But the two men spoke to them, "Why do you look for the living among the dead? He is not here: he has risen! Remember what he said to you, while he was still in Galilee - that the Son of Man must be betrayed into the hands of sinful men, and must be crucified, and must rise again on the third day."

Then they did remember what he had said, and they turned their backs on the tomb and went and told all this to the eleven and the others who were with them.

It was Mary of Magdala, Joanna (one of Jesus' earliest women followers and wife of Chuza, Herod Antipas' steward, Luke 8:3), the mother of James (the "other" Mary), and their companions who made this report to the apostles. But it struck them as sheer imagination, and they did not believe the women. Only (the apostle) Peter got up and ran to the tomb. He stooped down and saw the linen clothes lying there all by themselves, and he went home wondering at what had happened.

John 20:1-13 - But on the first day of the week, Mary of Magdala arrived at the tomb, very early in the morning, while it was still dark, and noticed that the stone had been taken away from the tomb. At this she ran, found Simon Peter and the other disciple whom Jesus loved (the apostle John), and told them, "They have taken the Lord out of the tomb and we don't know where they have put him."

Peter and the other disciple set off at once for the tomb, the two of them running together. The other disciple (the younger John) ran faster than Peter and was the first to arrive at the tomb. He stooped and looked inside and noticed the linen cloths lying there but did not go in himself. Hard on his heels came Simon Peter and went straight into the tomb. He noticed that the linen cloths were lying there, and that the handkerchief, which had been round Jesus's head, was not lying with the linen cloths but was rolled up by itself, a little way apart. Then the other disciple, who was the first to arrive at the tomb, came inside as well, saw what had happened and believed. (They did not yet understand the scripture which said that he must rise from the dead.) So the disciples went back again to their homes.

But Mary (Magdalene) stood just outside the tomb, and she was crying. And as she cried, she looked into the tomb and saw two angels in white who sat, one at the head and the other at the foot of the place where the body of Jesus had lain.

The angels spoke to her, "Why are you crying?" they asked.

"Because they have taken away my Lord, and I don't know where they have put him!" she said.

Part 37 - THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS AND HIS APPEARANCES TO HIS DISCIPLES

(Matthew 28:9-10,16-17; Mark 16:9-14; Luke 24:13-44; John 20:14-21:14; Acts 1:1-5; 1 Corinthians 15:3-8)

Matthew 28:9-10,16-17 - But quite suddenly (as Mary from Magdala and the other Mary ran from the empty tomb), Jesus stood before them in their path, and said, "Peace be with you!" And they went forward to meet him and, clasping his feet, worshipped him. Then Jesus said to them, "Do not be afraid. Go now and tell my brothers to go into Galilee and they shall see me there" ....

Jesus gives his final commission

(Verse 16 ....) But the eleven went to the hill-side in Galilee where Jesus had arranged to meet them, and when they had seen him they worshipped him, though some of them were doubtful.

Mark 16:9-14 - (The Gospel now continues with possibly an ancient addition to Mark's account .....) When Jesus rose early on that first day of the week (the Sunday), he appeared first of all to Mary of Magdala, from whom he had driven out seven evil spirits. And she went and reported this to his sorrowing and weeping followers. They heard her say that he was alive and that she had seen him, but they did not believe it.

Later, he appeared in a different form to two of them (disciples, but not apostles of Jesus) who were out walking, as they were on their way to the country (on the road to Emmaus). These two came back and told the others, but they did not believe them either. Still later he appeared to the eleven themselves as they were sitting at table and reproached them for their lack of faith, and reluctance to believe those who had seen him after he had risen.

Luke 24:13-44 - Then on the same day we find two of them (disciples) going off to Emmaus, a village (location uncertain) about seven miles from Jerusalem. As they went they were deep in conversation about everything that had happened. While they were absorbed in their serious talk and discussion,

Jesus himself approached and walked along with them, but something prevented them from recognising him. Then he spoke to them, "What is all this discussion that you are having on your walk?"

They stopped, their faces drawn with misery, and the one called Cleopas (possibly Clopas, the husband of Mary who was present at the crucifixion) replied, "You must be the only stranger in Jerusalem who hasn't heard all the things that have happened there recently!"

"What things?" asked Jesus.

"Oh, all about Jesus, from Nazareth. There was a man - a prophet strong in what he did and what he said, in God's eyes as well as the people's. Haven't you heard how our chief priests and rulers handed him over for execution, and had him crucified? But we were hoping he was the one who was to come and set Israel free ...

"Yes, and as if that were not enough, it's getting on for three days since all this happened; and some of our womenfolk have disturbed us profoundly. For they went to the tomb at dawn, and then when they couldn't find his body they said that they had a vision of angels who said that he was alive. Some of our people went straight off to the tomb and found things just as the women had described them - but they didn't see him!"

Then he spoke to them, "Aren't you failing to understand, and slow to believe in all that the prophets have said? Was it not inevitable that Christ should suffer like that and so find his glory?"

Then, beginning with Moses and all the prophets, he explained to them everything in the scriptures that referred to himself. They were by now approaching the village to which they were going. He gave the impression that he meant to go on further, but they stopped him with the words, "Do stay with us. It is nearly evening and soon the day will be over."

So he went indoors to stay with them. Then it happened! While he was sitting at table with them he took the loaf, gave thanks, broke it and passed it to them. Their eyes opened wide and they knew him! But he vanished from their sight. Then they said to each other, "Weren't our hearts glowing while he was with us on the road, and when he made the scriptures so plain to us?"

And they got to their feet without delay and turned back to Jerusalem. There they found the eleven and their friends all together, full of the news - "The Lord is really risen - he has appeared to Simon (the apostle Peter) now!"

Then they told the story of their walk, and how they recognised him when he broke the loaf.

Jesus suddenly appears to the disciples

And while they were still talking about these things, Jesus himself stood among them and said, "Peace be to you all!"

But they shrank back in terror for they thought they were seeing a ghost.

"Why are you so worried?" said Jesus, "and why do doubts arise in your minds? Look at my hands and feet - it is really I myself! Feel me and see; ghosts have no flesh or bones as you can see that I have."

But while they still could not believe it through sheer joy and were quite bewildered, Jesus said to them, "Have you anything here to eat?"

They gave him a piece of broiled fish and part of a honeycomb which he took and ate before their eyes. Then he said, "Here and now are fulfilled the words that I told you when I was with you: that everything written about me in the Law of Moses and in the prophets and psalms must come true."

John 20:14-21:14 - Then she (Mary of Magdala, crying outside the tomb) turned and noticed Jesus standing there, without realising that it was Jesus.

"Why are you crying?" said Jesus to her. "Who are you looking for?"

She, supposing that he was the gardener, said, "Oh, sir, if you have carried him away, please tell me where you have put him and I will take him away."

Jesus said to her, "Mary!"

At this she turned right round and said to him, in Hebrew, "Master!"

"No!" said Jesus, "do not hold me now. I have not yet gone up to the Father. Go and tell my brothers that I am going up to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God."

And Mary of Magdala went off to the disciples, with the news, "I have seen the Lord!", and she told them what he had said to her.

In the evening of that first day of the week, the disciples had met together with the doors locked for fear of the Jews. Jesus came and stood right in the middle of them and said, "Peace be with you!"

Then he showed them his hands and his side, and when they saw the Lord the disciples were overjoyed.

Jesus said to them again, "Yes, peace be with you! Just as the Father sent me, so I am now going to send you."

And then he breathed upon them and said, "Receive holy spirit. If you forgive any men's sins, they are forgiven, and if you hold them unforgiven, they are unforgiven."

The risen Jesus and Thomas

But one of the twelve, Thomas (called the Twin), was not with them when Jesus came. The other disciples kept on telling him, "We have seen the Lord", but he replied, "Unless I see in his own hands the mark of the nails, and put my finger where the nails were, and put my hand into his side, I will never believe!"

Just over a week later, the disciples were indoors again and Thomas was with them. The doors were shut, but Jesus came and stood in the middle of them and said, "Peace be with you!"

Then he said to Thomas, "Put your fingers here - look, here are my hands. Take my hand and put it in my side. You must not doubt, but believe."

"My Lord and my God!" cried Thomas.

"Is it because you have seen me that you believe?" Jesus said to him. "Happy are those who have never seen me and yet have believed!"

Jesus gave a great many other signs in the presence of his disciples which are not recorded in this book. But these have been written so that you may believe that Jesus is Christ, the Son of God, and that in that faith you may have life as his disciples.

The risen Jesus and Peter

(Chapter 21 ....) Later on, Jesus showed himself again to his disciples on the shore of Lake Tiberias (the Sea of Galilee), and he did it in this way. Simon Peter, Thomas (called the Twin), Nathanael

(also known as Bartholomew) from Cana in Galilee, the sons of Zebedee (James and John) and two other disciples were together, when Simon Peter said, "I'm going fishing."

"All right," they replied, "we'll go with you."

So they went out and got into the boat and during the night caught nothing at all. But just as dawn began to break, Jesus stood there on the beach, although the disciples had no idea that it was Jesus.

"Have you caught anything, lads?" Jesus called out to them.

"No," they replied.

"Throw the net on the right side of the boat," said Jesus, "and you'll have a catch."

So they threw out the net and found that they were now not strong enough to pull it in because it was so full of fish! At this, the disciple that Jesus loved (John) said to Peter, "It is the Lord!"

Hearing this, Peter slipped on his clothes, for he had been naked, and plunged into the se The other disciples followed in the boat, for they were only about a hundred yards from the shore, dragging in the net full of fish. When they had landed, they saw that a charcoal fire was burning, with a fish placed on it, and some bread. Jesus said to them, "Bring me some of the fish you've just caught."

So Simon Peter got into the boat and hauled the net ashore full of large fish, one hundred and fifty-three altogether. But in spite of the large number the net was not torn.

Then Jesus said to them, "Come and have your breakfast."

None of the disciples dared to ask him who he was; they knew it was the Lord.

Jesus went and took the bread and gave it to them and gave them all fish as well. This is already the third time that Jesus showed himself to his disciples after his resurrection from the dead.

Acts 1:1-5 - My dear Theophilus, In my first book (the third Gospel) I (Luke) gave you some account of all that Jesus began to do and teach until the time of his ascension. Before he ascended he gave his instructions, through the Holy Spirit, to the special messengers of his choice. For after his suffering he showed himself alive to them in many convincing ways, and appeared to them repeatedly over a period of forty days talking with them about the affairs of the kingdom of God.

Jesus' parting words before his ascension

On one occasion, while he was eating a meal with them, he emphasised that they were not to leave Jerusalem, but to wait for the Father's promise.

"You have already heard me speak about this," he said, "for John used to baptise with water, but before many days are passed you will be baptised with the Holy Spirit."

1 Corinthians 15:3-8 - Together with Jesus' instructions to Paul for the Lord's Supper, this is one of the few other direct references to the Gospel story in the rest of the New Testament:

For I (Paul) passed on to you Corinthians first of all the message I had myself received - that Christ died for our sins, as the scriptures said he would; that he was buried and rose again on the third day, again as the scriptures foretold. He was seen by Cephas (the apostle Simon Peter), then by the twelve (or eleven remaining apostles), and subsequently he was seen simultaneously by over five hundred Christians, of whom the majority are still alive, though some have since died. He was then seen by James (brother of Jesus and later head of the church in Jerusalem), then by all the messengers. And last of all, as if to one born abnormally late, he appeared to me!

Part 38 - HIS COMMISSION TO PREACH THE GOSPEL TO THE WORLD

(Matthew 28:18-20; Mark 16:15-18; Luke 24:45-50; John 21:15-23; Acts 1:6-8)

Matthew 28:18-20 - But Jesus (after he met the eleven in Galilee) came and spoke these words to them, "All power in Heaven and on earth has been given to me. You, then, are to go and make disciples of all the nations and baptise them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. Teach them to observe all that I have commanded you and, remember, I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

Mark 16:15-18 - Then (after his appearances to Mary of Magdala, the two disciples on the Emmaus Road, and the eleven apostles, and continuing the ancient addition to Mark ....) he said to them, "You must go out to the whole world and proclaim the Gospel to every creature. He who believes it and is baptised will be saved, but he who disbelieves it will be condemned. These signs will follow those who do believe: they will drive out evil spirits in my name; they will speak with new tongues; they will pick up snakes, and if they drink anything poisonous it will do them no harm; they will lay their hands upon the sick and they will recover."

Luke 24:45-50 - Then (after Jesus had eaten with the disciples, and showed them how his death and resurrection had fulfilled prophecy) he opened their minds so that they could understand the scriptures, and added, "That is how it was written, and that is why it was inevitable that Christ should suffer, and rise from the dead on the third day. So must the change of heart which leads to the forgiveness of sins be proclaimed in his name to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

"You are eye-witnesses of these things. Now I hand over to you the command of my Father. Stay in the city (of Jerusalem), then, until you are clothed with power from on high."

Then he led them outside as far as Bethany, where he blessed them with uplifted hands.

John 21:15-23 - When they had finished breakfast (of fish at the lake-side) Jesus said to Simon Peter, "Simon, son of John, do you love me more than these others?"

"Yes, Lord," he replied, "you know that I am your friend."

"Then feed my lambs," returned Jesus. Then he said for the second time, "Simon, son of John, do you love me?"

"Yes, Lord," returned Peter. "You know that I am your friend."

"Then care for my sheep," replied Jesus. Then for the third time, Jesus spoke to him and said, "Simon, son of John, are you my friend?"

Peter was deeply hurt because Jesus' third question to him was "Are you my friend?", and he said, "Lord, you know everything. You know that I am your friend!"

"Then feed my sheep," Jesus said to him. "I tell you truly, Peter, that when you were younger, you used to dress yourself and go where you liked, but when you are an old man, you are going to stretch out your hands and someone else will dress you and take you where you do not want to go." (He said this to show the kind of death - by crucifixion - by which Peter was going to honour God.)

Then Jesus said to him, "You must follow me."

Then Peter turned round and noticed the disciple whom Jesus loved (the apostle John) following behind them. (He was the one who had his head on Jesus' shoulder at supper and had asked, "Lord, who is the one who is going to betray you?") So he said, "Yes, Lord, but what about him?"

"If it is my wish," returned Jesus, "for him to stay until I come, is that your business, Peter? You must follow me."

This gave rise to the saying among the brothers that this disciple (John) would not die. Yet, of course, Jesus did not say, "He will not die,", but simply, "If it is my wish for him to stay until I come, is that your business?"

Acts 1:6-8 - This (the disciples waiting in Jerusalem after Jesus' death and resurrection as he commanded, until the coming of the "power from on high" - the promised baptism of the Holy Spirit) naturally brought them all together, and they asked him, "Lord, is this the time when you are going to restore the kingdom to Israel?"

To this he replied, "You cannot know times and dates which have been fixed by the Father's sole authority. But you are to be given power when the Holy Spirit has come to you. You will be witnesses to me, not only in Jerusalem, not only throughout Judea, not only in Samaria, but to the very ends of the earth!"

Map - Locations where the Original Apostles Preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ According to Various Ancient Traditions

Paul the Apostle - Paul figures prominently in the Acts of the Apostles and his letters are a large part of the Letters of the New Testament. He also played a vital role in taking the Gospel to Gentiles and in developing a theology of Christianity proving it be a new religion and not a Jewish cult. Over the centuries, he has therefore been described by some commentators as the "inventor" of Christianity. But to place Paul into perspective within the Christian story, as important, as brilliant, as brave, as loyal to Christ as he was, a number of points should be borne in mind:

(1) It was Jesus during his ministry on earth, who preached the Gospel in Judea and beyond - and not only to Jews (for example Matthew 8:5-13 and 15:21-28, Luke 17:11-19);

(2) Of the apostles, it was Peter who first brought Gentiles into the Christian fold (Acts 10), and other Jews who converted many Gentiles in Syrian Antioch (Acts 11:19) before Paul's arrival there;

(3) The church in Rome was already established by the time Paul wrote his letter to the Romans;

Part 39 - JESUS ASCENDS TO HEAVEN

Mark 16:19-20 - After these words to them (the commission to preach the Gospel to the world, Mark's Gospel concludes .....), the Lord Jesus was taken up into Heaven and was enthroned at the right hand of God. They went out and preached everywhere. The Lord worked with them, confirming their message by the signs that followed.

Luke 24:51-53 - While he was in the act of blessing them he was parted from them and was carried up to Heaven. They worshipped him, and turned back to Jerusalem with great joy, and spent their days in the Temple, praising and blessing God (while awaiting baptism in the Holy Spirit).

Acts 1:9-11 - When he had said these words (the commission to preach the Gospel after the disciples had received the Holy Spirit) he was lifted up before their eyes till a cloud hid him from their sight. While they were still gazing up into the sky as he went, suddenly two men dressed in white stood beside them and said, "Men of Galilee, why are you standing here looking up into the sky? This very Jesus who has been taken up from you into Heaven will come back in just the same way as you have seen him go."

Part 40 - EPILOGUE TO THE GOSPELS

John 21:24-25 - Now it is this same disciple (the apostle John) who is hereby giving his testimony to these things and has written them down. We know that his witness is reliable. Of course, there are many other things which Jesus did, and I suppose that if each one were written down in detail, there would not be room in the whole world for all the books that would have to be written.

In a short time, the disciples, totally demoralised by the death of Jesus are transformed. They are soon taking the Gospel of Jesus Christ fearlessly to much of the known world and often in the face of every form of opposition, persecution, and soon, brutality, torture and death.

The Acts of the Apostles and the Letters of the New Testament reveal part of this early story that continues to the present day.

Lists of the 12 Apostles occur in Mark 3:16-19; Luke 6:13-16; Matthew 10:2-4 and Acts 1:13. Comparing the four lists, we note that there appear to have been three groups of four disciples each. Peter, Philip, and James the son of Alphaeus seem to have been the leaders of these groups (see rows 1, 5 and 9).

NON-CHRISTIANS PROVE JESUS' RESURRECTION

Posted by FactReal on April 13, 2009

ANCIENT NON-CHRISTIAN SOURCES PROVIDE THE FACTS

About 18 different ancient non-Christian writers present more than 100 facts about the birth of Christ, His life, teachings, miracles, crucifixion, resurrection and ascension:

Josephus, Tacitus, Thallus, Phlegon, Pliny the Younger, Suetonius, Emperor Trajan, Emperor Hadrian, the Talmud, Lucian, Mara bar Serapion, etc.

Next are the historical facts of Jesus' resurrection.

Crowning With Thorns by Caravaggio

FACT 1. JESUS DIED DUE TO THE RIGORS OF CRUCIFIXION

Jesus was crucified circa A.D. 30. It was reported by several non-Christian writings:

Ancient sources:

- Josephus, Jewish historian, (Antiquities. 18.3, 18.64), 1st century
- Tacitus (Annals 15.44), circa A.D. 115
- Lucian de Samosata, Greek satirist, (The Death of Peregrine, 11-13), circa mid-2nd century
- Mara bar Serapion (Letter to his son – currently at British Museum), late 1st-3rd century
- Talmud (Sanhedrin 43a), late 2nd century

Crucifixion was a common form of Roman execution

Ancient sources:

- Josephus (Jewish Wars, 5.451)
- M. Tullius Cicero (Against Verres 2.5.64)
- Cornelius Tacitus (The Annals 15.44)

Crucifixion was a torturous death

The crucified died of

- Exhaustion
- Asphyxia
- Dehydration
- Congestive heart failure

Early testimony support

The Crucifixion by Giotto

FACT 2. JESUS WAS BURIED IN A KNOWN, ACCESSIBLE TOMB

▪ Jewish and Roman leaders and people, who witnessed the crucifixion, knew where the tomb was.
Had the Gospels been false on this matter they would not have been able to withstand the swift correction and ridicule from the Jews.

FACT 3. EMPTY TOMB

Jesus' tomb was discovered to be empty just a few days later
Enemy and critics attested that the tomb was empty.

Ancient sources:
- Justin Martyr (Trypho 108)
- Tertullian (De Spectaculis 30)

No corpse produced
There is no record from Jewish, Roman, critics and other writings to attest that a body was in the tomb. The enemies of Jesus had every reason to produce a body since it would have benefited them. If any corpse had still been in the tomb, it would have been impossible for Christianity to get off the ground in Jerusalem due to the importance of the Resurrection.

Women testimony of the empty tomb
A woman's testimony was not highly regarded in those days in Roman and Jewish cultures.

Ancient sources:
- Josephus (Antiquities 4.8.15)
- Talmud (Sotah 19a); Talmud (Rosh Hashannah 1.8); Talmud (Kiddushin 82b)
- Origen (Contra Celsum 2:59; 3:55)
- Gaius Suetonius, Roman historian, (The Twelve Caesars, Augustus 44) circa A.D. 115
- Luke 24:11*

Embarrassing admissions support historical claims
Even the disciples (who were Jews) thought it was nonsense what the women were saying. (Luke 24:11)
It would have been damaging to the disciples' claim to invent the story and place women as the primary witnesses. Thus, the empty tomb account appears to be historically credible in light of the principle of embarrassment.

FACT 4. JESUS' DISCIPLES EXPERIENCED THE RISEN JESUS

The disciples preached that Jesus was raised, that the tomb was empty, and that Jesus ascended.

They preached a seen and living Jesus with whom they partook food; they preached the Ascension with equal vigor.

Resurrection of Christ by Ruben

Ancient sources:

- Clement, Bishop of Rome, (First Clement 42:3), A.D. 95
- Polycarp, Bishop of Smyrna, (Letter to the Philippians 9:2), A.D. 101
- Clement, bishop of Rome, is reputed to have personally known the disciples, according to two early church fathers, Irenaeus and Tertullian, circa 30-100
- Polycarp was, according to Irenaeus, taught by the apostles and knew many who had seen Christ, circa 69-155

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

▪ Polycarp mentions the resurrection of Jesus 5 times in his letter to the church in Philippi. (Letter to the Philippians 9:2)

Verbal tradition

The ancients relied on verbal tradition to teach others. Later on they were copied intro writings which were later compiled into the New Testament. Verbal tradition before the New Testament pointed to Jesus' original disciples saying that the risen Jesus had appeared to them.

Ancient sources:

▪ Tertullian, African church father (The Prescription Against Heretics, 32)
▪ Irenaeus, early church father (Against Heresies, 3.3.3), circa 185
▪ Irenaeus (Letter To Florinus) (preserved by 4th-century church historian, Eusebius)
▪ Tertullian (Prescription Against Heretics, 32)

Written tradition

We have written tradition that shows the disciples saying that Jesus had appeared to them after he rose from the dead.

Ancient sources:

▪ The 4 Gospels attest to the resurrection of Jesus and report the disciples' claims that Jesus rose from the dead. The Gospels, all written within 70 years of the crucifixion, testify that Christ rose again.*
▪ Former church persecutor, Paul, claims to have known the disciples firsthand. He wrote the disciples claimed Jesus rose (1 Corinthians 15:9-11, Galatians 2:1-10).*
▪ The creed in 1 Corinthians 15 originated within 5 years of Jesus' crucifixion. This creed says that Christ died for our sins, was buried, and was raised on the third day and that he appeared to the disciples.*

FACT 5. THE DISCIPLES' TRANSFORMATION

After Jesus' resurrection, the disciples receive strength and conviction in the face of martyrdom

The disciples were transformed from doubters who were afraid to identify with Jesus, to bold proclaimers of his death and resurrection, even being willing to die for this belief.

Conversion of Saul of Tarsus after seeing the risen Jesus
Paul, the great persecutor of Christianity, was converted by the resurrection (Acts 9:3-9, 17, 22; 1 Cor. 15:8, 9:1; Gal. 1:22-23).
Paul believed to have experienced a personal appearance of the risen Jesus.

* The bible is used here as reference to the Christian stories. It is important to know that the bible contains writings within 70 years of Jesus. Other historic writings have a larger span than the bible between the time the original was written and the earliest copy. For example, Plato's Tetralogies have 1,200 years interval between original and earliest copy. Aristotle's works have 1400 years span. Homer's Iliad, 500 years. The bible has more copies in existence of the ancient writings than any other ancient book that we regard as historic: Homer (Iliad), Plato (Tetralogies), Aristotle, Caesar (The Gallic Wars). Copyist errors are minimal. The New Testament has 77 separate books and letters of ancient times which were later compiled into the bible. So, they serve as early testimonies from Christians.

The Ascension of Jesus the Messiah

Wikipedia: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ascension_of_Jesus

Four Reasons Jesus' Ascension Matters

For Luke, the ascension was a significant moment in the disciples' personal transformation and the advance of the gospel through the church. He emphasized the importance of the ascension by ending his Gospel with this event and beginning his second volume, Acts, with it.

The ascension had a profound impact on the disciples. Up to the moment that Jesus ascended to heaven, the disciples seemed to be puzzled, trying to figure it all out. But after the ascension, they worshiped Him. They traveled back to Jerusalem with great joy. They maintained a regular presence in the temple—worshiping God.

At first, the disciples' reaction to Jesus' ascension may catch us off guard. Jesus had just "left them." And yet they were happy—filled with joy. Why this reaction? After all, when Jesus told them at the end of John 13 that He would soon leave them, they were deeply disturbed.

Thus, He encouraged them by teaching them about the ministry of the Holy Spirit (John 14–17). He kept them from the brink of utter despair by saying, "You are not losing Me, but I am going to be with you in a different way through My Spirit."

The ascension of Jesus produced joy because the disciples realized what amazing benefits would come to them when Jesus returned to the Father. When Jesus ascended, all the promises regarding the Spirit's ministry to the disciples were about to be fulfilled. The disciples accepted His ascension, for they had accepted Jesus' word about the promised One to come. Their doubts and fears were gone. They were convinced of who He was. They knew that He died to forgive them of their sins. They knew He was alive from the dead. In His resurrection, they had hope in victory over death.

They trusted Him. For these reasons, Jesus' departure gave the disciples joy.

The benefits of the ascension are many:

- When Jesus ascended and sat down at the Father's right hand, the Father verified the accomplishment of the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus and confirmed that the final payment for sin had been made (Heb. 10:11-14).
- When Jesus ascended, the intercessory work of Jesus on behalf of His people began. In this ministry, we are assured that we will always have access to the Father forever (1 John 2:1).
- When Jesus ascended, His eternal reign over all enemies began. As Peter wrote, "Now that He has gone into heaven, He is at God's right hand with angels, authorities, and powers subject to Him" (1 Pet. 3:22).
- Finally, when Jesus ascended, the church was empowered to accomplish its mission. In Ephesians 1:22-23, writing about Jesus' resurrection and ascension, Paul said, "[God the Father] put everything under His feet and appointed Him as head over everything for the church, which is His body, the fullness of the One who fills all things in every way."

Jesus Christ is the King of the universe, and Satan can do nothing about it. What Satan can do is tempt us to forget about Jesus as King. He uses a thousand tricks to do it, but he is after one thing—to eclipse our present awareness of who Jesus is and where He is. In the Book of Acts, Stephen, right before being stoned, looked up into heaven and saw Jesus standing at the right hand of the Father. The New Testament points us to this picture so that we will have a settled confidence that Jesus our Savior is the King over all things.

Joy, hope, and mission are three consistent responses of the disciples to Christ's resurrection and ascension. In light of these two great events, we see the disciples transformed and mobilized to follow Jesus on His mission.

We go forward with hope and joy because the King of the universe promises that He will never leave or forsake us. If we want to experience greater transformation and the joy of following Jesus on mission, we should build our confidence on the finished and sufficient work of Jesus Christ. The resurrection and ascension testify to the completion and perfection of His work.

What the Earliest Non-Biblical Authors (Apostolic Fathers) Say About Jesus

What the Earliest Non-Biblical Authors Say About Jesus

www.ColdCaseChristianity.com

The Old Testament Prophets Predicted Jesus as the Messiah
Ignatius said the prophets predicted and waited for Jesus who was in the line of King David. Clement also said the prophets predicted the life and ministry of Jesus.

Jesus Was Born Miraculously
Ignatius said Jesus was (and is) the "Son of God." He was conceived by the Holy Spirit and a star announced His birth. Jesus came forth from God the Father and was born of the Virgin Mary.

Jesus Had a Powerful Earthly Ministry
Ignatius said Jesus was baptized by John the Baptist. He was the "perfect" man and manifested the will and knowledge of God the Father. He taught and had a "ministry" on earth. He was the source of wisdom and taught many commandments, speaking the words of God. Ointment was poured on Jesus's head. Polycarp also said Jesus was sinless. According to Polycarp, Jesus taught commandments and preached the Sermon on the Mount. Clement also said Jesus provided His disciples with important instruction. According to Clement, Jesus taught principles as described by Mark and Luke. He was humble and unassuming.

Jesus Suffered and Died on a Cross
Ignatius said Jesus was unjustly treated and condemned by men. He suffered and was crucified, dying on the cross. Jesus allowed this to happen as a sacrifice and offering to God the Father. This all took place under the government of Pontius Pilate, when Herod the Tetrarch was king. Polycarp also said Jesus suffered and died on a cross and Jesus died for our sins. In addition, Clement said Jesus was whipped and suffered and died for our salvation. According to Clement, Jesus died as a payment for our sin.

Jesus Rose from the Grave
Ignatius said Jesus was resurrected and had a physical resurrection body. He appeared to Peter and the others after the resurrection. He encouraged the disciples to touch Him after the resurrection and ate with the disciples as well. The disciples were convinced by the resurrection appearances. The disciples were fearless after seeing the risen Christ. Polycarp also said Jesus was raised from the dead, and His resurrection assures we will also be raised.

Jesus Demonstrated His Deity in the Resurrection
Ignatius said Jesus returned to God the Father. Jesus was (and is) the manifestation of God the Father and is united to Him. Jesus is our only Master and the Son of God. He is the "Door," the "Bread of Life," and the "Eternal Word." Jesus is our High Priest, "Lord" and "God." He is "our Savior" and the way to "true life." Polycarp also said Jesus ascended to heaven and is seated at God's right hand. According to Polycarp, all things are subject to Jesus and He will judge the living and the dead. Jesus is our "Savior" and "Lord." In addition, Clement said Jesus was resurrected from the dead and is alive and reigning with God. His resurrection makes our resurrection certain. According to Clement, Jesus is "Lord" and the Son of God. He possesses eternal glory and majesty. All creation belongs to Him. Jesus is our "refuge" and our "High Priest." He is our "defender" and "helper."

Jesus Has the Power to Save Us
Ignatius said Jesus now lives in us and we live forever as a result of our faith in Christ. He has the power to transform us and His sacrifice glorifies us. Faith in Christ's work on the cross saves us, and this salvation and forgiveness are gifts of grace from God. Polycarp also said Jesus' death on the cross and our faith in Jesus's work on the cross saves us. According to Polycarp, we are saved by grace. In addition, Clement said we are saved by the "grace" of God through faith in Jesus.

The Eight Periods of Jesus' Life

The Eight Periods of Jesus' Life [Source: Halley's Bible Handbook]

For convenience' sake, the life of Jesus can be divided into eight periods, as follows:

		Approx. Duration	Location(s)
(1)	Birth and Youth	30 years	Bethlehem, Egypt, Nazareth
(2)	Preparation for Ministry		Jordan River and wilderness
(3)	Early Ministry in Judea	8 months	Judea, Samaria
(4)	Ministry in Galilee	2 years	Galilee
(5)	Later Ministry in Judea	1 month	Perea and Judea
(6)	Ministry in Perea	4 months	Perea and Judea
(7)	The Last Week: Crucifixion and Resurrection	7 days	Judea, Jerusalem
(8)	Appearances after the Resurrection	40 days	Jerusalem, Galilee

All four Gospels give more space to the last week of Jesus' life, His crucifixion, and His resurrection (Period (7)) than to any other period. The chart below shows the difference in the Gospels in the amount of space they devote to some of the other periods.

We will look at each of the eight periods briefly. For a detailed outline ("harmony") of the Gospels, see A Harmony of the Gospels.

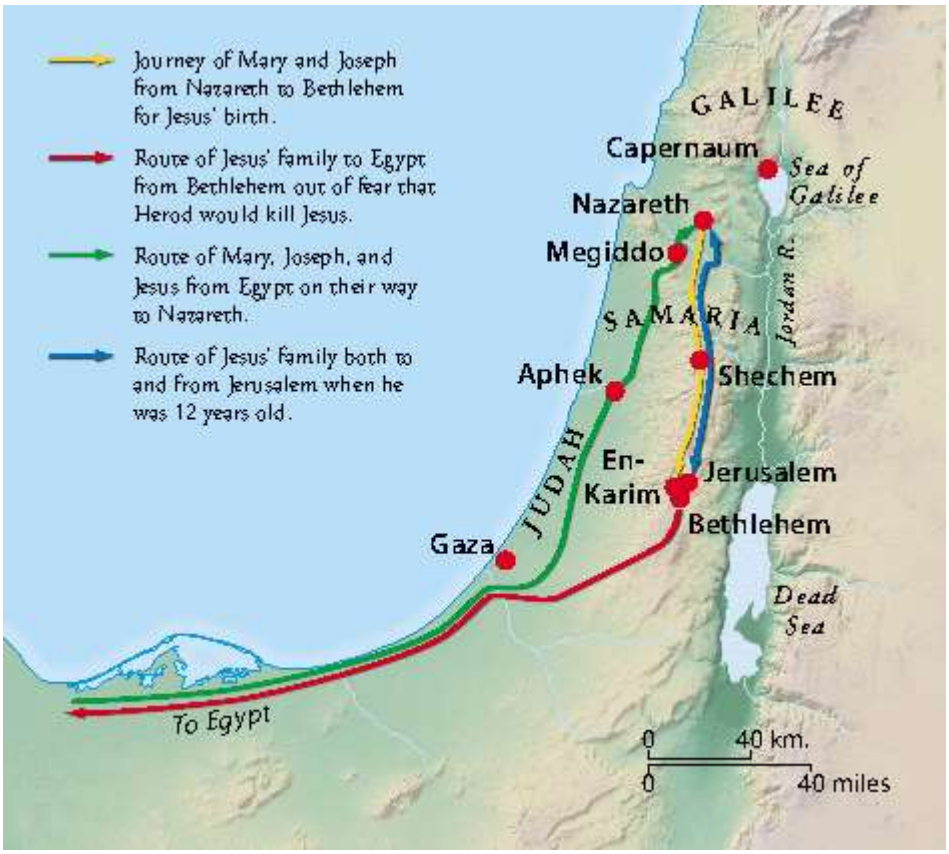
Period (1): Jesus' Birth and Youth (About 30 Years)

- Mt 1-2
- Lk 1-2

Mark and John say nothing about the birth, childhood, and youth of Jesus. Matthew and Luke record different incidents (see under Lk 1:5-80). To harmonize these into exact chronological sequence is not easy. Here are probable, approximate dates:

7 or 6 B.C. 6 months later 3 months later	Announcement to Zechariah Announcement to Mary Mary's visit to Elizabeth Mary's return to Nazareth Announcement to Joseph Birth of John the Baptist	Lk 1:5-25 Lk 1:26-38 Lk 1:39-56 Lk 1:56 Mt 1:18-24 Lk 1:57-80
6 or 5 B.C. 8 days later 32 days later	Birth of Jesus Announcement to shepherds Jesus' circumcision Jesus' presentation	Mt 1:25; Lk 2:1-7 Lk 2:8-20 Lk 2:21 Lk 2:22-38

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]



4 B.C.	Visit of the Wise Men Flight to Egypt The children of Bethlehem killed	Mt 2:1-12 Mt 2:13-15 Mt 2:16-18
3 B.C.	Return to Nazareth	Mt 2:19-23; Lk 2:39

On What Date Was Jesus Born?

Jesus' birthday is now celebrated on December 25, but there is nothing in the Bible to support that particular date. It first appears as the date of Jesus' birthday in the 4th century, in the Western church. In the Eastern church the date is January 6, which is celebrated as Epiphany in the Western church. (On the division of the church into a Western church and an Eastern church, see The Split Between East and West.)

December 25 as the date to celebrate the birth of Jesus goes back to at least the 4th century, although the reasons for the choice of this date are obscure. In some countries (such as Britain), Christmas replaced an existing, pre-Christian festival.

Period (2): Preparation for Ministry

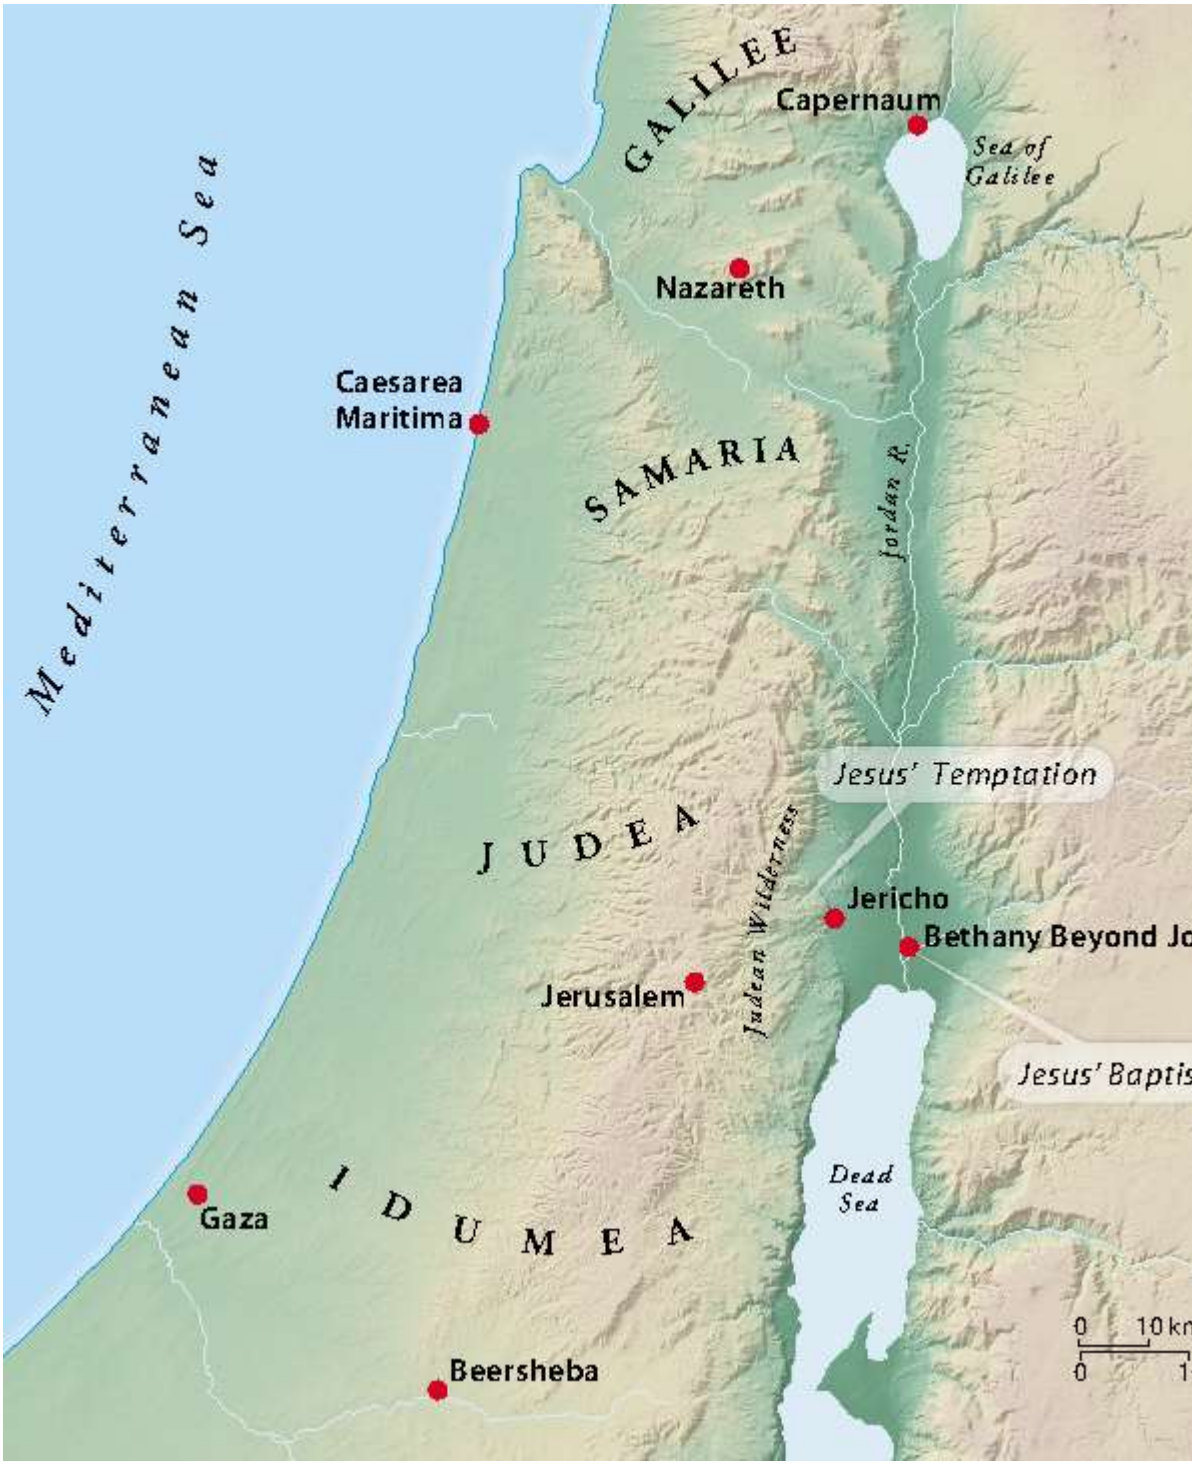
- Mt 3:1-4:11
- Mk 1:1-13
- Lk 3:1-4:13
- Jn 1:6-42

This is a brief but important period in Jesus' life. John the Baptist was the one who prepared the way for the expected Messiah, as foretold by the prophet Isaiah. He set the stage for Jesus' ministry by preaching the need for repentance in the face of the coming of the kingdom of God. He helped focus the expectation of the nation so that when Jesus began His ministry, the people were prepared.



Jesus insisted on being baptized by John — He gave His endorsement to John's ministry, and God in turn gave Jesus His endorsement: "This is my Son, whom I love; with him I am well pleased" (Mt 3:17).

Jesus then went into the wilderness for 40 days and was tempted by Satan three times — and each time Jesus appealed to God's Word: "It is written" (Mt 4:4,6,10; Lk 4:4,8,10).

John's Gospel does not mention Jesus' baptism and temptation.

Period (3): Jesus' Early Ministry in Judea (About 8 Months)

This period, which probably lasted about eight months, is recorded only in the gospel of John (2:1-4:42). The period in Judea is preceded by a miracle in Cana, in Galilee, where Jesus turned water into wine, and it concludes with Jesus' visit with

Period (4): Jesus' Ministry in Galilee (About 2 Years)

- Mt 4:12-19:1
- Mk 1:14-10:1
- Lk 4:14-9:51
- Jn 4:43-7:1

The Galilean ministry started in December, four months before the harvest (Jn 4:35,43).

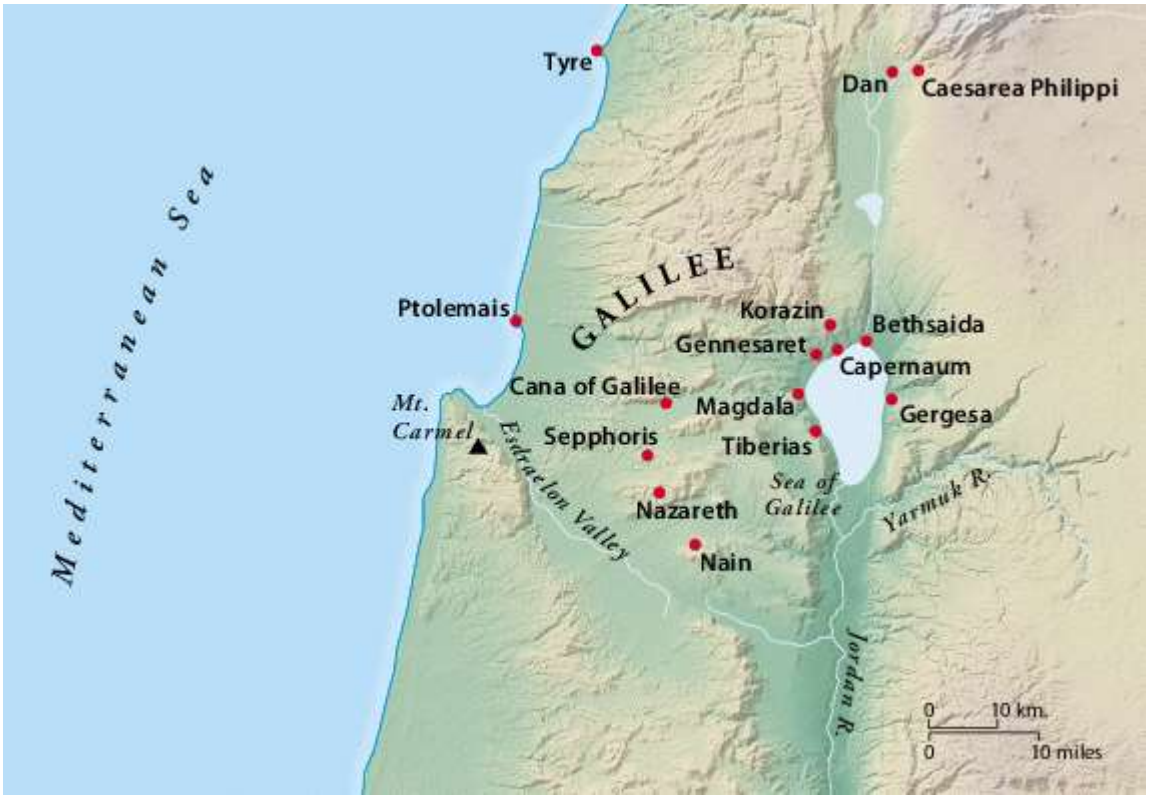
Matthew, Mark, and Luke (the so-called Synoptic Gospels, see The Four Gospels) generally seem to follow a chronological order in presenting this period, though not in every detail; they differ on the order of many of the incidents. Bible scholars differ in their opinion as to which of the three is more strictly chronological. Since the gospel writers seem to have been guided by other considerations than chronology in grouping their material, and since indications of time and place are largely ignored, it is not possible to arrive at an exact chronological arrangement of all of the material that is recorded.

There are, however, some markers — events and periods in the Galilean ministry that have a clear indication of time and around which others may be grouped.



- The 5000 were fed at Passover time (Jn 6:4). John the Baptist was beheaded just before that (Mt 14:12-13). At the same time, the Twelve returned from their preaching tour (Lk 9:10).
- •All three writers place the Transfiguration shortly before the final departure from Galilee.
- The final departure from Galilee was either just before the Feast of Tabernacles (October) or the Feast of Dedication (December) (Lk 9:51; Jn 7:1-10; 10:22) — most likely the latter, for the earlier was in secret (Jn 7:10), the latter public (Lk 10:1).

This makes a period of five or eight months between the feeding of the 5000 and the Transfiguration; Jesus spent part of this period in the regions north of Galilee, of which not much is told.

The main part of the story of the Galilean ministry is concerned with the 16 months preceding the feeding of the 5000, a period of intense activity and great popularity.

Jesus in Galilee

Period (5): Jesus' Later Ministry in Judea (About 1 Month)

- Lk 10:1-13:21
- Jn 7:2-10:39

This period is marked by opposition. The authorities try to arrest Jesus (Jn 7:32-52) and even excommunicate a man born blind, who was healed by Jesus and refused (in a delightful interchange!) to side with the religious authorities against Jesus (Jn 9:1-34).

Luke records several parables, including the parable of the Good Samaritan (Lk 10:25-27), but also a series of woes and warnings (Lk 11:37-12:59). It is clear that after the initial period of popularity, the tide has turned and the road to the Cross is becoming inevitable.

Period (6): Jesus' Ministry in Perea (About 4 Months)

- Mt 19-20
- Mk 10
- Lk 13:22-19:28
- Jn 10:40-11:57

Conflict and controversy continue. But it is especially during this period that Jesus' concern and care for people — shown in His teaching, healings, and the raising of Lazarus (Jn 11:17-44) — stand out against the ever-darkening background of the authorities' hatred for Him.

Period (7): Jesus' Last Week

In all four Gospels, the last week of Jesus' life is described at length. It occupies about one-third of Matthew, one-third of Mark, one-fourth of Luke, and half of John. John devotes seven chapters, about a third of his book, to the day of the crucifixion (the Jewish day begins at sunset and ends at the following sunset).

Since the Gospels are based on eyewitness reports, the details in the four Gospels differ, and it is not always easy to get a clear picture of the sequence of events. This is especially true of the morning of the Resurrection. Below are outlines of

1. 1.The events of the last week
2. 2.Jesus' movements on the last night
3. 3.The Crucifixion
4. 4.The Resurrection

It is important to remember that these outlines must of necessity be somewhat tentative since we do not have enough information to be absolutely certain about every detail.

The Order of Events on the Resurrection Morning

It is not easy to harmonize the fragmentary records of the four Gospels about the resurrection of Jesus into a connected, consecutive story. We are not told all the incidents in the precise order of their occurrence.

We must remember that different groups of disciples, who were staying in various locations in and around the city, went to the tomb, and that they were not expecting Jesus to rise (see The Disciples' Slowness to Believe That Jesus Was Risen); they went to the tomb to complete the embalming of His body for permanent burial.

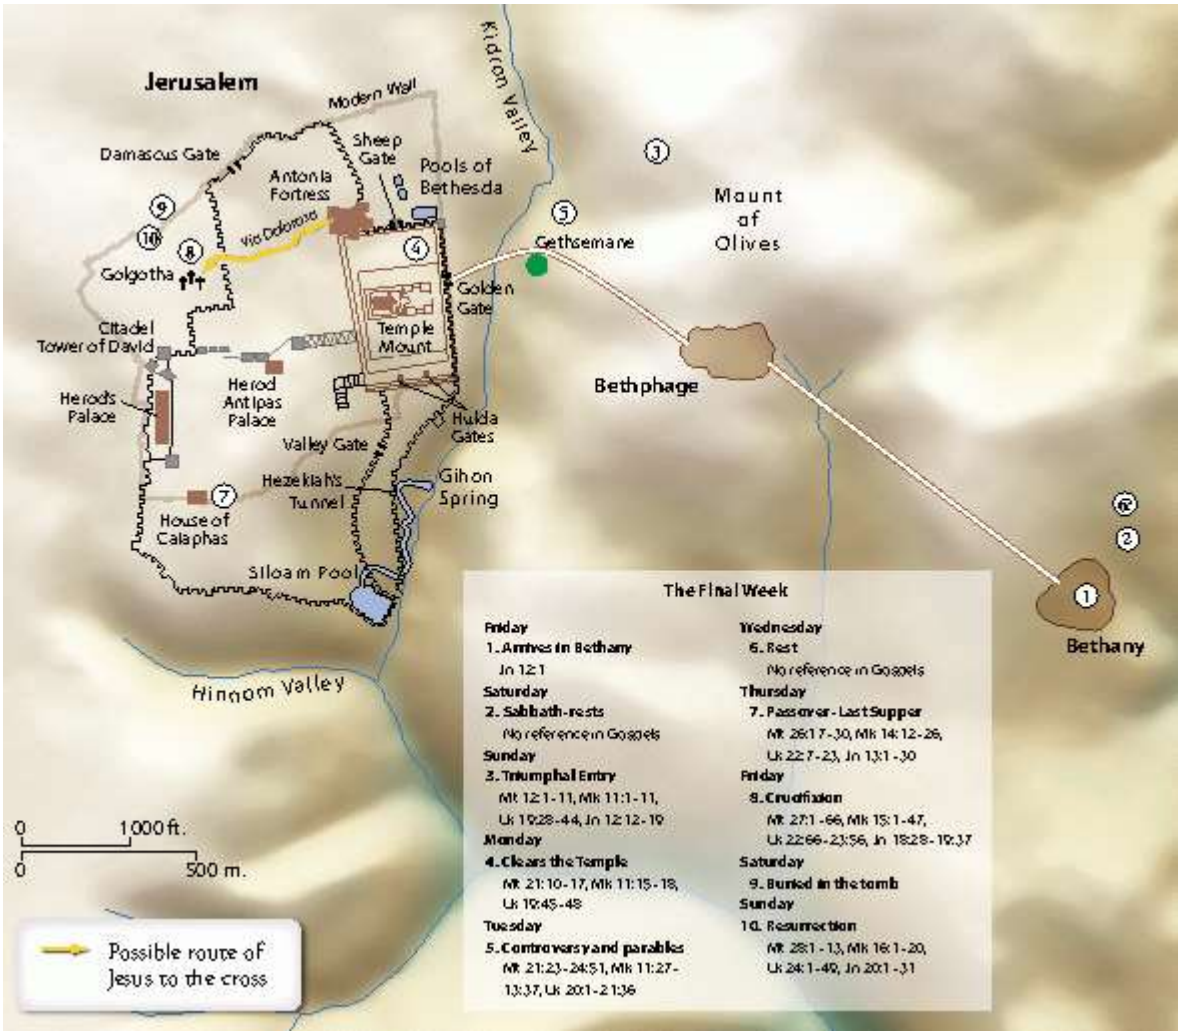
The first sight of the empty tomb, and the announcement of the angel that Jesus had risen, threw them into wild excitement. They ran to tell the others, hurrying back and forth in alternating joy, fear, anxiety, wonder, and bewilderment.

Many things happened that are not recorded. Of what is recorded, one writer gives in a single sentence what another describes in detail. Some, in a general statement, cover various incidents. No one gives a full account. There are several ways in which the accounts may be harmonized. The following is generally, though tentatively, accepted.

1. 1. At the first break of dawn, two or more groups of women, from the places where they were staying in Jerusalem or Bethany, probably a mile or two distant, start groping their way toward the tomb.
2. 2. It is probably about this time that Jesus is emerging from the tomb, accompanied by angels who roll away the stone and neatly fold the shroud.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

3. 3. The guards, meantime, frightened and dazed, flee to tell the priests who had placed them there.
4. About sunrise, as the women approach the tomb, Mary Magdalene — ahead of her group, seeing the tomb empty, but not seeing the angel nor hearing his announcement that Jesus has risen (Jn 20:13,15) — turns and runs to tell Peter and John.
5. 5. The other women come closer, see and hear the angels, and hurry away by another route to tell the main group of disciples.
6. 6. By this time, Peter and John reach the tomb and go in. They see the empty shroud and leave, John believing, Peter wondering.
7. 7. Mary Magdalene, meantime, following hard after Peter and John, returns to the tomb and remains, alone, weeping. Then she sees the angels, and Jesus Himself appears to her.
8. 8. Shortly thereafter, Jesus appears to the other women as they are on their way to tell the disciples, or as, having told the disciples, they are returning to the tomb.



This all happened in probably less than an hour's time.

Period (8): Jesus' Appearances After His Resurrection

Jesus appeared on a number of occasions to one or more of His followers and disciples after His resurrection. The most detailed description is of Jesus' appearance to the disciples on the shore of the Sea of Galilee (John 21:1-14), where Jesus, the Great Physician, heals the wound left in Peter's soul by his denial of Jesus before His crucifixion.

1. To Mary Magdalene (Mark 16:9-10), early morning
2. To the other women (Matthew 28:9-10), early morning
3. To two disciples on the way to Emmaus (Mark 16:12-13; Luke 24:13-32)
4. To Peter Luke 24:34), sometime that day
5. To the Eleven (Mark 16:14; Luke 24:36-43; John 20:19-23) that night; Thomas absent
6. To the Eleven (John 20:26-31) a week later; Thomas present
7. To the Seven at the Sea of Galilee (John 21)
8. To Eleven (and 500?) in Galilee (Matthew 28:16-20)
9. To James (1Corinthians 15:7). Time and place unknown
10. Final appearance and Ascension (Mark 16:19; Luke 24:44-53; Ac 1:3)
11. Later, Jesus made a special appearance to Paul (Acts 9:3-5)

In 1Corinthians 15:5-8, some 27 years after the Resurrection, Paul lists the appearances thus: "And . . . he appeared to Peter, and then to the Twelve. After that, he appeared to more than five hundred of the brothers at the same time, most of whom are still living, though some have fallen asleep. Then he appeared to James, then to all the apostles, and last of all he appeared to me also."

The statement in Ac 1:3, "He showed himself to these men and gave many convincing proofs that he was alive. He appeared to them over a period of forty days and spoke about the kingdom of God," along with similar statements in Ac 10:41 and 13:31, implies the possibility that Jesus made many appearances besides those recorded, and that His post-resurrection ministry may have been much more extensive than we know.

Was Jesus the Son of God?

This is the most important question for the Christian faith. Jesus undoubtedly was a great teacher and a great example, but if that was all He was, He can't do much for us, since we find ourselves again and again unable to live by His teachings and follow His example. The best He can do for us then is make us feel guilty.

But the Bible leaves no doubt that He claimed to be the Son of God and that others knew that He was the Son of God.

Jesus is called the Son of God in all four Gospels:

- Matthew 3:17; 4:3,6; 8:29; 14:33; 16:16; 17:5; 26:63; 27:54
- Mark 1:1,11; 3:11; 5:7; 9:7; 14:61-62
- Luke 1:32,35; 3:22; 4:41; 9:35; 22:70

- John 1:34,49; 3:16,18; 5:25; 9:35; 10:36; 19:7; 20:31

What Jesus Said About Himself

Jesus called Himself the Son of God (John 5:25), thus making Himself equal with God (John 5:18). Three times Jesus categorically said that He was the Son of God (Mark 14:61-62; John 9:35-37; 10:36).

Jesus repeatedly used expressions about Himself that can be true only of God:

- "I am . . . the truth" (John 14:6).
- "I am the way [to God]" (John 14:6).
- "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture" (John 10:9 KJV).
- "No one comes to the Father except through me" (John 14:6).
- "I am the bread of life" (John 6:35).
- "I am . . . the life" (John 11:25; 14:6).
- "I am the resurrection" (John 11:25).
- "Whoever lives and believes in me will never die" (John 11:26).
- I am the Messiah (John 4:25-26).
- "Before Abraham was born, I am!" (John 8:58). This is an amazing statement, beyond the reach of finite conception, eliminating the passage of time, and resolving the past and future into one Eternal Now.
- "Father, glorify me in your presence with the glory I had with you before the world began" (John 17:5). A clear recollection of Jesus' pre-incarnation existence.
- "Anyone who has seen me has seen the Father" (John 14:9).
- "I and the Father are one" (John 10:30).
- "All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me" (Matthew 28:18).
- "I am with you always, to the very end of the age" (Matthew 28:20).
- •Who else could have said such things about himself? Of whom else could we say them?

What the Old Testament Said

- •The Old Testament prophets foretold Jesus' deity:
- "He will be called . . . Mighty God, Everlasting Father" (Isa 9:6).
- "This is the name by which he will be called: The Lord Our Righteousness" (Je 23:6; 33:16).
- "On that day . . . the house of David will be like God" (Zacharias 12:8).

Thus, neither Jesus Himself, nor the Scriptures, leave any possible doubt as to the nature of Jesus' Person. Why not accept the record just as it is? If He was only a good man, He can do nothing for us except set us an example. If He was really God, He can be to us a Savior as well as an example.

Other Statements by Jesus

Other things Jesus said make sense if He is the Son of God — but if He is not, they strike us as the ravings of someone with delusions of grandeur.

- "I am the light of the world" (John 8:12).
- "I am the good shepherd" (John 10:11).
- "You are from below; I am from above. You are of this world; I am not of this world" (John 8:23).
- "Your father Abraham rejoiced at the thought of seeing my day; he saw it and was glad" (John 8:56).
- "Moses . . . wrote about me" (John 5:46).
- "You diligently study the Scriptures because you think that by them you possess eternal life. These are the Scriptures that testify about me" (John 5:39).
- "The Father who sent me has himself testified concerning me" (John 5:37).
- "The very work that the Father has given me to finish, and which I am doing, testifies that the Father has sent me" (John 5:36).
- "If I had not done among them what no one else did, they would not be guilty of sin" (John 15:24).
- "If you do not believe that I am the one I claim to be, you will indeed die in your sins" (John 8:24).
- "Blessed are the eyes that see what you see. For I tell you that many prophets and kings wanted to see what you see but did not see it, and to hear what you hear but did not hear it" (Luke 10:23-24).

Was Jesus born of a virgin?

https://www.bethinking.org/jesus/q-was-jesus-born-of-a-virgin

Excerpt:

The miracle of the virgin birth of Jesus Christ has perplexed many people, and has actually kept them from accepting the truth of Christianity. However, the Bible declares that God decided that his Son would have a miraculous entrance into humanity.

Seven hundred years before the birth of Christ, the prophet Isaiah said,

> 'Therefore the Lord himself will give you a sign: Behold, the virgin will be with child and bear a son, and she will call his name Immanuel' (Isaiah 7:14, NASB).
> 'The angel said to her, "Do not be afraid, Mary; for you have found favor with God. And behold, you will conceive in your womb and bear a son, and you shall name him Jesus."
> 'Mary said to the angel, "How can this be, since I am a virgin?"
> 'The angel answered and said to her, "The Holy Spirit, will come upon you, and the power of the Most High will overshadow you; and for that reason the holy offspring shall be called the Son of God. ... For nothing will be impossible with God"' (Luke 1:26, 27, 30, 31, 34, 35, 37, NASB).

The virgin birth is set down in the Bible as a historical fact. The writers who recorded the story were Matthew – an eyewitness to the events in the life of Jesus – and Luke, the doctor, who presents things in the life of Christ from the viewpoint of his mother, Mary.

The passages in both Matthew and Luke are authentic, with no evidence at all that they were later additions to the text. The doctrine of the virgin birth has been believed by the Church from its beginning.

Ignatius, who lived at the beginning of the second century, wrote to the Ephesians and said, 'For our God, Jesus the Christ, was conceived in the womb by Mary, according to a dispensation, of the seed of David but also of the Holy Ghost.'

There are several reasons why the virgin birth was a necessity. The Bible teaches that the Word who became flesh was with God from the beginning (John 1:1). The fact of the pre-existence of Christ is testified many times in the New Testament (John 8:58, Philippians 2:5–11, Colossians 1:15, 16).

When Jesus came into the world, he was not a newly created individual such as we are, but was rather the eternal Son of God. To be born into this world of the virgin Mary required divine intervention, and this is exactly what the gospels record.

Another reason why Jesus needed to be virgin-born was because of his sinless nature. A basic New Testament teaching is that from the day he was born until the day he died, Jesus was without sin. To be a perfect sacrifice, he must himself be perfect – without sin. Since our race is contaminated with sin, a miraculous entrance into the world would be required, hence the virgin birth.

Moreover, if Jesus had been sired by Joseph, he would not have been able to claim legal rights to the throne of David. According to the prophecy of Jeremiah 22:28–30, there could be no king in Israel who was a descendant of King Jeconiah, and Matthew 1:12 relates that Joseph was from the line of Jeconiah. If Jesus had been fathered by Joseph, he could not rightly inherit the throne of David, since he was a relative of the cursed line.

The virgin birth of Christ is not only an historical fact, but it was also a necessary historical fact when one considers all the data.

The Case for the Virgin Conception

The Essential Nature of the Virgin Conception

The Virgin Conception is an important piece of evidence, fulfilling the Old Testament prophecy initially given by the prophet Isaiah (Isaiah 7:14). It also explains an essential aspect of Jesus's nature, retaining Jesus' sinlessness (2 Corinthians 5:21).

Was the Virgin Conception Borrowed from Prior Mythologies?

The pre-existing mythologies described by critics are not as similar to the "virgin conception" of Jesus as they would like people to believe. It's also unreasonable to presume that Greek, Babylonian, Egyptian or other pagan mythologies related to the birth of God would be embraced as part of a narrative targeted at Jewish believers. Early Christian converts were called to a new life in Christ and repeatedly told that they were merely travelers passing through this mortal (and pagan) world. They were called to live a life that was free of worldly influences and told to reject the foolish philosophies and stories of men. This group, in particular, would be the last to return to pre-existing pagan stories and superstitions.

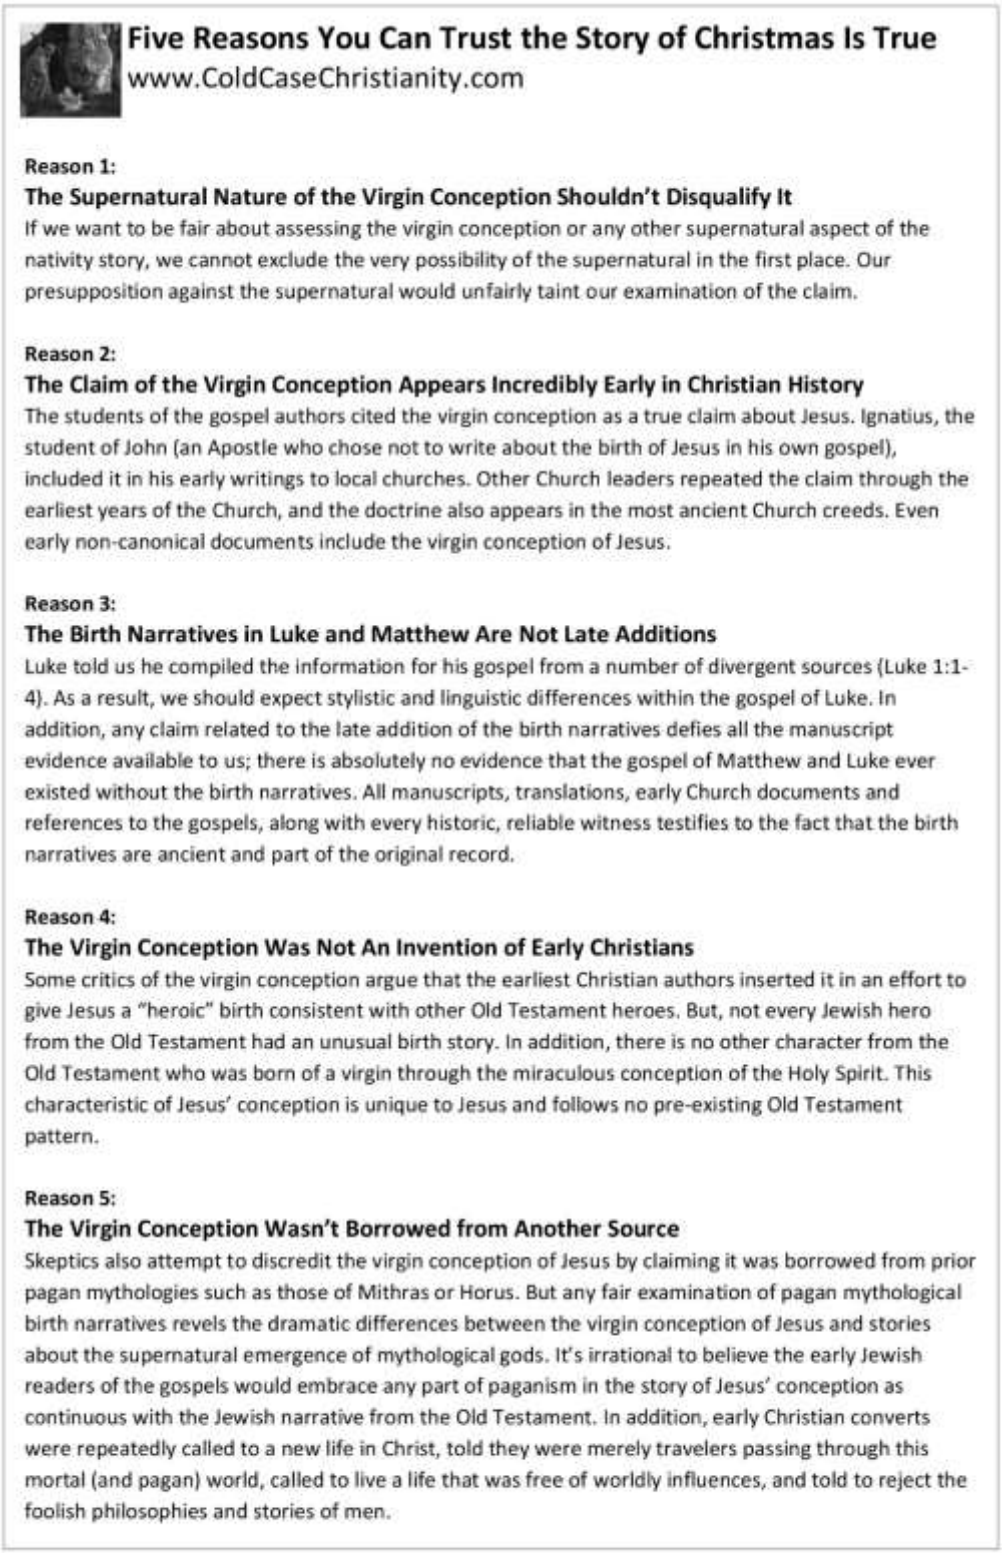
Does the "Unreasonable" Nature of the Virgin Conception Invalidate the Story of Jesus?

We cannot reject the virgin conception on naturalistic grounds without first examining the larger claims of the Christian Worldview. If there is sufficient reason to believe God exists (and created everything from nothing), then the virgin conception is certainly within His power and equally reasonable.

Why Didn't Paul Mention the Virgin Conception?

Paul may not have mentioned the virgin conception simply because it was widely understood or assumed. Paul may also have been silent because it was not the focus or purpose of his letters. If Paul believed that Jesus was born of a human mother and father, we would expect Paul to describe how a normal man, born of human parents, could be God Himself. Paul never does that, and this is consistent with the fact that Paul was aware of the virgin conception

Why Doesn't Mark Say Anything About Jesus' Birth?



The outline of Mark's Gospel is very similar to the outline of Peter's first sermon at Pentecost. Like Peter's sermon in Chapter 2 of the Book of Act's, Mark is focused only on the public life, ministry, death and resurrection of Jesus. At the same time, Mark does not appear to be ignorant of the "virgin conception" (see Mark 6:1-3). This early reference in the Gospel of Mark may expose the fact that Mark was aware of the "virgin conception" and that the first eyewitnesses of Jesus were also aware of Mary's marital status at the time of her conception.

5 Reasons You Can Trust the Story of Christmas (Virgin Birth of Jesus) is True

Five Reasons You Can Trust the Story of Christmas Is True

The Supernatural Nature of the Virgin Conception Shouldn't Disqualify It

If we want to be fair about assessing the virgin conception or any other supernatural aspect of the nativity story, we cannot exclude the very possibility of the supernatural in the first place. Our presupposition against the supernatural would unfairly taint our examination of the claim.

Reason 2:

The Claim of the Virgin Conception Appears Incredibly Early in Christian History

The students of the gospel authors cited the virgin conception as a true claim about Jesus. Ignatius, the student of John (an Apostle who chose not to write about the birth of Jesus in his own gospel), included it in his early writings to local churches. Other Church leaders repeated the claim through the earliest years of the Church, and the doctrine also appears in the most ancient Church creeds. Even early non-canonical documents include the virgin conception of Jesus.

The Birth Narratives in Luke and Matthew Are Not Late Additions

Luke told us he compiled the information for his gospel from a number of divergent sources (Luke 1:1-4). As a result, we should expect stylistic and linguistic differences within the gospel of Luke. In addition, any claim related to the late addition of the birth narratives defies all the manuscript evidence available to us; there is absolutely no evidence that the gospel of Matthew and Luke ever existed without the birth narratives. All manuscripts, translations, early Church documents and references to the gospels, along with every historic, reliable witness testifies to the fact that the birth narratives are ancient and part of the original record.

The Virgin Conception Was Not An Invention of Early Christians

Some critics of the virgin conception argue that the earliest Christian authors inserted it in an effort to give Jesus a "heroic" birth consistent with other Old Testament heroes. But, not every Jewish hero from the Old Testament had an unusual birth story. In addition, there is no other character from the Old Testament who was born of a virgin through the miraculous conception of the Holy Spirit. This characteristic of Jesus' conception is unique to Jesus and follows no pre-existing Old Testament pattern.

Reason 5:

The Virgin Conception Wasn't Borrowed from Another Source

Skeptics also attempt to discredit the virgin conception of Jesus by claiming it was borrowed from prior pagan mythologies such as those of Mithras or Horus. But any fair examination of pagan mythological birth narratives revels the dramatic differences between the virgin conception of Jesus and stories about the supernatural emergence of mythological gods. It's irrational to believe the early Jewish readers of the gospels would embrace any part of paganism in the story of Jesus' conception as continuous with the Jewish narrative from the Old Testament. In addition, early Christian converts were repeatedly called to a new life in Christ, told they were merely travelers passing through this mortal (and pagan) world, called to live a life that was free of worldly influences, and told to reject the foolish philosophies and stories of men.

Why is the Virgin Birth so important?

https://www.gotquestions.org/virgin-birth.html

The doctrine of the virgin birth is crucially important (Isaiah 7:14; Matthew 1:23; Luke 1:27, 34). First, let's look at how Scripture describes the event. In response to Mary's question, "How will this be?" (Luke 1:34), Gabriel says, "The Holy Spirit will come upon you, and the power of the Most High will overshadow you" (Luke 1:35). The angel encourages Joseph to not fear marrying Mary with these words: "What is conceived in her is from the Holy Spirit" (Matthew 1:20). Matthew states that the virgin "was found to be with child through the Holy Spirit" (Matthew 1:18). Galatians 4:4 also teaches the Virgin Birth: "God sent His Son, born of a woman."

From these passages, it is certainly clear that Jesus' birth was the result of the Holy Spirit working within Mary's body. The immaterial (the Spirit) and the material (Mary's womb) were both involved. Mary, of course, could not impregnate herself, and in that sense she was simply a "vessel." Only God could perform the miracle of the Incarnation.

However, denying a physical connection between Mary and Jesus would imply that Jesus was not truly human. Scripture teaches that Jesus was fully human, with a physical body like ours. This He received from Mary. At the same time, Jesus was fully God, with an eternal, sinless nature (John 1:14; 1 Timothy 3:16; Hebrews 2:14-17.)

Jesus was not born in sin; that is, He had no sin nature (Hebrews 7:26). It would seem that the sin nature is passed down from generation to generation through the father (Romans 5:12, 17, 19). The Virgin Birth circumvented the transmission of the sin nature and allowed the eternal God to become a perfect man.

Isn't the virgin birth of Jesus Christ mythological and scientifically impossible?

https://christiananswers.net/q-aiia/virginbirth.html

Excerpt:

Larry King, the CNN talk show host, was once asked who he would most want to interview if he could choose anyone from all of history. He said, "Jesus Christ." The questioner said, "And what would you like to ask Him?" King replied, "I would like to ask Him if He was indeed virgin-born. The answer to that question would define history for me." —from Just Thinking, RZIM, Winter 1998

Critic's Claim #1

The idea of a virgin birth is SCIENTIFICALLY IMPOSSIBLE.

Pregnant woman. Illustration copyrighted.Really? Where have you been for the past 21 years? Ever since in vitro fertilization and embryonic transfer came on the scene in 1978 (not to mention artificial insemination), it is quite possible for a woman who has never experienced sexual intercourse to give birth.

Of course, the Bible makes it clear that it was Almighty God, not some high-paid gynecologist, who worked the details of Jesus' Divine-Human conception, i.e. "And the angel answered and said unto [Mary], The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."
—Luke 1:35, KJV.

Sound miraculous? Of course. But these days, who would deny that miracles occur? And such a 'small' one for the God who created the entire universe!

Critic's Claim #2

The idea of a virgin birth is MYTHOLOGICALLY DERIVED.

Author Patrick Campbell (The Mythical Jesus) and Episcopal Bishop J.S. Spong are two of a number of individuals who have suggested that "…the virgin birth account [is a]…clearly recognized mythological element in our faith tradition whose purpose was not to describe a literal event but to capture the transcendent dimensions of God in the Earthbound words and concepts of first-century human beings."

Both men, however, overlook a simple fact: No respectable Jew would have ever condescended to buy into a Greek/Babylonian mythological base for an account dealing with the birth of his/her Messiah.

Critic's Claim #3

The idea of a virgin birth is HISTORICALLY UNSUPPORTED

Feather pen. Illustration copyrighted.The Apostles' Creed, written in the 4th century; the Nicene Creed, adopted at the Council of Nicea in 325 A.D.; the Athanasian Creed, written about 450 A.D.; the Chalcedon Definition, adopted at the Council of Chalcedon in 451 A.D.; and the Small Catechism of Martin Luther of 1529 A.D. are only a few of the historic creeds that recognize the veracity of the Virgin Birth of Jesus. Only in more modern times have Bible critics begun to try to cast doubt on a doctrinal truth that the Church has long since historically endorsed.

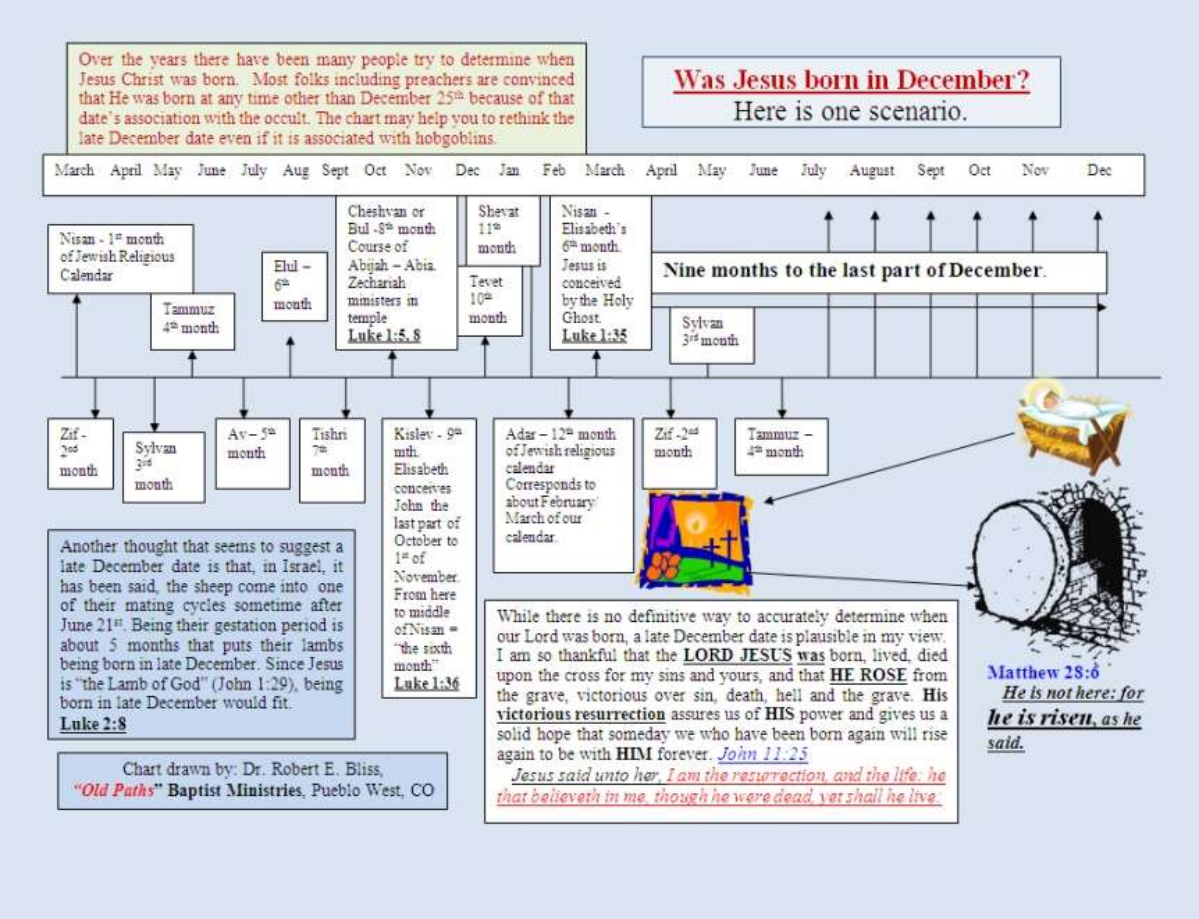
The idea of a virgin birth is BIBLICALLY UNCONVINCING

Some critics cite the fact that the Apostle Paul is silent on the subject of the Virgin Birth, and the fact that Mary's virginity is never mentioned in the Gospel According to John, as evidence that Jesus was never born of a virgin.

But the argument from silence, always a rather weak tactic in making a case, is particularly weak here due to the fact that both Paul and John were alive and quite familiar with the Gospel accounts written by Matthew and Dr. Luke (a physician!) — and yet never either questioned or refuted it.

Critic's Claim #5



The idea of a virgin birth is STATISTICALLY UNWARRANTED

If you really want to put truth up for a vote (and who does?), let's get all of the statistics out in the open. While it is true that one very famous poll taken in 1965 (and still being frequently cited today) of 7,441 Protestant clergy showed that many mainline denominational ministers were not convinced of the truthfulness of the Virgin Birth, a more recent Harris poll of a randomly selected group of 1,011 adults found that 91% of U.S. Christians do believe in the Virgin Birth. All of which goes to show that when it comes to determining spiritual truth, our authority ought to be the Bible (Isaiah 7:14, Matthew 1:25), not men — including clergy!

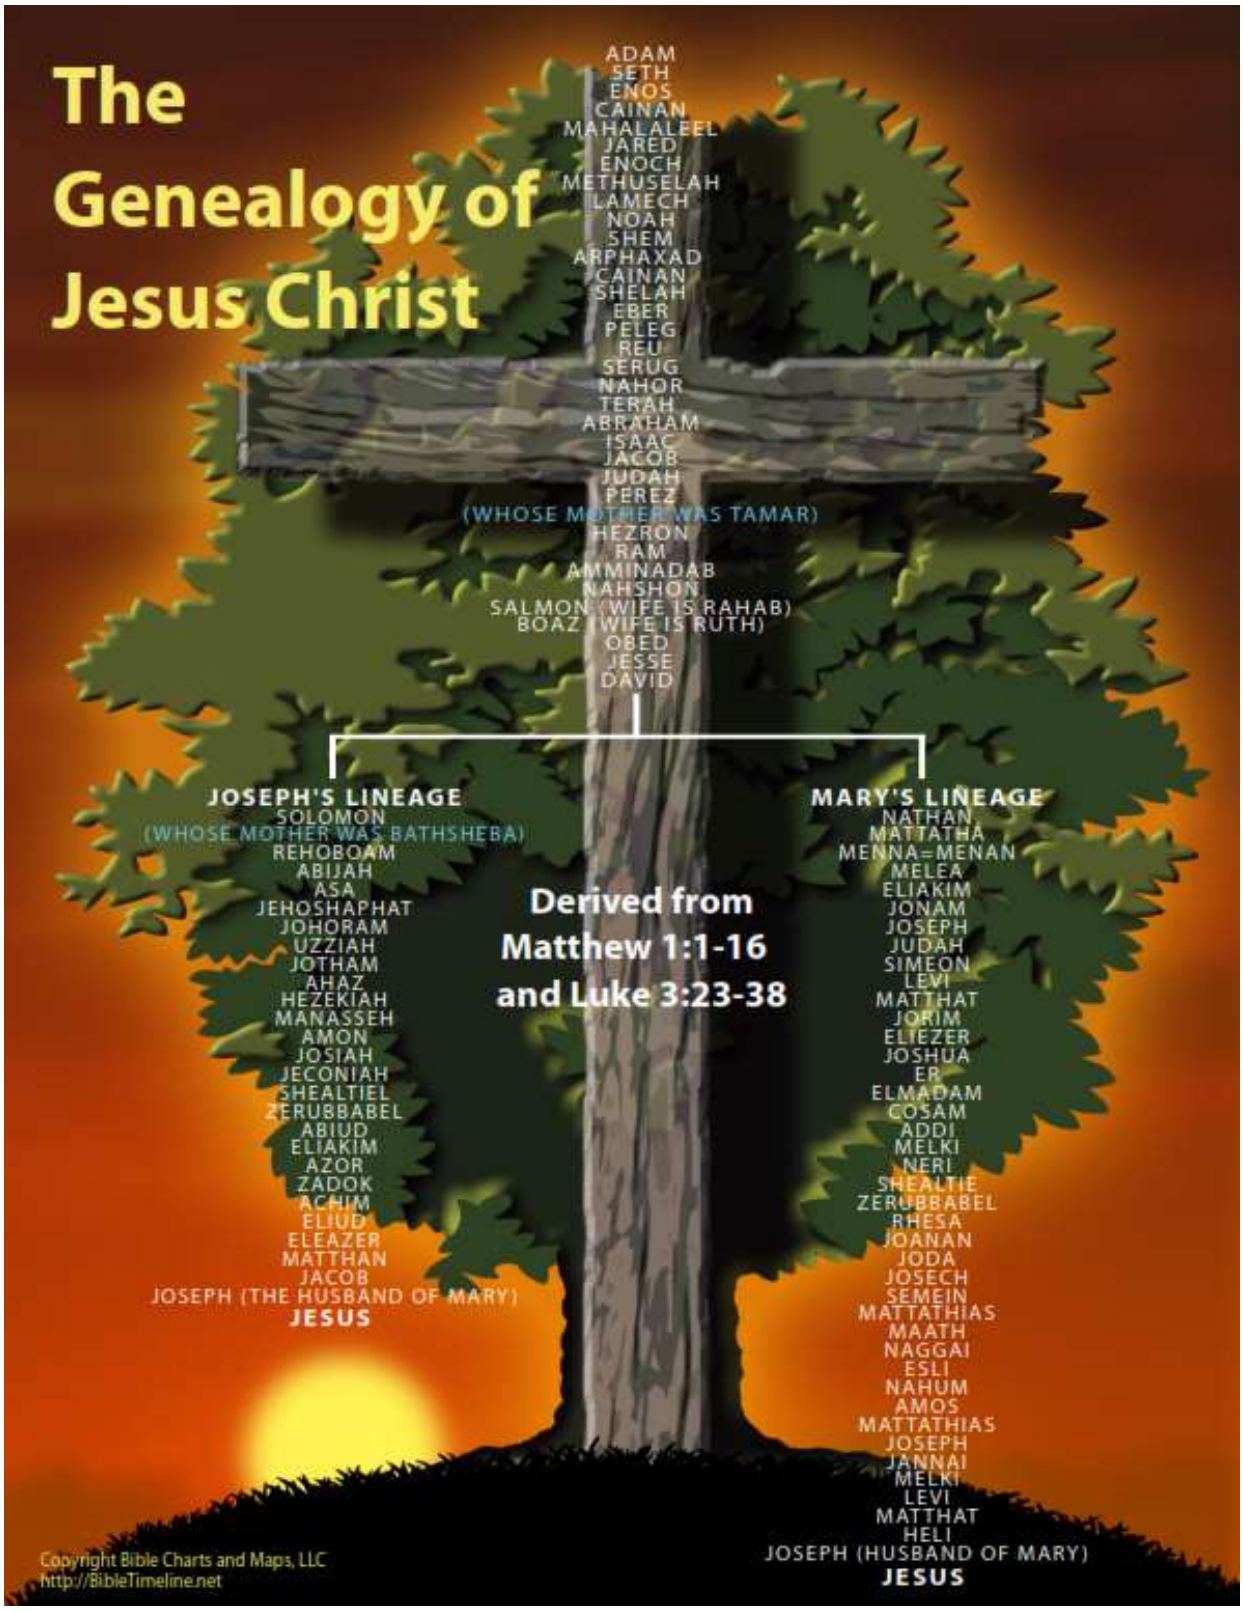
Lineage of our Lord, Jesus the Christ

There are a number of differences between the genealogy's given by Matthew and Luke. Matthew starts his lineage with Abraham (traditional Hebrew fashion) while Luke lists his lineage in reverse order ending with Adam. From Abraham to David both genealogies are nearly the same. However, from David forward these lists have little in common.

One theory is that Matthew lists the line for the house of David using only legal heirs to the thrown, while Luke traces the complete line. It has even been suggested that Luke received his information from Jesus' father, Joseph. However, this is impossible since both Joseph and Jesus had died well before Luke ever heard the story about our Lord.



Luke may be giving a lineage starting with Mary and is intermixing men, woman and Greek names? This is hinted at in Luke 3:23 where it says "He was the son, so it was thought, of Joseph." Since Mary lived long after the crucifixion it is possible that Luke may have received some information from her. (The name Heli that Luke gives is Greek for the Hebrew name Eli).

Whatever Luke's source, it is unlikely to have been first hand knowledge as was Matthew's. (Matthew's mother is believed to have been a cousin of Jesus' mother, and Matthew personally knew Jesus' brothers). Only two of the names listed by Luke can be found in any other part of the bible. In contrast, all the names listed by Matthew are mentioned elsewhere.

In his list, Matthew (a Jew) emphasizes fulfillment of the covenant by starting with Abraham. Where Luke (a Greek gentile) continues his list to Adam, indicating the physical relation of Christ to all men.

Jesus' Genealogy: Another Perspective:

The genealogy in Matthew (1:1-17) does not directly correspond to the one in Luke (3:23-38) which has 14 generations in the first series, 20 in the 2nd series and 22 in the 3rd series. Matthew's 3rd series of ancestors is only 13, instead of 14 as indicated in the text. They both appear to be tracing Jesus' lineage through Jesus' step-father, Joseph, especially in the Greek. However, if you are open to considering that other versions of Matthew written in Judean Aramaic could have predated the Greek (or even the possibility that Aramaic was the original language or was simultaneously translated from Hebrew into Greek) [and it is widely considered that Matthew is the most likely of the Gospels to have been written in Aramaic]; then the Aramaic versions of the Bible (Peshitta) yield translations that could mean "father", especially in the context of genealogy. This yields the following genealogical record:

First Series	Second Series	Third Series
1. Abraham	1. Solomon	1. Salathiel
2. Isaac	2. Roboam	2. Zerubabel
3. Jacob	3. Abia	3. Abiud
4. Judas	4. Asa	4. Eliachim
5. Phares	5. Josaphat	5. Azor
6. Esron	6. Joram	6. Sadoe
7. Aram	7. Ozias	7. Achim
8. Aminadab	8. Joatham	8. Eliud
9. Naasson	9. Achaz	9. Eleazar
10. Salmon	10. Ezechias	10. Mathan
11. Booz	11. Manasses	11. Jacob
12. Obed	12. Amon	12. Joseph (father of Mary)
13. Jesse	13. Josias	13. Mary
14. David	14. Jechonias	14. Jesus

This then would represent Mary's lineage (who's the daughter of different Joseph) and Luke would represent Joseph's… problem solved! ☺

Levirate and Non-Noble Impact on Genealogy of David and Jesus

It is interesting to see that King David's genealogy not only included the noble line of Abraham/Sarah, Isaac/Rebakah and Jacob/Leah, but it also included Judah/Tamar, Boaz/Ruth, and Salmon/Rahab. Moreover, in the genealogy of Yeshua the Messiah given in Matthew (1:1-16), only four women (besides Mary) are explicitly named: Tamar (who seduced her father-in-law), Rahab (a prostitute), Ruth (a Moabitess), and "the wife of Uriah" (i.e., Bathsheba, an adulteress). Each of these women of faith illustrate that God's love and grace overcomes His judgment... Here is a (very simplified) diagram made to indicate some of the relationships:

The Biblical Book of Ruth details the levirate process for Ruth (see Source link below for details):

> Levirate [levir, husband's brother] - the brother of a deceased man is obliged to marry his brother's widow, and the widow is obliged to marry her deceased husband's brother. [more: Levirate defn.]

Question: If Moabites were forbidden entrance into the covenant (Dt 23:3), how was Ruth (a Moabite) admitted into Israel's covenant with Yahweh? See Lev 11:44-45; 19:2; 20:7; Num 15:40.

Answer: Ruth was not born into the covenant and was the daughter of a people who were forbidden entrance into the covenant, but she demonstrated through righteous acts in living in obedience to God's commands that she merited through her deeds consideration beyond the restriction placed on the Moabites.

The unanswered question is was Ruth restricted from worshiping at Yahweh's Sanctuary because of her Moabite blood, or did the restriction against entrance into the community of Israel apparently not apply to a willing convert like Ruth who demonstrated her loyalty and fidelity to her mother-in-law as well as her good moral character and therefore her value to the community of Israel? The full acceptance of the people of Bethlehem to Boaz's marriage and their blessings associated with the marriage and the birth of Boaz's and Ruth's child suggests that they did see Ruth's demonstration of hesed toward her mother-in-law and her demonstration of the use of the Law by applying both the obligation of the blood redeemer and the levirate marriage to her own life as evidence that she deserved to be treated as an exception to the prohibitions against Moabites.

This is the interpretation of Jewish Bible scholars. Never is it mentioned in Scripture that David's hereditary line was impure. Ruth had what Yahweh demanded of His people-a circumcised heart that was undivided in its demonstration of hesed to both God and neighbor (Dt 10:16-20; 30:6; Jer 4:4a).

That Ruth was fully admitted into the faith community was also the interpretation of the Church Fathers, including St. Ambrose: ... the law of Moses prohibits marriage to Moabites and excludes them from the church, as it is written: "No Moabite shall enter the church of the Lord even to the third and fourth generation forever." Hence, how did she enter the church unless because she was made holy and immaculate by deeds that go beyond the law? For if the law was given for the irreverent and sinners, then surely Ruth, who exceeded the limits of the law and entered the church and was made an Israelite and deserved to a be counted among the honored figures in the Lord's genealogy, chosen for kinship of mind, not of body, is a great example for us, because she prefigures all of us who were gathered from the nations for the purpose of joining the church of the Lord. We should emulate her, therefore, who merited by her deeds this privilege of being admitted to his society, as history teaches, so that we also, by our deeds and accompanying merits, might be chosen for election to the Church of the Lord (Exposition of the Gospel of Luke, 3).

Question: What were the three qualifications the Go'el Haddam (Blood Redeemer) had to be willing to fulfill under the Law? See Lev 25:24-55 and Dt 25:5-10?

Answer:

The Qualifications for a Go'el Haddam (Blood Redeemer)	Scripture Passages
1. He must be related by blood to those he redeems.	Lev 25:23-25, 48-49; Dt 25:5, 7-10
2. He must have the necessary resources to pay the price of redemption.	Lev 25:25-26
3. He must be willing to redeem.	Dt 25:7, 9

Goel means redeemer. In fact, in a lot of the Christian language later, this is the word they're using when they talk about "my redeemer liveth." It's simply this word goel, and the goel is a person who as the nearest relative or as a close relative, has certain legal obligations to another person.

Those obligations — the primary obligations are three: (1)To redeem the person or their property if they've been sold to a stranger due to poverty. So to redeem them from debt servitude essentially. So your goel should do that for you. (2)To marry a childless widow. So if a man dies and his wife is childless the goel is supposed to marry her, provide seed, and the firstborn son will be named after the name who is dead. So he's supposed to marry a childless widow and produce offspring for the deceased; usually, that falls first to the brother; And then (3) in the case of the blood redeemer, also the redeemer is supposed to avenge the blood of a kinsman. So if you are killed your redeemer is supposed to seek vengeance for you.

The Five Scrolls (Megilloth)

The Megilloth usually composes the second subsection of the Writings and includes the five scrolls, which are also the five shortest books in the Writings: Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, and Esther. In many Jewish communities, these five books have become part of the liturgy of five annual feasts:

- Passover—Song of Songs
- Pentecost—Ruth
- Ninth of Ab—Lamentations
- Feast of Tabernacles—Ecclesiastes
- Purim—Esther

In the Book of Ruth, "redeem" or "redeemer" occurs 21 times, in reference to both Naomi's land and Ruth herself. When Naomi and her daughter-in-law Ruth return to Judah from Moab, they live in poverty. Through a series of events, the estate of Naomi's deceased husband is redeemed by Boaz (Ruth 2:20; 4:1–6). As part of the transaction, Boaz also redeems Ruth—literally purchasing her along with his kinsman's property (2:20; 3:9–13; 4:6–14). However, Boaz goes above and beyond his obligation as redeemer (go'el) when he marries Ruth and provides her with an heir (Lev 25:35; Deut 15:7–8; Ruth 4:7–20). As a result, Ruth and Boaz are part of the lineage of King David and eventually Jesus (Ruth 4:13–20; Matt 1:5; Luke 3:32).

Harvest. Harvesting grain in ancient Canaan took place in April and May (barley first, wheat a few weeks later). It involved the following steps:

(1) cutting the ripened standing grain with hand sickles (Dt 16:9; 23:25; Je 50:16; Joe 3:13) — usually done by men;
(2) binding the grain into sheaves — usually done by women;
(3) gleaning, i.e., gathering stalks of grain left behind (Ruth 2:7); went from early morning (v. 7) to evening, i.e., before sundown.
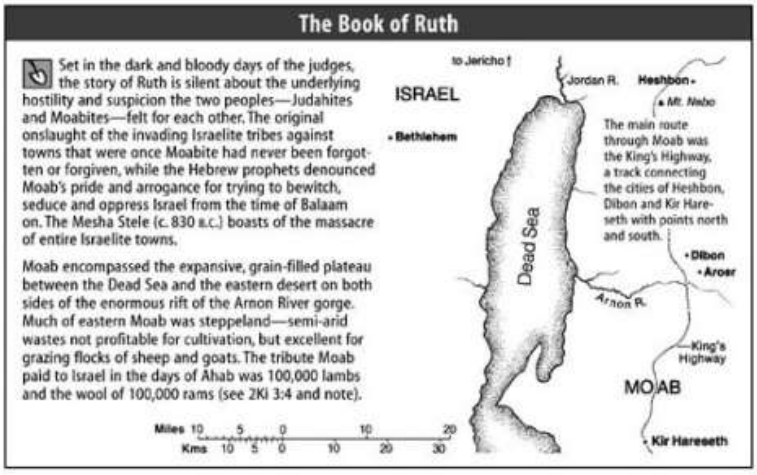
(4) transporting the sheaves to the threshing floor — often by donkey, sometimes by cart (Am 2:13);

After sundown was the time to beat out or winnow what was gathered on the threshing floor. This was located to the east of the city so that the westerly wind carried away the chaff. (On threshing [or winnowing]),

(5) threshing, i.e., loosening the grain from the straw — usually done by the treading of cattle (Dt 25:4; Ho 10:11), but sometimes by toothed threshing sledges (Isa 41:15; Am 1:3) or the wheels of carts (Isa 28:28);
(6) winnowing — done by tossing the grain into the air with winnowing forks (Je 15:7) so that the wind, which usually came up for a few hours in the afternoon, blew away the straw and chaff (Ps 1:4), leaving the grain at the winnower's feet; The winnowing took place during the breezes that begin after sundown;
(7) sifting the grain (\Am 9:9) to remove any residual foreign matter;
(8) bagging for transportation and storage (Ge 42-44). Threshing floors, where both threshing and winnowing occurred, were hard, smooth, open places, prepared on either rock or clay and carefully chosen for favorable exposure to the prevailing winds. They were usually on the east side — i.e., downwind — of the village.

The genealogy in 4:17-22 may actually be the main reason why the book of Ruth was written. It shows that Ruth and Boaz had a son, Obed, whose son was Jesse, whose son was David.

Boaz was a descendant of Rahab, the prostitute from Jericho (Jos 2:1; Mt 1:5; see on Jos 2). Thus David's great-grandmother, Ruth, was a Moabitess, and his great-grandfather, Boaz, was part Canaanite. The chosen family within the Chosen Nation thus has Canaanite and Moabite blood in its veins.



It is fitting that from this bloodline would come the Messiah for all nations. Rahab and Ruth became part of God's promises and His plan, not by birth but by their faith in, and their practical commitment to, God and His people — the same way in which people from all nations still can share in God's eternal promises.

It was in a field near Bethlehem that Ruth gleaned. Hundreds of years later, also in a field near Bethlehem, angels announced the birth of Ruth's descendant, Jesus, to startled shepherds.

Ruth provides a glimpse into the lives of ordinary, though godly, people during the turbulent period of the judges. It shows an oasis of faithfulness in an age marked by idolatry and unfaithfulness.

Conclusion: Naomi Blessed with a New Family. The conclusion serves as the reversal of the introduction, showing how the Lord, through Ruth's love (v. 15), restored Naomi's life.

Themes
(1) Ruth herself shows that Gentiles could believe in the true God.
(2) The book gives a partial lineage of David, and thus of Christ, and shows that Gentile blood was in the line of the One who became the Savior for all mankind.
(3) Boaz, as the kinsman-redeemer (see note on 3:9), serves as a beautiful type of Christ, in that (a) he was a blood relative (Ro 1:3; Heb 2:14); (b) he had the price with which to purchase the forfeited inheritance (1Pe 1:18-19); (c) he was willing to redeem (Heb 10:7).
(4) The book is a moving example of the sovereignty of God in caring for His people (Ru 2:12).

Hebrew Succession of Heirs
Father
1. Sons
2. Daughters
3. Brothers 4. Uncle on Father's Side
5. Nearest Relative in General

Difference between chesed and agape (love):

- agape is undeserved giving, like giving a banquet to a homeless person
- chesed is a relationship
- chesed is taking them home for the rest of their life
- chesed is committing to care for them to the bitter end — a love that will "never let them go"

Levirate marriage. (Latin levir means "brother-in-law").
Ancient custom called for a man to marry the childless widow of his brother. The first son of such a union was considered the child of the dead brother, to carry on the dead man's line and inherit his property. This custom underlies the story of Judah's relationship with Tamar, the childless widow of his firstborn.

Kinsman-redeemer (2:20). The Heb. Is go'el . Like other words from the root g'l , it indicates fulfilling one's responsibilities as a kinsman. O.T. family law gave the kinsman the right to redeem a relation from slavery, or buy back his fields (Lev 25). Here another duty of the kinsman is in view: the obligation of the next of kin to marry a childless widow and have a child, which would be considered the offspring of the dead husband. In this way the dead husband's line would be carried on, and his property preserved.
This "family law" with its implied responsibility to aid a near relative, prefigures the ministry of Jesus. In taking on human nature He became our near kinsman, and accepted the obligation to redeem us despite the terrible cost

When Was Jesus Born?

– including "How December 25 Became Christmas" and other information regarding the incidents in the Bible that surround the account of Jesus' birth.

The Birth of Jesus Christ

Preface

The following is part of a short series of devotional items related to the birth of Christ. For some, such material is hardly devotional because it primarily focuses on history. But we must keep in mind that the Jesus we worship was truly born in time-space history. And that babe in the manger was truly crucified--and just as surely rose from the dead. The Bible is different from the sacred books of other religions because it invites historical investigation. And when it has met the test--as it surely always, inevitably does--it inculcates a greater devotion in the heart of the believer for the one we call the Son of God. [Source: http://biblelight.net/sukkoth.htm (7th Day Adventist related site)

The Year Jesus Was Born

In the western hemisphere, we split time by the birth of Jesus Christ. But did he really even live? If so, when was he born?

Sometime ago, I struck up a conversation with a man who claimed that God did not exist. He was an atheist. But not just a run-of-the-mill atheist, you understand. He also insisted that Jesus Christ never existed! This fellow was hard core.

Now my atheist friend had incredible faith--blind faith, I might add. His religious fervor, in fact, would put many evangelists to shame. But the evidence that Jesus Christ invaded history is not just shut up to the testimony of the New Testament--as irrefutable as that might be! The very enemies of Christianity claimed that he lived--and that he performed miracles! Early Jewish documents such as the Mishnah and even Josephus--as well as first-century Gentile historians--such as Thallus, Serapion, and Tacitus--all testify that the one called Christ lived in Palestine and died under Pontius Pilate. As the British scholar, F. F. Bruce put it, "The historicity of Christ is as [certain]. . . as the historicity of Julius Caesar" (NT Documents, 119).

Now it logically follows that if Jesus Christ lived (need it be said?), he must have been born. The Gospels tell us that his birth was shortly before Herod the Great died. Herod's death can be fixed with certainty.

Josephus records an eclipse of the moon just before Herod passed on. This occurred on March 12th or 13th in 4 B.C. Josephus also tells us that Herod expired just before Passover. This feast took place on April 11th, in the same year, 4 B.C. From other details supplied by Josephus, we can pinpoint Herod the Great's demise as occurring between March 29th and April 4th in 4 B.C.

It might sound strange to suggest that Jesus Christ was born no later than 4 B.C. since B.C. means 'before Christ.' But our modern calendar which splits time between B.C. and A.D. was not invented until A.D. 525. At that time, Pope John the First asked a monk named Dionysius to prepare a standardized calendar for the western Church. Unfortunately, poor Dionysius missed the real B.C./A.D. division by at least four years!

Now Matthew tells us that Herod killed Bethlehem's babies two years old and under. The earliest Jesus could have been born, therefore, is 6 B.C. Through a variety of other time indicators, we can be relatively confident that the one called Messiah was born in either late 5 or early 4 B.C.

My atheist friend scoffs at such flexibility. He says, "If you don't know exactly when Jesus was born, how do you know that he really lived?" That is hardly a reasonable question! The other day I called my mother to wish her a happy birthday. "Mom, how many candles on this birthday cake?" I inquired. "I don't know, son--I don't keep track any more," she sighed. After a few minutes of pleasant conversation, we hung up.

Now, of course, I can't be certain, but I do believe that that was my mother on the other end of the phone. She can't remember how old she is (and she's neither senile nor very old), but that doesn't make her a figment of my imagination, does it? Because if she's just a phantom, then for the last three minutes, you've been reading absolutely nothing!

The Day Jesus Was Born

This coming December 25th most parents will be lying to their children about old St. Nick. Some of us will be celebrating the birth of our Savior. But was he really born on this day?

Was Jesus really born on December 25th? Virtually every month on the calendar has been proposed by biblical scholars. So why do we celebrate his birth in December?

The tradition for December 25th is actually quite ancient. Hippolytus, in the second century A.D., argued that this was Christ's birthday. Meanwhile, in the eastern Church, January 6th was the date followed.

But in the fourth century, John Chrysostom argued that December 25th was the correct date and from that day till now, the Church in the East, as well as the West, has observed the 25th of December as the official date of Christ's birth.

In modern times, the traditional date has been challenged. Modern scholars point out that when Jesus was born, shepherds were watching their sheep in the hills around Bethlehem. Luke tells us that an angel appeared to "some shepherds staying out in the fields [who were] keeping watch over their flock by night" (2:8).

Some scholars feel that the sheep were usually brought under cover from November to March; as well, they were not normally in the field at night. But there is no hard evidence for this. In fact, early Jewish sources suggest that the sheep around Bethlehem were outside year-round. So you can see, December 25th fits both tradition and the biblical narrative well. There is no sound objection to it.

Now admittedly, the sheep around Bethlehem were the exception, not the rule. But these were no ordinary sheep. They were sacrificial lambs. In the early spring they would be slaughtered at the Passover.

And God first revealed the Messiah's birth to these shepherds--shepherds who protected harmless lambs which would soon die on behalf of sinful men. When they saw the baby, could they have known? Might they have whispered in their hearts what John the Baptist later thundered, "Behold, the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world!"

Now, of course, we can't be absolutely certain of the day of Christ's birth. At least, not this side of heaven. But an early winter date seems as reasonable a guess as any. And December 25th has been the frontrunner for eighteen centuries. Without more evidence, there seems no good reason to change the celebration date now.

We can blame the ancient church for a large part of our uncertainty. You see, they did not celebrate Christ's birth. At all. To them, it was insignificant. They were far more concerned with his death . . . and resurrection.

But modern man has turned that around. A baby lying in a manger is harmless, non-threatening. But a man dying on a cross--a man who claims to be God--that man is a threat! He demands our allegiance! We cannot ignore him. We must either accept him or reject him. He leaves us no middle ground.

This Christmas season, take a close look at a nativity scene once again. Remove your rose-colored glasses--smell the foul air, see the cold, shivering animals. They represent the Old Testament sacrificial system. They are emblems of death. But they are mere shadows of the Babe in their midst. He was born to die . . . that all who believe in him might live.

The Visit of the Magi

When Jesus Christ was born, men--known as magi--came from the east to worship him. Were they wise men . . . or astrologers?

Matthew begins his second chapter with these words: "Now after Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, magi from the east arrived in Jerusalem, saying, 'Where is he who has been born king of the Jews? For we saw his star in the east, and have come to worship him.'"

Who were these wise men from the east? Matthew tells us next to nothing about them--he doesn't mention their names, nor how many there were--not even which country they came from. As mysteriously as they come on the scene, they disappear. . .

Though Matthew doesn't tell us much, over-zealous Christians throughout church history have dogmatically filled in the blanks. By the 6th century A.D., these dark strangers were given thrones and names: Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthazar were the alleged names of these alleged kings. But this has nothing to do with the biblical story: we really have no idea what their names were--nor even their number. There could have been 3 or 300 as far as we know! But one thing we do know for sure: they were not royalty. The ancient magi were reilgious and political advisors to eastern kings--but there wasn't a drop of blue blood among them.

But isn't it true that the magi were astrologers? And didn't God prescribe death to astrologers in the Old Testament? 'Not always' and 'yes' are the answers. In Deuteronomy 17, God commands his people to execute all astrologers by stoning. Jean Dixon wouldn't stand a chance in such a theocracy! The fact that she--and others like her--are so comfortably tolerated--even well respected!--in modern America ought to show us that the U.S.A. is a post-Christian country--at best . . .

But what about these ancient magi? Were they astrologers? After all, they followed a star to Bethlehem.

We might answer this in three ways: First, not all magi were astrologers, for Daniel the prophet was the chief of the magi in Nebuchadnezzar's court. Through his influence, undoubtedly many of the magi carried on their religious and political duties as worshippers of the One true God.

Second, there are some biblical scholars who believe that Isaiah predicted that a star would appear when the Messiah was born. If this interpretation is correct, then the magi who worshipped the newborn king were clearly following in Daniel's train, for he almost surely taught them from Isaiah.

Third, although a few believe that the 'star' they saw was a natural phenomenon--such as a conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter--this cannot explain how the star stood right over Bethlehem. Clearly, the 'star' was completely of supernatural origin. If so, it probably had nothing to do with astrology.

Therefore, the magi most likely did not subscribe to such superstitious folly. If so, they were truly wise men . . .

I saw a bumper sticker the other day, which read, "Wise men still seek him." Actually, that's not quite accurate. The Bible tells us that "no one seeks God, not even one." But if he has led us to himself, then we have become wise. For it is true that "wise men still worship him."

The Boys from Bethlehem

One of the most heinous atrocities in human history was the murder of Bethlehem's babies by Herod the Great. But did it really happen?

In the second chapter of Matthew's gospel, we read that when Herod the Great heard of the Messiah's birth, "he was troubled--and all Jerusalem with him." Later, when the wise men did not report back to him, he became furious and ordered all the baby boys up to two years old in and around Bethlehem to be slaughtered!

Three questions come to mind as we consider this cruel incident: First, how many babies did Herod actually kill? Second, how old was Jesus when this happened? And finally, why does no other ancient historian record this outrage? In other words, did it really happen?

How many babies did Herod murder? Some scholars have suggested as many as 200! But most reject such a figure. Bethlehem was a small community--almost a suburb of Jerusalem. The village itself--and the surrounding countryside--would hardly have more than 30 male infants under two. Most scholars today place the number between 20 and 30.

But that's if only the boy babies were killed. Actually, the Greek text of Matthew 2:16 could mean 'babies'--not just 'boy babies.' And psychologically, Herod's henchmen might not have bothered to check the gender of their victims. The number might be as high as 50 or 60.

Second, how old was Jesus when this occurred? According to the best chronological evidence, he could not have been more than three or four months old. He was more than likely born in the winter of 5 or 4 B.C.--Herod died in the early spring of 4 B.C. So why did Herod slay all children up to two years old? The answer to the third question might help to answer this one. . .

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Third, why is this event not recorded outside the Bible? Specifically, why did Josephus, the first-century Jewish historian, fail to mention it?

Josephus tells us much about Herod. The best word to describe his reign is 'overkill.' He murdered his favorite wife's father, drowned her brother--and even killed her! He executed one of his most trusted friends, his barber, and 300 military leaders--all in a day's work! Then he slew three of his sons, allegedly suspecting them of treason. Josephus tells us that "Herod inflicted such outrages upon (the Jews) as not even a beast could have done if it possessed the power to rule over men" (Antiquities of the Jews 17:310). Killing babies was not out of character for this cruel king. And killing them up to two years old--to make sure he got the baby Jesus lines up with his insane jealousy for power.

Josephus might have omitted the slaying of the babies for one of two reasons: first, he was no friend of Christianity and he left it out intentionally; or second, just before Herod died he locked up 3000 of the nation's leading citizens and gave orders that they were to be executed at the hour of his death. He wanted to make sure that there would be mourning when he died. . . Israel was so preoccupied with this that the clandestine murder of a few babies might have gone unnoticed. . .

Herod thought that he had gained a victory over the king of the Jews. Yet this was a mere foreshadowing of the victory Satan thought he had when Jesus lay dead on a Roman cross. But the empty tomb proved that that dark Friday was Satan's worst defeat!

Conclusion

We've been looking at several aspects of the birth of Jesus Christ in this short study. Now, we want to put it all together.

In the winter of 5 or 4 B.C., God invaded history by taking on the form of a man. He was born in a small town just south of Jerusalem. Bethlehem, which means 'the house of bread,' indeed became worthy of its name one lonely winter night. For there, in that town, was born the Bread of Life . . .

His mother placed the infant king in a manger--or feeding trough--because the guest room where they were to stay was occupied. The birth of this king was celebrated that night only by his mother, her husband, and a handful of shepherds. The shepherds had been in the fields around Bethlehem, guarding the lambs which would die at the next Passover. An angel appeared to them and gave them the birth announcement: "today in the city of David there has been born for you a Savior, who is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:11). In their simple faith, they rushed to see their newborn king.

Shortly after the birth of the Messiah, magi from the east arrived in Jerusalem and inquired of king Herod where the real king of the Jews was to be born. The theologians of Herod's court knew the Scriptures well--in 'Bethlehem' they recited. Ironically, though they knew the Scriptures, they did not believe them! They did not even bother to travel the five or six miles to Bethlehem to see their Messiah.

But Herod believed the Scriptures! That is why he sent a corps of butchers to Bethlehem to slaughter innocent children, in hopes of destroying this rival to his throne. But he was too late. The magi had come and gone and Jesus was by now safe in Egypt.

And the magi believed the Scriptures. They had traveled several hundred miles to worship this Babe. They were guided to Bethlehem by a supernatural celestial phenomenon--and by the Scriptures. Apparently, their ancestors had been instructed by Daniel the prophet about the coming Messiah. . . When they saw the child, they fell down and worshiped him. This was God in the flesh. They could do no other.

And they gave him gifts--gold, frankincense, and myrrh. This was an unusual present--by any standards. The gold, of course, we all can understand--but the frankincense and myrrh were odd. Perhaps they had read Isaiah's prophecy that "nations will come to your light, and kings to your rising . . . They will bring gold and frankincense, and will bear good news. . . " (Isa. 60:3, 6). This explains the frankincense, but not the myrrh.

Now myrrh, like frankincense, was a perfume. But unlike frankincense, myrrh smelled of death. In the ancient world, it was used to embalm a corpse. Jesus himself would be embalmed with this very perfume (cf. John 19:39).

If the magi were thinking of Jesus' death when they brought the myrrh, they no doubt knew of it from Daniel's prophecy (9:24-27). In the ninth chapter of Daniel we read that the 'Messiah will be cut off' and this 'will make atonement for iniquity' and ultimately 'bring in everlasting righteousness' (9:26, 24).

Even at the birth of our Savior, the shadow of the cross is already falling over his face. . .

The theologians of Herod's court did not believe the Scriptures. They were fools. Herod believed, but disobeyed. He was a madman. The simple shepherds and the majestic magi believed in this infant Savior--and it was reckoned to them as righteousness. May we follow in their train.

On What Day Was Jesus Born?

While much of the world celebrates the birth of Jesus Christ on the 25th of December, can the actual day of Jesus' birth be determined from scripture? This question will be explored in some detail, and will yield a result that is quite intriguing. The first passage we will consider begins with the father of John the Baptist, Zacharias [KJV]:

Luke 1:5 There was in the days of Herod, the king of Judaea, a certain priest named Zacharias, of the course of Abia: and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth.

Luke 1:8 And it came to pass, that while he executed the priest's office before God in the order of his course, ...

Luke 1:23 And it came to pass, that, as soon as the days of his ministration were accomplished, he departed to his own house.
Luke 1:24 And after those days his wife Elisabeth conceived, ...

The clue given to us here is that Zacharias was of the "course" of Abia.

> Note: "Course" (in KJV) - according to Strong's - the original Greek is, ephēmeria, (specifically) the quotidian rotation or class of the Jewish priests' service at the Temple, as distributed by families; a class (of priests detailed for service in the temple): — division (used by most other Bible translations).

The 24 Courses [Divisoins] of the Temple Priesthood.

7. But David, being desirous of ordaining his son king of all the people, called together their rulers to Jerusalem, with the priests and the Levites; and having first numbered the Levites, he found them to be thirty-eight thousand, from thirty years old to fifty; out of which he appointed twenty-three thousand to take care of the building of the temple, and out of the same, six thousand to be judges of the people and scribes, four thousand for porters to the house of God, and as many for singers, to sing to the instruments which David had prepared, as we have said already. He divided them also into courses: and when he had separated the priests from them, he found of these priests twenty-four courses, sixteen of the house of Eleazar, and eight of that of Ithamar; and he ordained that one course should minister to God eight days, from sabbath to sabbath. And thus were the courses distributed by lot, in the presence of David, and Zadok and Abiathar the high priests, and of all the rulers; and that course which came up first was written down as the first, and accordingly the second, and so on to the twenty-fourth; and this partition hath remained to this day. — Josephus, Antiquities of the Jews, Book 7, Chapter 14, Paragraph 7.

King David on God's instructions (1 Chr 28:11-13) had divided the sons of Eleazar and Ithamar, the sons of Aaron, into 24 groups (1 Chr 24:1-4), to setup a schedule by which the Temple of the Lord could be staffed with priests (Kohanim) all year round in an orderly manner. After the 24 groups of priests were established, lots were drawn to determine the sequence in which each group would serve in the Temple. (1 Chr 24: 7-19).

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

That sequence is as follows:

The 24 courses of priests

1 Chr 24:7	1. Jehoiarib	2. Jedaiah
1 Chr 24:8	3. Harim	4. Seorim
1 Chr 24:9	5. Malchijah	6. Mijamin
1 Chr 24:10	7. Hakkoz	8. Abijah
1 Chr 24:11	9. Jeshuah	10. Shecaniah
1 Chr 24:12	11. Eliashib	12. Jakim
1 Chr 24:13	13. Huppah	14. Jeshebeab
1 Chr 24:14	15. Bilgah	16. Immer
1 Chr 24:15	17. Hezir	18. Aphses
1 Chr 24:16	19. Pethahiah	20. Jehezekel
1 Chr 24:17	21. Jachim	22. Gamul
1 Chr 24:18	23. Delaiah	24. Maaziah

1 Chr 24:19 These were the orderings of them in their service to come into the house of the LORD, according to their manner, under Aaron their father, as the LORD God of Israel had commanded him.

Now each one of the 24 "courses" of priests would begin and end their service in the Temple on the Sabbath, a tour of duty being for one week (2 Chr 23:8, 1 Chr 9:25). On three occasions during the year, all the men of Israel were required to travel to Jerusalem for festivals of the Lord, so on those occasions all the priests would be needed in the Temple to accommodate the many sacrifices offered by the crowds. Those three festivals were Unleavened Bread, Pentecost, and Tabernacles (Deut 16:16).

The Yearly Cycle of Service in the Temple.

The Jewish calendar begins in the spring, during the month of Nisan (Est 3:7), so the first "course" of priests, would be that of the family of Jehoiarib, who would serve for the first week of Nisan, Sabbath to Sabbath. The second week would then be the responsibility of the family of Jedaiah. The third week would be the feast of Unleavened Bread, and all priests would be present for service. Then the schedule would resume with the third course of priests, the family of Harim. By this plan, when the 24th course was completed, the general cycle of courses would repeat. This schedule would cover 51 weeks or 357 days, enough for the lunar Jewish calendar (about 354 days). So, in a period of a year, each group of priests would serve in the Temple twice on their scheduled course, in addition to the 3 major festivals, for a total of about five weeks of duty.

The Conception of John the Baptist.

Now back to Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist.

Luke 1:23 And it came to pass, that, as soon as the days of his ministration were accomplished, he departed to his own house.
Luke 1:24 And after those days his wife Elisabeth conceived, ...

Beginning with the first month, Nisan, in the spring (March-April), the schedule of the priest's courses would result with Zacharias serving during the 10th week of the year. This is because he was a member of the course of Abia (Abijah), the 8th course, and both the Feast of Unleavened Bread (15-21 Nisan) and Pentecost (6 Sivan) would have occurred before his scheduled duty. This places Zacharias' administration in the Temple as beginning on the second Sabbath of the third month, Sivan (May-June).

	1st Month	2nd Month	3rd Month
	Abib - Nisan (March - April)	Zif - Iyyar (April - May)	Sivan (May - June)
First Week	Jehoiarib (1)	Seorim (4)	All Priests (Pentecost)
Second Week	Jedaiah (2)	Malchijah (5)	Abijah (8)
Third Week	All Priests (Feast of Unleavened Bread)	Mijamin (6)	Jeshuah (9)
Fourth Week	Harim (3)	Hakkoz (7)	Shecaniah (10)

Having completed his Temple service on the third Sabbath of Sivan, Zacharias returned home and soon conceived his son John. So John the Baptist was probably conceived shortly after the third Sabbath of the month of Sivan.

The Conception of Jesus Christ.

Now the reason that the information about John is important, is because according to Luke, Jesus was conceived by the Holy Spirit in the sixth month of Elisabeth's pregnancy:

Luke 1:24 And after those days his wife Elisabeth conceived, and hid herself five months, saying,
Luke 1:25 Thus hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein he looked on me, to take away my reproach among men.
Luke 1:26 And in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, Luke 1:27 To a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Note that verse 26 above refers to the sixth month of Elisabeth's pregnancy, not Elul, the sixth month of the Hebrew calendar, and this is made plain by the context of verse 24 and again in verse 36:

Luke 1:36 And, behold, thy cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age: and this is the sixth month with her, who was called barren.

Mary stayed with Elizabeth for the last 3 months of her pregnancy, until the time that John was born.

Luke 1:56 And Mary abode with her about three months, and returned to her own house.
Luke 1:57 Now Elisabeth's full time came that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son.

Now working from the information about John's conception late in the third month, Sivan, and advancing six months, we arrive late in the 9th month of Kislev (Nov-Dec) for the time frame for the conception of Jesus. It is notable here that the first day of the Jewish festival of Hanukkah, the Festival of Lights, is celebrated on the 25th day of Kislev, and Jesus is called the light of the world (John 8:12, 9:5, 12:46). This does not appear to be a mere coincidence. In the book of John, Hanukkah is called the feast of dedication (John 10:22). Hanukkah is an eight day festival of rejoicing, celebrating deliverance from enemies by the relighting of the menorah in the rededicated Temple, which according to the story, stayed lit miraculously for eight days on only one day's supply of oil.

The Birth of John the Baptist.

Based on a conception shortly after the third Sabbath of the month of Sivan, projecting forward an average term of about 10 lunar months (40 weeks), we arrive in the month of Nisan. It would appear that John the Baptist may have been born in the middle of the month, which would coincide with Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread. It is interesting to note, that even today, it is customary for the Jews to set out a special goblet of wine during the Passover Seder meal, in anticipation of the arrival of Elijah that week, which is based on the prophecy of Malachi:

Mal 4:5 Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the LORD:

Jesus identified John as the "Elijah" that the Jews had expected:

Mat 17:10 And his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?
Mat 17:11 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things.
Mat 17:12 But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them.
Mat 17:13 Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.

The angel that appeared to Zacharias in the temple also indicated that John would be the expected "Elias":

Luke 1:17 And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.

So then, the Feast of Unleavened Bread begins on the 15th day of the 1st month, Nisan, and this is a likely date for the birth of John the Baptist, the expected "Elijah".

The Birth of Jesus Christ.

Since Jesus was conceived six months after John the Baptist, and we have established a likely date for John's birth, we need only move six months farther down the Jewish calendar to arrive at a likely date for the birth of Jesus. From the 15th day of the 1st month, Nisan, we go to the 15th day of the 7th month, Tishri. And what do we find on that date? It is the festival of Tabernacles! The 15th day of Tishri begins the third and last festival of the year to which all the men of Israel were to gather in Jerusalem for Temple services. (Lev 23:34)

Immanuel.

Isa 7:14 Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel.

Immanuel means "God with us". The Son of God had come to dwell with, or tabernacle on earth with His people.

John 1:14 And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth.

The Feast of Tabernacles (Sukkot), occurs five days after the Day of Atonement, and is a festival of rejoicing and celebration of deliverance from slavery in Egypt (Leviticus 23:42-43).

Luke 2:7 And she brought forth her firstborn son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.
Luke 2:8 And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.
Luke 2:9 And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.
Luke 2:10 And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.
Luke 2:11 For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

Why was there no room at the inn? Bethlehem is only about 5 miles from Jerusalem, and all the men of Israel had come to attend the festival of Tabernacles as required by the law of Moses. Every room for miles around Jerusalem would have been already taken by pilgrims, so all that Mary and Joseph could find for shelter was a stable. During Tabernacles, everyone was to live in temporary booths (Sukkot), as a memorial to Israel's pilgrimage out of Egypt - Lev. 23:42-43. The birth of the Savior, in what amounted to a temporary dwelling rather than a house, signaled the coming deliverance of God's people from slavery to sin, and their departing for the promised land, which is symbolized by Tabernacles.

Also of note is the fact that the Feast of Tabernacles is an eight day feast (Lev 23:36, 39). Why eight days? It may be because an infant was dedicated to God by performing circumcision on the eighth day after birth:

Luke 2:21 And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child, his name was called JESUS, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb.

So the infant Jesus would have been circumcised on the eighth and last day of the Feast of Tabernacles, a Sabbath day. The Jews today consider this a separate festival from Tabernacles, and they call it Shemini Atzeret.

The Baptism of Jesus - The Time is Fulfilled

There is another indication in scripture as to when Jesus was born.

Mark 1:9 And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.
Mark 1:10 And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending upon him:

Mark 1:11 And there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.
Mark 1:12 And immediately the Spirit driveth him into the wilderness.
Mark 1:13 And he was there in the wilderness forty days, tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts
Mark 1:14 Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, Mark 1:15 And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.

Jesus said The time is fulfilled just after His baptism, upon emerging from 40 days in the wilderness. He then began His preaching ministry, Luke tells us at about the age of 30.

Luke 3:22 And the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased.
Luke 3:23 And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age, ...

The book of Daniel gives us the "time" or prophecy Jesus was speaking about:

DANIEL'S 70 WEEKS

Dan 9:25 Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem (457 B.C.) unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks (69 weeks / 483 years, 27 A.D.): the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times.
Dan 9:26 And after threescore and two weeks (69 weeks) shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined.
Dan 9:27 And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week (31 A.D.) he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, (be crucified) ...

It is evident that by understanding this prophecy, and knowing the date of the decree when Daniel's 70 weeks began (Ezra 7, 457 B.C.), the wise men knew exactly when to look for the Christ child.

- The 70th week of Daniel, a period of 7 literal years, began with "Messiah the Prince". Messiah means anointed, and Jesus was publically anointed by the Holy Spirit at His baptism, declaring him to be the Messiah, at the end of 69 weeks / 483 prophetic years, which calculates to 27 A.D. as the year of Christ's baptism.

- Knowing the year of Christ's baptism to be 483 years after the decree of Artaxerxes in 457 B.C., the wisemen needed simply to subtract 30 from 483 to know the Messiah would be born 453 years after the decree. Why 30? A man had to be 30 years of age to serve in the Sanctuary / Temple (Num 4:3), and Luke says that at His baptism Jesus became about thirty. Jesus, when He turned 30, was considered to be old enough to perform the duties of a priest.

- Daniel 9:26-27 also tells us that the Messiah would be "cut off" (crucified) in the "midst of the (70th) week". So 3 1/2 years after His baptism, which was at the end of 69 weeks / 483 prophetic years, on Tabernacles of 27 A.D., Jesus would be crucified, precisely on 14 Nisan, Passover of 31 A.D.

THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM

"... in the Old Testament (Daniel 9) the Saviour's advent was more clearly revealed. The magi learned with joy that His coming was near, and that the whole world was to be filled with a knowledge of the glory of the Lord.

The wise men had seen a mysterious light in the heavens upon that night when the glory of God flooded the hills of Bethlehem. As the light faded, a luminous star appeared, and lingered in the sky. It was not a fixed star nor a planet, and the phenomenon excited the keenest interest. That star was a distant company of shining angels, but of this the wise men were ignorant. Yet they were impressed that the star was of special import to them. They consulted priests and philosophers, and searched the scrolls of the ancient records. The prophecy of Balaam had declared, "There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Scepter shall rise out of Israel." Num. 24:17. Could this strange star have been sent as a harbinger of the Promised One? The magi had welcomed the light of heaven-sent truth; now it was shed upon them in brighter rays. Through dreams they were instructed to go in search of the newborn Prince." – The Desire of Ages, by E. G. White, pg. 60.

Conclusion

So, if you have followed the above reasoning, based on the scriptural evidence, a case can apparently be made that Jesus Christ was born on the 15th day of the month of Tishri, on the first day of the Feast of Tabernacles, which corresponds to the September - October timeframe of our present calendar!

Jewish month	Begins the New moon of	John the Baptist	Jesus

Tabernacles Future Fulfillment

It is also interesting to note that Tabernacles was a feast of ingathering of the Harvest (Exo 23:16 and 34:22). If Jesus' first coming was indeed on 15 Tishri, the first day of Tabernacles, then it is quite reasonable to presume that the harvest of this earth, the ingathering of the second coming of Jesus Christ, will also occur on precisely the same date. The unknown factor would be the year that this would happen.

How December 25 Became Christmas

A blanket of snow covers the little town of Bethlehem, in Pieter Bruegel's oil painting from 1566. Although Jesus' birth is celebrated every year on December 25, Luke and the other gospel writers offer no hint about the specific time of year he was born. Scala/Art Resource, NY

On December 25, Christians around the world will gather to celebrate Jesus' birth. Joyful carols, special liturgies, brightly wrapped gifts, festive foods—these all characterize the feast today, at least in the northern hemisphere. But just how did the Christmas festival originate? How did December 25 come to be associated with Jesus' birthday?

The Bible offers few clues: Celebrations of Jesus' Nativity are not mentioned in the Gospels or Acts; the date is not given, not even the time of year. The biblical reference to shepherds tending their flocks at night when they hear the news of Jesus' birth (Luke 2:8) might suggest the spring lambing season; in the cold month of December, on the other hand, sheep might well have been corralled. Yet most scholars would urge caution about extracting such a precise but incidental detail from a narrative whose focus is theological rather than calendrical.

The extrabiblical evidence from the first and second century is equally spare: There is no mention of birth celebrations in the writings of early Christian writers such as Irenaeus (c. 130–200) or Tertullian (c. 160–225). Origen of Alexandria (c. 165–264) goes so far as to mock Roman celebrations of birth anniversaries, dismissing them as "pagan" practices—a strong indication that Jesus' birth was not marked with similar festivities at that place and time.1 As far as we can tell, Christmas was not celebrated at all at this point.

This stands in sharp contrast to the very early traditions surrounding Jesus' last days. Each of the Four Gospels provides detailed information about the time of Jesus' death. According to John, Jesus is crucified just as the Passover lambs are being sacrificed. This would have occurred on the 14th of the Hebrew month of Nisan, just before the Jewish holiday began at sundown (considered the beginning of the 15th day because in the Hebrew calendar, days begin at sundown). In Matthew, Mark and Luke, however, the Last Supper is held after sundown, on the beginning of the 15th. Jesus is crucified the next morning—still, the 15th.a

Easter, a much earlier development than Christmas, was simply the gradual Christian reinterpretation of Passover in terms of Jesus' Passion. Its observance could even be implied in the New Testament (1 Corinthians 5:7–8: "Our paschal lamb, Christ, has been sacrificed. Therefore let us celebrate the festival…"); it was certainly a distinctively Christian feast by the mid-second century C.E., when the apocryphal text known as the Epistle to the Apostles has Jesus instruct his disciples to "make commemoration of [his] death, that is, the Passover."

Jesus' ministry, miracles, Passion and Resurrection were often of most interest to first- and early-second-century C.E. Christian writers. But over time, Jesus' origins would become of increasing concern. We can begin to see this shift already in the New Testament. The earliest writings—Paul and Mark—make no mention of Jesus' birth. The Gospels of Matthew and Luke provide well-known but quite different accounts of the event—although neither specifies a date. In the second century C.E., further details of Jesus' birth and childhood are related in apocryphal writings such as the Infancy Gospel of Thomas and the Proto-Gospel of James.b These texts provide everything from the names of Jesus' grandparents to the details of his education—but not the date of his birth.

Finally, in about 200 C.E., a Christian teacher in Egypt makes reference to the date Jesus was born. According to Clement of Alexandria, several different days had been proposed by various Christian groups. Surprising as it may seem, Clement doesn't mention December 25 at all. Clement writes: "There are those who have determined not only the year of our Lord's birth, but also the day; and they say that it took place in the 28th year of Augustus, and in the 25th day of [the Egyptian month] Pachon [May 20 in our calendar] … And treating of His Passion, with very great accuracy, some say that it took place in the 16th year of Tiberius, on the 25th of Phamenoth [March 21]; and others on the 25th of Pharmuthi [April 21] and others say that on the 19th of Pharmuthi [April 15] the Savior suffered. Further, others say that He was born on the 24th or 25th of Pharmuthi [April 20 or 21]."2

Clearly there was great uncertainty, but also a considerable amount of interest, in dating Jesus' birth in the late second century. By the fourth century, however, we find references to two dates that were widely recognized—and now also celebrated—as Jesus' birthday: December 25 in the western Roman Empire and January 6 in the East (especially in Egypt and Asia Minor). The modern Armenian church continues to celebrate Christmas on January 6; for most Christians, however, December 25 would prevail, while January 6 eventually came to be known as the Feast of the Epiphany, commemorating the arrival of the magi in Bethlehem. The period between became the holiday season later known as the 12 days of Christmas.

The earliest mention of December 25 as Jesus' birthday comes from a mid-fourth-century Roman almanac that lists the death dates of various Christian bishops and martyrs. The first date listed, December 25, is marked: natus Christus in Betleem Judeae: "Christ was born in Bethlehem of Judea."3 In about 400 C.E., Augustine of Hippo mentions a local dissident Christian group, the Donatists, who apparently kept Christmas festivals on December 25, but refused to celebrate the Epiphany on January 6, regarding it as an innovation. Since the Donatist group only emerged during the persecution under Diocletian in 312 C.E. and then remained stubbornly attached to the practices of that moment in time, they seem to represent an older North African Christian tradition.

In the East, January 6 was at first not associated with the magi alone, but with the Christmas story as a whole.

So, almost 300 years after Jesus was born, we finally find people observing his birth in mid-winter. But how had they settled on the dates December 25 and January 6?

There are two theories today: one extremely popular, the other less often heard outside scholarly circles (though far more ancient).4

The most loudly touted theory about the origins of the Christmas date(s) is that it was borrowed from pagan celebrations. The Romans had their mid-winter Saturnalia festival in late December; barbarian peoples of northern and western Europe kept holidays at similar times. To top it off, in 274 C.E., the Roman emperor Aurelian established a feast of the birth of Sol Invictus (the Unconquered Sun), on December 25. Christmas, the argument goes, is really a spin-off from these pagan solar festivals. According to this theory, early Christians deliberately chose these dates to encourage the spread of Christmas and Christianity throughout the Roman world: If Christmas looked like a pagan holiday, more pagans would be open to both the holiday and the God whose birth it celebrated.

Despite its popularity today, this theory of Christmas's origins has its problems. It is not found in any ancient Christian writings, for one thing. Christian authors of the time do note a connection between the solstice and Jesus' birth: The church father Ambrose (c. 339–397), for example, described Christ as the true sun, who outshone the fallen gods of the old order. But early Christian writers never hint at any recent calendrical engineering; they clearly don't think the date was chosen by the church. Rather they see the coincidence as a providential sign, as natural proof that God had selected Jesus over the false pagan gods.

It's not until the 12th century that we find the first suggestion that Jesus' birth celebration was deliberately set at the time of pagan feasts. A marginal note on a manuscript of the writings of the Syriac biblical commentator Dionysius bar-Salibi states that in ancient times the Christmas holiday was actually shifted from January 6 to December 25 so that it fell on the same date as the pagan Sol Invictus holiday.5 In the 18th and 19th centuries, Bible scholars spurred on by the new study of comparative religions latched on to this idea.6 They claimed that because the early Christians didn't know when Jesus was born, they simply assimilated the pagan solstice festival for their own purposes, claiming it as the time of the Messiah's birth and celebrating it accordingly.

More recent studies have shown that many of the holiday's modern trappings do reflect pagan customs borrowed much later, as Christianity expanded into northern and western Europe. The Christmas tree, for example, has been linked with late medieval druidic practices. This has only encouraged modern audiences to assume that the date, too, must be pagan.

There are problems with this popular theory, however, as many scholars recognize. Most significantly, the first mention of a date for Christmas (c. 200) and the earliest celebrations that we know about (c. 250–300) come in a period when Christians were not borrowing heavily from pagan traditions of such an obvious character.

Granted, Christian belief and practice were not formed in isolation. Many early elements of Christian worship—including eucharistic meals, meals honoring martyrs and much early Christian funerary art—would have been quite comprehensible to pagan observers. Yet, in the first few centuries C.E., the persecuted Christian minority was greatly concerned with distancing itself from the larger, public pagan religious observances, such as sacrifices, games and holidays. This was still true as late as the violent persecutions of the Christians conducted by the Roman emperor Diocletian between 303 and 312 C.E.

This would change only after Constantine converted to Christianity. From the mid-fourth century on, we do find Christians deliberately adapting and Christianizing pagan festivals. A famous proponent of this practice was Pope Gregory the Great, who, in a letter written in 601 C.E. to a Christian missionary in Britain, recommended that local pagan temples not be destroyed but be converted into churches, and that pagan festivals be celebrated as feasts of Christian martyrs. At this late point, Christmas may well have acquired some pagan trappings. But we don't have evidence of Christians adopting pagan festivals in the third century, at which point dates for Christmas were established. Thus, it seems unlikely that the date was simply selected to correspond with pagan solar festivals.

The December 25 feast seems to have existed before 312—before Constantine and his conversion, at least. As we have seen, the Donatist Christians in North Africa seem to have known it from before that time. Furthermore, in the mid- to late fourth century, church leaders in the eastern Empire concerned themselves not with introducing a celebration of Jesus' birthday, but with the addition of the December date to their traditional celebration on January 6.7

There is another way to account for the origins of Christmas on December 25: Strange as it may seem, the key to dating Jesus' birth may lie in the dating of Jesus' death at Passover. This view was first suggested to the modern world by French scholar Louis Duchesne in the early 20th century and fully developed by American Thomas Talley in more recent years.8 But they were certainly not the first to note a connection between the traditional date of Jesus' death and his birth.

The baby Jesus flies down from heaven on the back of a cross, in this detail from Master Bertram's 14th-century Annunciation scene. Jesus' conception carried with it the promise of salvation through his death. It may be no coincidence, then, that the early church celebrated Jesus' conception and death on the same calendar day: March 25, exactly nine months before December 25. Kunsthalle, Hamburg/Bridgeman Art Library, NY

Around 200 C.E. Tertullian of Carthage reported the calculation that the 14th of Nisan (the day of the crucifixion according to the Gospel of John) in the year Jesus diedc was equivalent to March 25 in the Roman (solar) calendar.9 March 25 is, of course, nine months before December 25; it was later recognized as the Feast of the Annunciation—the commemoration of Jesus' conception.10 Thus, Jesus was believed to have been conceived and crucified on the same day of the year. Exactly nine months later, Jesus was born, on December 25.d

This idea appears in an anonymous Christian treatise titled On Solstices and Equinoxes, which appears to come from fourth-century North Africa. The treatise states: "Therefore our Lord was conceived on the eighth of the kalends of April in the month of March [March 25], which is the day of the passion of the Lord and of his conception. For on that day he was conceived on the same he suffered."11 Based on this, the treatise dates Jesus' birth to the winter solstice.

Augustine, too, was familiar with this association. In On the Trinity (c. 399–419) he writes: "For he [Jesus] is believed to have been conceived on the 25th of March, upon which day also he suffered; so the womb of the Virgin, in which he was conceived, where no one of mortals was begotten, corresponds to the new grave in which he was buried, wherein was never man laid, neither before him nor since. But he was born, according to tradition, upon December the 25th."12

In the East, too, the dates of Jesus' conception and death were linked. But instead of working from the 14th of Nisan in the Hebrew calendar, the easterners used the 14th of the first spring month (Artemisios) in their local Greek calendar—April 6 to us. April 6 is, of course, exactly nine months before January 6—the eastern date for Christmas. In the East, too, we have evidence that April was associated with Jesus' conception and crucifixion. Bishop Epiphanius of Salamis writes that on April 6, "The lamb was shut up in the spotless womb of the holy virgin, he who took away and takes away in perpetual sacrifice the sins of the world."13 Even today, the Armenian Church celebrates the Annunciation in early April (on the 7th, not the 6th) and Christmas on January 6.e

Thus, we have Christians in two parts of the world calculating Jesus' birth on the basis that his death and conception took place on the same day (March 25 or April 6) and coming up with two close but different results (December 25 and January 6).

Connecting Jesus' conception and death in this way will certainly seem odd to modern readers, but it reflects ancient and medieval understandings of the whole of salvation being bound up together. One of the most poignant expressions of this belief is found in Christian art. In numerous paintings of the angel's Annunciation to Mary—the moment of Jesus' conception—the baby Jesus is shown gliding down from heaven on or with a small cross (see photo above of detail from Master Bertram's Annunciation scene); a visual reminder that the conception brings the promise of salvation through Jesus' death.

The notion that creation and redemption should occur at the same time of year is also reflected in ancient Jewish tradition, recorded in the Talmud. The Babylonian Talmud preserves a dispute between two early-second-century C.E. rabbis who share this view, but disagree on the date: Rabbi Eliezer states: "In Nisan the world was created; in Nisan the Patriarchs were born; on Passover Isaac was born … and in Nisan they [our ancestors] will be redeemed in time to come." (The other rabbi, Joshua, dates these same events to the following month, Tishri.)14 Thus, the dates of Christmas and Epiphany may well have resulted from Christian theological reflection on such chronologies: Jesus would have been conceived on the same date he died, and born nine months later.15

In the end we are left with a question: How did December 25 become Christmas? We cannot be entirely sure. Elements of the festival that developed from the fourth century until modern times may well derive from pagan traditions. Yet the actual date might really derive more from Judaism—from Jesus' death at Passover, and from the rabbinic notion that great things might be expected, again and again, at the same time of the year—than from paganism. Then again, in this notion of cycles and the return of God's redemption, we may perhaps also be touching upon something that the pagan Romans who celebrated Sol Invictus, and many other peoples since, would have understood and claimed for their own, too.16

When Exactly Was Jesus Born?

The world was transfixed by the year 2000--worried about the 'Y2K' bug in computers, millennial madness in cult groups, political union in Europe, and a proposal to make Mary "co-redemptrix" in the Catholic Church. While Rome flirted with blasphemy, few realized that the true 2000th lunar anniversary of the birth of Jesus was August 22, 1998, or on September 11, 1998 by the solar calendar dating we now use.

Many may live to see the consequences of the anniversary, if it foreshadowed a coming fake Christ. Or at the least, there were dozens of lunatics eager to take advantage of the year 2000 hysteria to get the attention of the gullible.

Yet the 2000th anniversary of the Nativity actually came 475 days before year 2000 began. The correct anniversary date was about sundown, Jerusalem time, the end of the Sabbath, Saturday August 22, 1998.

How can we know the exact day--and nearly the hour--of the birth of Jesus?

Simple arithmatic. A child could have done it, if only the basic assumptions had been correct. But they weren't. In the 19th century, critical scholars made a crucial decision to reject a total lunar eclipse in January 1 BC and to accept instead one in March 4 BC, as the chronological cornerstone for dating the death of Herod the Great, and thereby, the possible birth years for Jesus.

By so doing, the critics could argue Jesus had to born before 4 BC, contradicting Luke, who tied Jesus' 30th year to the 15th year of Tiberius Caesar, 27-28 AD. Luke effectively placed the birth in 3 BC, as did many of the early church fathers. Ironically, even the date used by the Pope during the Christmas Eve midnight mass ritual is itself consistent with the last half of 3 BC.

The dirty little secret is that virtually all the available evidence has always pointed at the harvest period of 3 BC as the focal point of the Nativity--including the possibility of a late summer birth.

By rejecting Luke, scholars also threw out the date of the birth Luke gives in his Gospel. In his second chapter, Luke tells what happened the day Mary came to the Temple for purification 40 days after the birth of Jesus. All one has to know is what day this was. And Luke plainly names the day. In fact, he includes three statements identifying the day. So what day was this?

Yom Kippur. The Day of Atonement. The 10th day of the seventh month of the Hebrew calendar.

In Luke's time, Yom Kippur was called three things: The day of the "Fast," the day of the "Purification,"and the day of "Redemption." Luke uses all three to identify the day Jesus was brought to the Temple. And he even quotes the Torah rule that mandates the 40-day period for the mother to wait after the child's birth [Lk 2:22-38].

And if there were any doubt that it was Yom Kippur, Luke tells of a woman named Anna who had been in the Temple for a "night and day" without leaving. There was ONLY ONE DAY A YEAR when a person could pray overnight in the Temple: Yom Kippur. All other days, the Temple was locked at sundown.

This shows the 40th day of Mary's Purification had begun at the end of Yom Kippur, the end of the 10th day of the 7th month, because we know the Purification was done at the earliest opportunity--at the beginning of the 40th day after birth. And since the 6th month normally had only 29 days, simple arithmatic shows Mary's 39 days of Purification had to have begun around sundown on the 1st day of the 6th month, called Elul.

This was the night of the first sighting of the new moon of Elul. The Magi in Babylon were recording this sunset sliver of the new moon on a clay tablet. The cuneiform tablet the Magi made at that hour 2000 years ago, along with thousands of others from Babylon, resides in the British Museum. It is possible that this clay tablet was inscribed by one of the famous Magi who later brought a strange set of gifts to Bethlehem. So the new moon seen by the Magi in Babylon at the very moment of Jesus being born is recorded on one of the tablets now in London. Cuneiform scholars have identified the date on this tablet as equivalent to September, 11, 3 BC.

The Hebrew lunar calendar dates vary with respect to our solar calendar. So the 1st of Elul was September 11th in 3 BC, but began on August 22 in 1998. The same was true in the days of the early church, of course. In a given year, the 1st of Elul could have fallen on September 8th, for example.

This may solve another ancient mystery. No one seems to know how Rome came to honor September 8th as the birthday of Mary. There is no Biblical, historical, or church tradition to explain it. It just emerges out of nowhere. Rome keeps the 8th of December as the Feast of the Immaculate Conception of Mary [ie. conceived without original sin]. It is a holy day of obligation for all Catholics to attend Mass. This feast is clearly based upon September 8th also, and mortal sin is attached to the failure of a Catholic to observe it, yet the origins of these dates are unknown.

On the other hand, we can now see that if Jesus were born on September 11th as Luke indicates, then Jesus would have been conceived around December 8th in 4 BC. The now mysterious Mary dates fit Jesus quite well. How might this have happened?

In the late 4th century, in early 380 AD, Pope Damasus I was endeavoring to force all Christians in the Roman Empire to yield to his authority. He got the Emperor to issue an edict requiring them to practice the religion of Rome. We know that it is about this time the Christmas midnight Mass was first celebrated and December 25th first identified as a Catholic holy day. It is said Damasus was seeking to lure the people away from pagan rites honoring the birth of the sun god at midnight by compelling Catholic attendance at a memorial in honor of Christ's death, ie the Mass. The people confused this Mass with the pagan solar birth rituals conducted at that same time. Gradually, the Christ-Mass became associated with the Nativity.

Meanwhile, the true feast around September 8th, which naturally honored Mary in giving birth to Jesus, was converted into a day commemorating her own birth, and an old holyday honoring the conception of Jesus was converted into a day commemorating the conception of Mary on December 8th. Strangely, there is still widespread belief among non-Catholics that this is the day Jesus was concieved--a possible lingering remembrance of the original meaning of this date.

We can also tell from Luke's Gospel that Jesus had been born in early evening, for Luke says the shepherds were keeping watch by night, but still had time to go into town and tell the people what they had seen earlier that evening. People rose early with the sun in those days, and would have been asleep by 9 or 10 pm. Therefore, the birth had taken place no later than 8 pm, and probably before 7 pm. Yet Luke says it happened at night, which means after sunset--surely after 6 pm in September. Hence, it follows that Jesus was born within a few minutes of 6:30-7:30 pm on the evening of September 11th, 3 BC.

A confirmation of this time is in the book of Revelation. Historian Ernest L. Martin consulted NASA lunar-phase tables and found the image of the heavens in Revelation 12 showed where the sun and the moon were, relative to Virgo, at the time Jesus was born, pin-pointing sunset of September 11th of 3 BC. It seems the moon moves so quickly it is "beneath the feet" of Virgo only a few hours every month. Moreover, the moon comes within two lunar diameters of Virgo's feet at the time of a new moon but once in 30 years. The only such occurance any time near the birth of Jesus was on September 11th, 3 BC.

Most previous attempts at determining the birth time were based upon astrology and dating the Star of Bethlehem. No one considered 3 BC because that year had erroneously been assumed to follow Herod's death. However, Dr. Martin has proven that Herod did not die in 4 BC, but in 1 BC. Scholars are now generally accepting the new chronology for Herod, and this in turn has allowed the confirmation of the New Testament date for the birth of Jesus. Unfortunately, many churches continue to promote the critics' errors and paganized traditions about the Nativity.

Jesus: Christ / Messiah

Christ

What does Christ mean?

https://www.gotquestions.org/what-does-Christ-mean.html

Question: "What does Christ mean?"

Answer: To the surprise of some, “Christ” is not Jesus’ last name (surname). “Christ” comes from the Greek word Christos, meaning “anointed one” or “chosen one.” This is the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew word Mashiach, or “Messiah.” “Jesus” is the Lord’s human name given to Mary by the angel Gabriel (Luke 1:31). “Christ” is His title, signifying Jesus was sent from God to be a King and Deliverer (see Daniel 9:25; Isaiah 32:1). “Jesus Christ” means “Jesus the Messiah” or “Jesus the Anointed One.”

In ancient Israel, when someone was given a position of authority, oil was poured on his head to signify his being set apart for God’s service (e.g., 1 Samuel 10:1). Kings, priests, and prophets were anointed in such fashion. Anointing was a symbolic act to indicate God’s choosing (e.g., 1 Samuel 24:6). Although the literal meaning of anointed refers to the application of oil, it can also refer to one’s consecration by God, even if literal oil is not used (Hebrews 1:9).

There are hundreds of prophetic passages in the Old Testament that refer to a coming Messiah who would deliver His people (e.g., Isaiah 61:1; Daniel 9:26). Ancient Israel thought their Messiah would come with military might to deliver them from decades of captivity to earthly kings and pagan nations. But the New Testament reveals a much better deliverance provided by Jesus the Messiah—a deliverance from the power and penalty of sin (Luke 4:18; Romans 6:23).

The Bible says Jesus was anointed with oil on two separate occasions by two different women (Matthew 26:6–7; Luke 7:37–38), but the most significant anointing came by way of the Holy Spirit (Acts 10:38). Jesus’ title of “Christ” means He is God’s Anointed One, the One who fulfills the Old Testament prophecies, the Chosen Savior who came to rescue sinners (1 Timothy 1:15), and the King of kings who is coming back again to set up His Kingdom on earth (Zechariah 14:9).

Christ [N] [H] [S]

anointed, the Greek translation of the Hebrew word rendered "Messiah" (q.v.), the official title of our Lord, occurring five hundred and fourteen times in the New Testament. It denotes that he was anointed or consecrated to his great redemptive work as Prophet, Priest, and King of his people. He is Jesus the Christ (Acts 17:3 ; 18:5 ; Matthew 22:42), the Anointed One. He is thus spoken of by (Isaiah 61:1), and by (Daniel 9:24-26), who styles him "Messiah the Prince."

The Messiah is the same person as "the seed of the woman" (Genesis 3:15), "the seed of Abraham" (Genesis 22:18), the "Prophet like unto Moses" (Deuteronomy 18:15), "the priest after the order of Melchizedek" (Psalms 110:4), "the rod out of the stem of Jesse" (Isaiah 11:1 Isaiah 11:10), the "Immanuel," the virgin's son (Isaiah 7:14), "the branch of Jehovah" (Isaiah 4:2), and "the messenger of the covenant" (Malachi 3:1). This is he "of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write." The Old Testament Scripture is full of prophetic declarations regarding the Great Deliverer and the work he was to accomplish. Jesus the Christ is Jesus the Great Deliverer, the Anointed One, the Saviour of men. This name denotes that Jesus was divinely appointed, commissioned, and accredited as the Saviour of men (Hebrews 5:4 ; Isaiah 11:2-4 ; 49:6 ; John 5:37 ; Acts 2:22).

To believe that "Jesus is the Christ" is to believe that he is the Anointed, the Messiah of the prophets, the Saviour sent of God, that he was, in a word, what he claimed to be. This is to believe the gospel, by the faith of which alone men can be brought unto God. That Jesus is the Christ is the testimony of God, and the faith of this constitutes a Christian (1 Corinthians 12:3 ; 1 John 5:1).

What does “Christ” actually mean?

https://ourrabbijesus.com/articles/what-does-the-word-christ-actually-mean/

What does it mean to speak of Jesus as the “Christ”?

This word is one of the most important, basic words in a Christian’s vocabulary. But it isn’t until you dig into the Bible’s ancient context that you that see its surprising imagery and some of its most important implications.

First of all, the word “Christ” comes from christos, a Greek word meaning “anointed.” It is the equivalent of the word mashiach, or Messiah, in Hebrew. So, to be the Christ, or Messiah, is to be “the anointed one of God.”

But what does that mean?

To be anointed, literally, is to have sacred oil poured on one’s head, because God has chosen the person for a special task. Priests and kings were anointed, and occasionally prophets. Kings were anointed during their coronation rather than receiving a crown.

Even though prophets and priests were anointed, the phrase “anointed one” or “the Lord’s anointed” was most often used to refer to a king. For instance, David used it many times to refer to King Saul, even when Saul was trying to murder David and David was on the verge of killing Saul to defend himself:

Far be it from me because of the LORD that I should do this thing to my lord, the LORD’S anointed (mashiach), to stretch out my hand against him, since he is the LORD’S anointed (mashiach). (1 Samuel 24:6)

The overriding biblical imagery of the word “Messiah” or “Christ” is that of a king chosen by God. Often in the Old Testament, God would tell a prophet to go anoint someone and proclaim him king. The act of anointing with sacred oil emphasized that it was God himself who had ordained a person and given him authority to act as his representative.

I remember being quite surprised when I first learned this. If you would have asked me to describe Jesus’ identity, “Son of God” or “Suffering Savior” would have been my two best guesses. “King” didn’t even make the list. While Jesus also has a priestly and a prophetic role, the prominent idea within the title “Christ” is actually that of a king.

Hints of a Coming King

If you look more closely, you’ll see that this is indeed the messianic idea throughout the Bible. Throughout the Old Testament, we see little hints that God would send a great king to Israel who would someday rule the world. In Genesis, when Jacob blesses each of his sons and foretells his future, he says of Judah:

The scepter will not depart from Judah, nor the ruler's staff from between his feet, until he comes to whom it belongs and the obedience of the nations is his. (Genesis 49:10)

This is the first hint that they were expecting a great king to arise out of Israel who would be king over the whole earth.

The clearest prophecy about the future messianic king comes from King David's time. David earnestly desired to build a temple, a "house" for God, but God responded that his son Solomon would be the one to build his temple. But then God went on to promise he would build a "house" for David, meaning that God would establish his family line after him. He further promised that from David's family would come a king whose kingdom will have no end:

When your days are over and you go to be with your fathers, I will raise up your offspring to succeed you, one of your own sons, and I will establish his kingdom. He is the one who will build a house for me, and I will establish his throne forever. I will be his father, and he will be my son. I will never take my love away from him, as I took it away from your predecessor. I will set him over my house and my kingdom forever; his throne will be established forever. (1 Chronicles 17:11-14)

This prophecy has been understood as having a double fulfillment. It is first fulfilled in Solomon, who built the temple, but did what God forbade—amassed a great fortune and married foreign wives. His kingdom broke apart a few years after his death. But this prophecy looks forward to a "Son of David" who would come, who would have a kingdom without end. This, in fact, is the seedbed of all of the messianic prophecies that speak of the "son of David" and the coming messianic king.

Jesus as the Christ

Often the gospels use cultural images of kingship to proclaim Jesus as the Christ, God's anointed King who has come. When a king arose with great power, other kingdoms would send emissaries with lavish gifts to establish a friendly relationship with the future leader. This is what is happening in Matthew 2, when wise men come to bring gifts to Christ, the newborn king whose star they have seen in the east.

This was a fulfillment of Numbers 24:17, Isaiah 60, and Psalm 72. The latter two passages both describe the coming of a great king and describe how representatives from nations everywhere would come to give him tribute:

The kings of Tarshish and of distant shores will bring tribute to him; the kings of Sheba and Seba will present him gifts. All kings will bow down to him and all nations will serve him. Psalm 72: 10-11

We see yet another picture of Jesus as King when he rode on a donkey into Jerusalem. This was often part of the annunciation of a new king, as it was for Solomon in 1 Kings 1:38-39. It is the fulfillment of Zechariah 9:9, the triumphal entry of the messianic king.

Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion! Shout, O daughter of Jerusalem! Behold, your king is coming to you! He is just and endowed with salvation; humble, and mounted on a donkey, on a colt, the foal of a donkey.

And, during Jesus' trial, the main question that he is asked is "Are you the King of the Jews?", which he answered affirmatively:

And they began to accuse him, saying, "We found this man misleading our nation and forbidding to pay taxes to Caesar, and saying that he himself is Christ, a King." So Pilate asked him, saying, "Are You the King of the Jews?" And he answered him and said, "It is as you say." (Luke 23:2-3)

What are the implications of Jesus as King?

When you think about Jesus' time on earth, the last thing you may think of is of a reigning king. But Jesus explained that his kingdom was not of this world (John 18:37). Rather, Jesus was talking about the kingdom of God, the major focus of his preaching. The kingdom of God is made up of those who submit their lives to God to reign over them.

As the King that God has sent, and of course because he is God, the kingdom of God is Jesus' kingdom. He speaks about how it is expanding like yeast or mustard seed as the news goes forth that he has arrived and people accept him as King. When he returns in glory, every knee on earth will bow to honor him as King (Philippians 2:9).

Did the people around him see him as a king? The fact that Jesus' disciples and others who believed in him referred to him as "Lord" suggests that they were giving him great honor, with the understanding that he was the Messianic King. To call Jesus "Lord" was to use a term for addressing royalty, like saying "Your Majesty" or "Your Highness." It is also a common term for addressing God himself, and hints of worshiping Jesus as God.

To use the word "Lord" displays an attitude of obedient submission to a greater power. Jesus seems even to expect that those who call him Lord obey him. To his listeners he asked, "Why do you call Me, 'Lord, Lord,' and do not do what I say?" (Luke 6:46). To call him "Lord" or to call him Jesus "Christ" is to say that he is the King that God has sent who has a right to reign over us.

This has implications about how we define ourselves as Christians. Usually, we talk in terms of doctrines and beliefs, but the very word "Christ" calls us to more than assenting to a creed. If Christ means King, a Christian is one who considers Jesus his Lord and King, and submits to his reign.

Paul too proclaims that salvation comes through faith in the atoning work of Jesus, as well as a commitment to honor him as one's personal Lord and King:

If you confess with your mouth Jesus as Lord, and believe in your heart that God raised him from the dead, you will be saved. (Romans 10:9)

Christ in Biblical Greek

Χριστος

http://www.abarim-publications.com/Meaning/Christ.html

The name Christ: Summary

Meaning

Anointed, Sovereign

Etymology

From the noun χριστος (christos), anointed or sovereign.

The name Christ in the Bible

Christ, or christos is not really a name but an appellative, or even a title. It describes an appointment; a function in the theocratic structure of Israel, namely that of high priest, prophet or king; anybody who had no earthly superior and worked directly for God.

There were quite a few "Christs" at large in Israel at any given time, and although Matthew mentions that Jesus of Nazareth was called Christ (Matthew 1:16), he was never the only one.

The word χριστος (christos) occurs 565 times in the New Testament; see full concordance.

Etymology and meaning of the name Christ

The noun χριστος (christos), meaning anointed, comes from the Greek verb χριω (chrio), meaning to smear or anoint:

Excerpted from: Abarim Publications' Biblical Dictionary

χριω

The verb χριω (chrio) means to smear or anoint. Ritualistically, the act of anointing was performed upon people who had no earthly superior and were as such sovereigns (kings, priests, prophets).

This verb's most striking derivation is the noun χριστος (christos), which describes someone who is a sovereign: someone who answers only to the Creator and not to any human.

In Hebrew this verb is משח (mashah), and the noun is the familiar word משיח (mashiah).

So yes, the literal meaning of the name Christ is Anointed, but practically it means much rather Inaugurated or even Highest Earthly Rank. Politically speaking, it describes the Individual's Autonomy, as opposed to a political system in which one person or a few people exert absolute power over the rest (read our article on the name Antichrist).

There were many more phrases and names from the Old Testament to label the Son of God with (Branch, Prince of Peace, Corner Stone), but the label Christ became such a hit probably because of its political implications.

The Christ and Rome

In their wonderful book In Search Of Paul, authors Crossan and Reed argue that much of Paul's signature theological phraseology was in fact a direct response (and insurrectionary response) to Roman imperial theology. Since in Rome, politics and theology were the same, calling Jesus the Christ (or the Hebrew equivalent Messiah — John 1:41) was not so much an act of worship to God but much more an act of high treason against Roman imperial theology. Subsequently, the proclaimed Christ died a political death: on the cross.

To modern readers the name Christ doesn't mean anything other than it being the surname of Jesus, but in the time that the Bible was written it was a commonly understood title of the rightful king of Israel. The phrases "Son Of God," Redeemer, and "Savior of the World" came straight from the Romans and were originally applied to Caesar Augustus, son of the deified Julius Caesar.

Even the title "son of God" and the word monogenes, meaning only-begotten, a word made famous by John 3:16, is applied in the Bible to quite a few others (see below). And to make matters worse: even the name Jesus was quite common in the time of the Bible and there are five separate individuals named Jesus mentioned in the Bible (see our article on the name Jesus).

Title flexibility

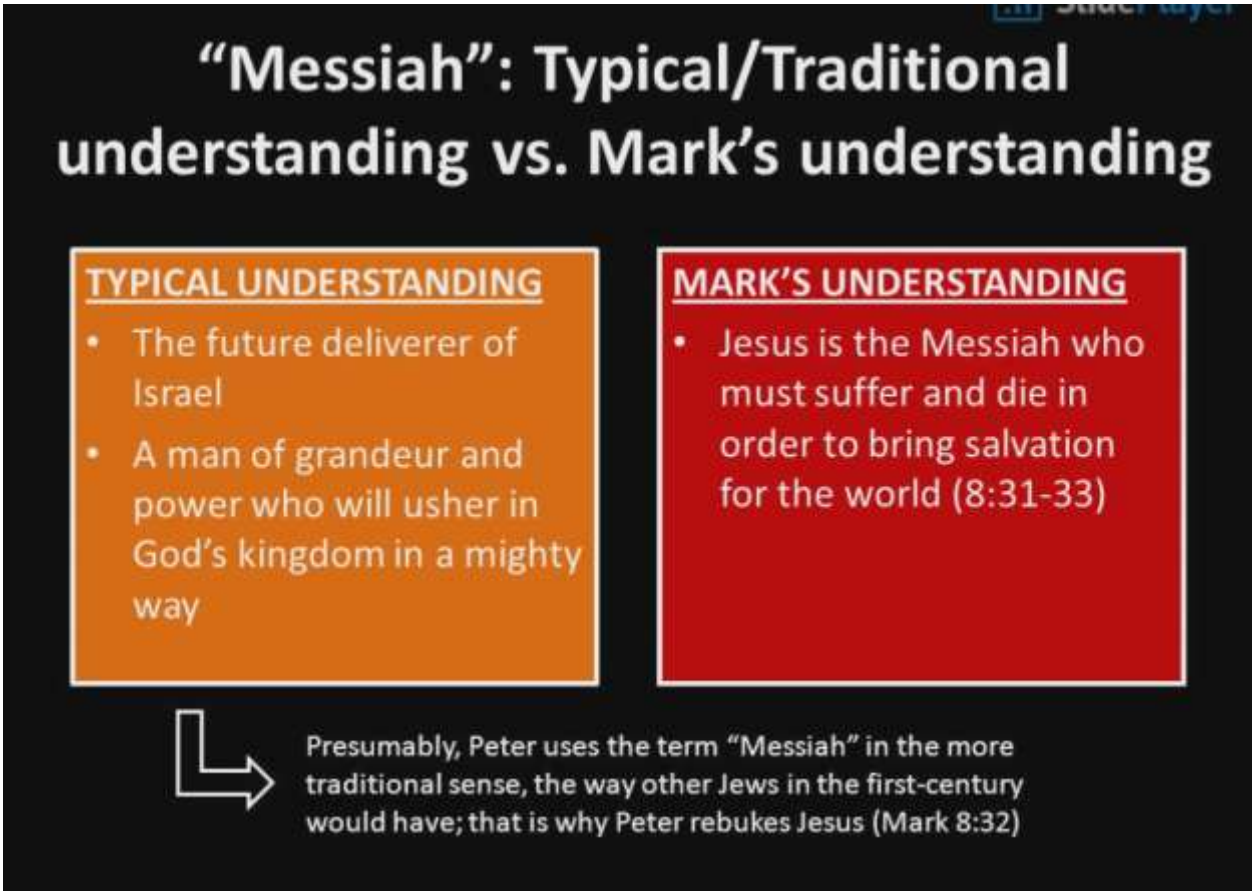
It seems that there are not many titles of Christ that are exclusively his. After his death and resurrection, the apostle Paul depicted him mostly as the Crucified Christ (where the English word crucify is also a misnomer, since the Greek word that Paul uses means "lifted up" — Paul speaks of the Elevated Christ).

When under emperor Constantine Christianity became the empire's main religion, Christ quickly became known as Pantokrator, or All-Ruler, a phrase drawn from the Septuagint (and please read our article on the name Nazarene for a closer look at this). During the time of the great plague, Christ became the Man of Sorrows. The Reformation brought the Bible into the common home, and Jesus became mostly depicted as one of us, a sympathetic teacher with his friends and followers.

In our day and age of individual freedom, Christ is depicted in all possible ways, with all available skin colors and attire, even up to Catholicism Wow's nice tried but still wholly atrocious Buddy Christ.

Since Paul says that the Spirit searches all things (1 Corinthians 2:10), perhaps we should start calling him the Great Search Engine. Or since in him and by him everything was made, and in him all things hold together (Colossians 1:17), perhaps The Great Server would apply. Perhaps not. But all these various depictions show that no matter how intimate Christ is experienced, or how much reverence we feel for him, his ultimate personality or even most fundamental function is utterly difficult to grasp.

The great uniquity of Jesus Christ is not that he is the Christ, or that he is a teacher or even a son of God; his ultimate uniquity is that he died but wouldn't stay dead. And that not just because he rose (because even that has a few Biblical precedents in Lazarus and the widow's son of Luke 7:11-16, the boy whom Elijah the Tishbite raised in 1 Kings 17:17-24 and the Shunammite's son whom Elisha raised in 2 Kings 4:35) but because there was nothing in this world that could keep him dead. His victory over death at Golgotha, by the sheer merit of his identity, is big enough for us all to enjoy. In Christ, all of us are immortal.



So yes, the name Christ means Anointed, but with a very big footnote.

Messiah (Christ)

Messiah is the Hebrew word for “the anointed one”. Christ is the equivalent Greek word.

The Jews had a typical/traditional understanding of what the Messiah would do when he appeared. Mark and the other disciples in the Bible eventually came to a different understanding/realization…

Note: There are no narrative parables that are associated with the Gospel of John, just allegories. (Most scholars do not regard John 15:1-8 [“the Vine and the Branches”] as a parable in the strict sense).

Jesus and the OT

An apparently distinctive feature of Jesus' understanding of OT Scripture was that it was fulfilled: not soon to be fulfilled, as at Qumran, but actually fulfilled in his ministry. The casting out of demons was tangible evidence that the kingdom of God had come upon those in his presence (Luke 11:20). This proclamation of the kingdom ('The kingdom of God is at hand!') is drawn from passages in Isaiah (* e.g. 40:9; 52:7; 61:1), through the interpretive lens of the Aramaic synagogue: 'The kingdom of your God is revealed!' (* Targum of Isaiah 40:9; 52:7). Jesus' proclamation of the fulfilment of Scripture thus established the hermeneutical matrix, in the light of which the NT interprets and utilizes the OT.

Jesus: Son of God, Son of man.

During Jesus' earthly ministry He sometime demonstrated the qualities of full humanity and sometime the qualities of full diety. For example:

As a man Jesus . . .	As God Jesus . . .
Became weary.	Invited the weary to find rest in Him.
Became hungry.	Presented Himself as the bread of life.
Became thirsty.	Claimed to be the water of life.
Suffered great agony.	Was impervious to suffering and healed the afflictions of others.
Grew in favor with God and man.	Is the same yesterday, today, and forever.
Experienced temptation.	Could not experience temptation.
Said He didn't know some things.	Is omniscient.
Was present in only one place at a time.	Is omnipresent.
Operated in the power of the Holy Spirit.	Operated in His own power and authority.
Said the Father was greater than He.	Claimed that He and the Father are equal.
Prayed.	Received and answered the prayers of others.
Wept at the tomb of the dead.	Raised the dead.
Asked who people said He was.	Knew what people were thinking.
Asked why God had forsaken Him.	Claimed that God was always with Him.
Died.	Is eternal and gives eternal life to those who trust Him.
Was God's ideal man.	Is man's ideal God.

These are some of the paradoxes involved in the dual divine-human natures of Christ following His incarnation. It's because of these paradoxes that we sometimes have difficulty understanding the accounts of Jesus' words and works in the Gospels. He was like no other person, not because He was not fully human but because He was also fully God.

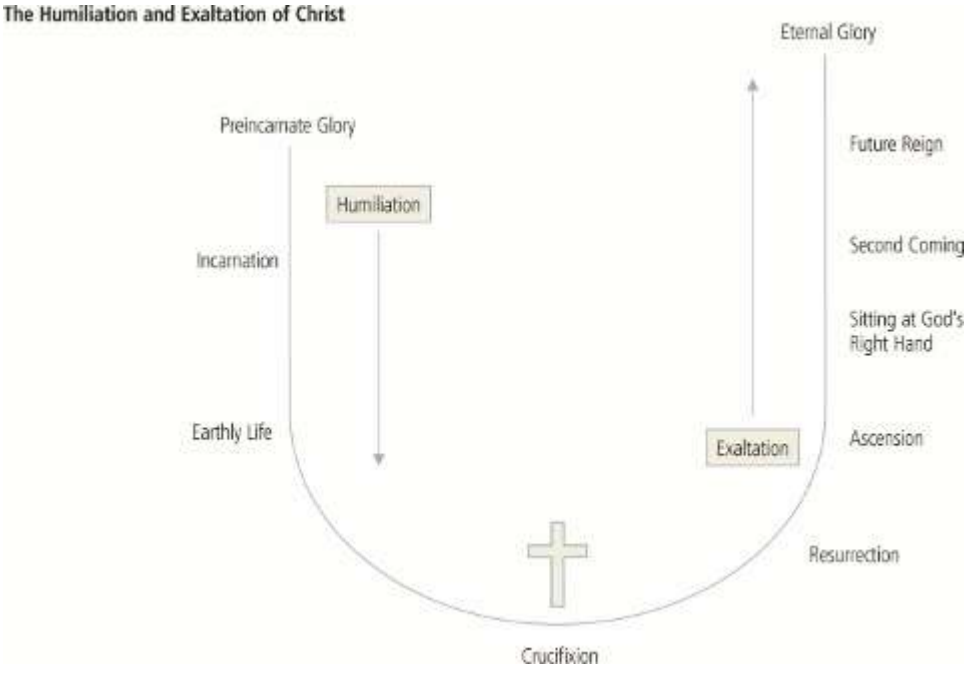
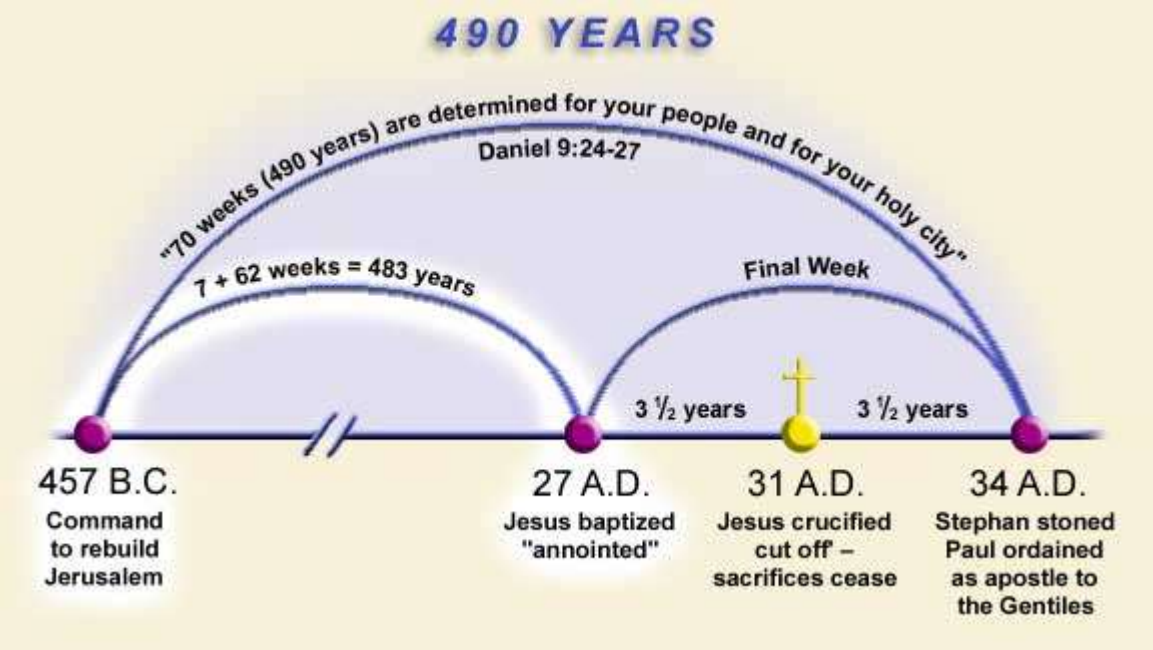
The Stages of Christ's Work



There is perhaps no more comprehensive yet concise statement on the work of Christ than Philippians 2:5-11:

> Have this mind among yourselves, which is yours in Christ Jesus, who, though he was in the form of God, did not count equality with God a thing to be grasped, but made himself nothing, taking the form of a servant, being born in the likeness of men. And being found in human form, he humbled himself by becoming obedient to the point of death, even death on a cross. Therefore God has highly exalted him and bestowed on him the name that is above every name, so that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, in heaven and on earth and under the earth, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

These verses teach the profound humility and eventual exaltation of Christ in the history of salvation. The key sequence set out here has been described as the 10 stages of Christ's work, divided into a humiliation phase and an exaltation phase. The stages are: (1) preincarnate glory; (2) incarnation; (3) earthly life; (4) crucifixion; (5) resurrection; (6) ascension; (7) sitting at God's right hand; (8) second coming; (9) future reign (some think this will be a millennial reign; see Introduction to Revelation); (10) eternal glory.



The 10 stages and two phases can be visualized as shown in the diagram doctrine-03.

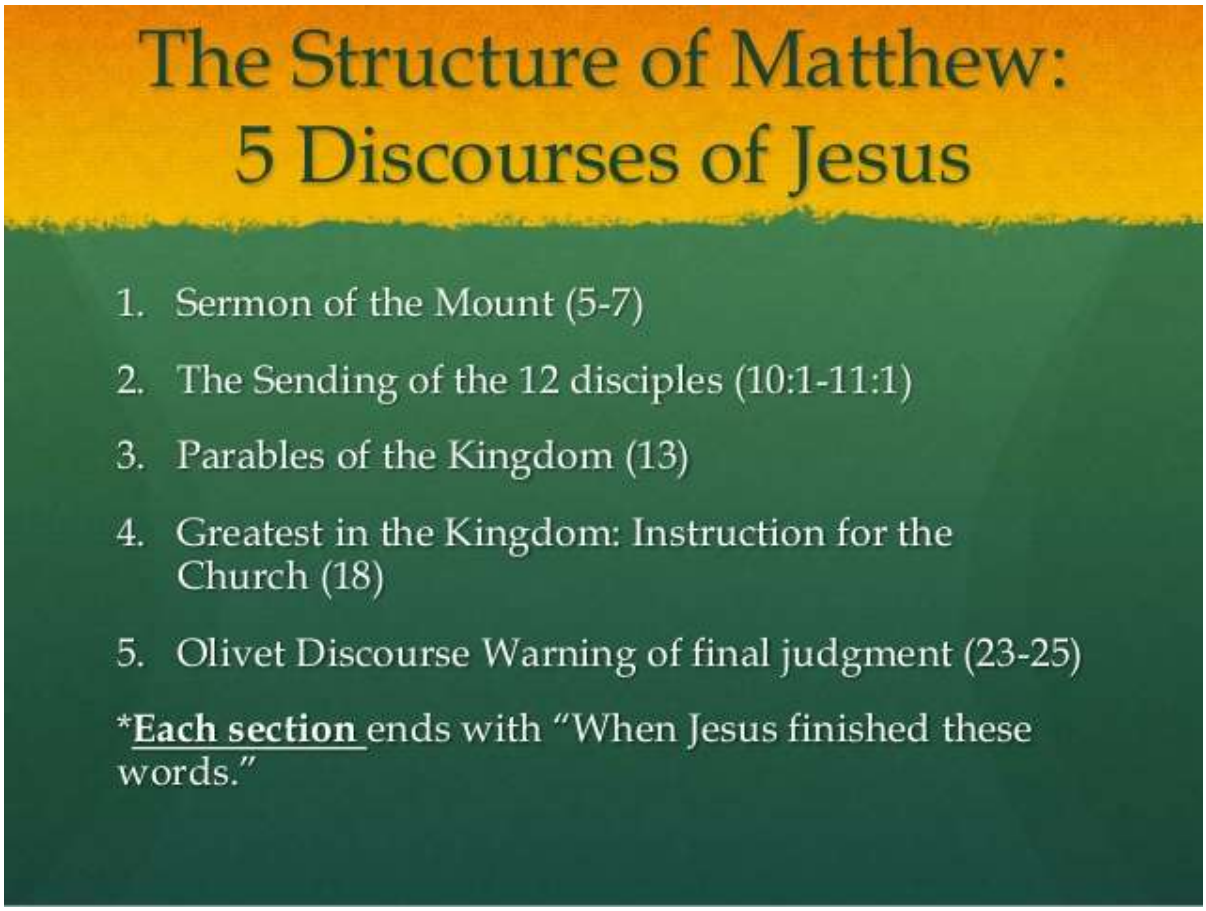
The Five Discourses of Matthew

In Christianity, the term Five Discourses of Matthew refers to five specific discourses by Jesus within the Gospel of Matthew.

The five discourses are listed as the following: the Sermon on the Mount, the Missionary Discourse, the Parabolic Discourse, the Discourse on the Church, and the Discourse on End Times (or Olivet Discourse).



Each of the discourses has a shorter parallel in the Gospel of Mark or the Gospel of Luke.

The Gospel of Matthew contains five long speeches (discourses) of Jesus. Many Bible scholars organize the Gospel of Matthew around these speeches. However, it is important to note that four out of the five speeches occur during Jesus' ministry in Galilee, before he travels south to enter the city of Jerusalem.

Our text for the next two weeks in the Narrative Lectionary brings us into the fifth, and final, discourse. Jesus speaks these words to his disciples while sitting on the mount of Olives, looking at Jerusalem across the valley.

Without buying into the priority of Mark's gospel, you can appreciate the visual representation of the structure of Matthew's gospel, below.

While Matthew has much in common with Mark, there are two important structural differences. First, Matthew adds new material to the beginning and the end of Mark's account.

. . . Second, Matthew adds into Mark's mainly action-packed story five blocks of teaching by Jesus.

Although Matthew takes over almost all of Mark's material, he is not constrained by Mark's order. Matthew adopts a more topical arrangement and sometimes significantly changes the order in which Mark describes things.

Olivet Discourse (Jesus's Teaching on the Mount of Olives)

Question: "What is the Olivet Discourse?"

Answer: The Olivet Discourse is the name given to the orderly and extended teaching given by Jesus Christ on the Mount of Olives. His subject is the end times. This discourse is recorded in Matthew 24:1 – 25:46. Parallel passages are found in Mark 13:1-37 and Luke 21:5-36. The record in Matthew is the most extensive, so reference here will be to Matthew's Gospel.

It is important to recognize that Jesus' teaching in this discourse is in reference to Israel and not the Church. Christ was speaking of God's future program for Israel. Other passages to consider when studying the Olivet Discourse are Daniel 9:24-27 and Revelation 6:1 – 19:21, which refer to the future seven-year period called the tribulation. God's program for the Church concludes with the rapture, which is not taught in the Olivet Discourse. The rapture of the Church is found in John 14:1-4; 1 Corinthians 15:51-52; and 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18.

In Matthew 23, Jesus had spoken to the Pharisees concerning judgment. This can be seen in the "woe" statements in that chapter. In 24:1, Jesus was leaving the temple when the disciples called His attention to the magnificent buildings on the temple mount. Jesus then tells the disciples that "not one stone here will be left on another; every one will be thrown down" (verse 2). This prophecy was literally fulfilled in A.D. 70 when the Romans destroyed Jerusalem. The temple was burned. The gold in the temple melted in the fire and ran down into the cracks between the stones. As people later searched for the gold, they toppled every stone from its place. This destruction of Jerusalem was but a foreshadowing of what is yet to come.

Jesus' prophecy of doom got the disciples curious, and probably more than a little concerned. When they were alone with Jesus on the Mount of Olives, they asked Him, "Tell us, when will these things be, and what will be the sign of Your coming, and of the end of the age?" (verse 3). What follows in Matthew 24–25 refers to the future, seven-year tribulation period and the second coming of Christ at the end of the tribulation. During that time, God will complete His chastisement and purification of Israel and judge the whole world (Daniel 9:24-27; Revelation 6–19)…

What is the Olivet Discourse?

The Olivet Discourse is the last major teaching section of Jesus, that he gave on the Mount of Olives, as recorded in Matthew, Mark, and Luke (Matthew 24:3-25:46; Mark 13:3-37; Luke 21:5-36). It deals with the signs of Christ's return and events associated with it. Matthew has the longest version and begins with the disciples asking Jesus when the Temple will be destroyed, when Christ will return, and what will be the end of the age (Matthew 24:3).

The basic structure of the Olivet Discourse is as follows.

Topic	Matthew	Mark	Luke
Signs of Christ's return accompanied by wars and tribulation.	24:4-8	13:5-8	21:7-11
False prophets will arise along with persecution	24:9-14	13:9-13	21:12-19
The abomination of desolation	24:15-22	13:14-23	21:20-24
The return of Christ	24:29-51	13:24-37	21:25-38

The Olivet Discourse is preceded by Jesus exposing the hypocrisy and false teachings of the Pharisees (Matthew 23:1-39; Mark 12:13-40; Luke 20:1-47). In Matthew it is followed by the parable of the 10 virgins (Matthew 25:1-13), the parable of the talents (Matthew 25:14-30), and the judgment that will come with Christ's return (Matthew 25:31-46). In Mark is followed by the Passover in the Lord's Supper (Mark 14:1-31). In Luke 22:1-23 it is followed by The Passover account and the Lord's Supper…

Olivet Commentary by Dr. Daniel Wallace (re: Matthew, Mark, Luke)

Was the Olivet Discourse a vaticinium ex eventu (a prophecy after the fact)? It is safe to say that the assumption that it was is the single most important reason for overturning an early date (pre-70) for Matthew. However, two considerations argue against this supposition.

(a) Most importantly, only if one categorically denies the possibility of genuine prophecy on the lips of Jesus would the date of Matthew have to be later than 70 CE. But if Jesus spoke predictive prophecy, then there would be no necessity in placing the synoptic gospels so late.

(b) Robinson has pointed out that the specifics of the Olivet Discourse do not altogether match what we know of the Jewish War. He states, for example, that "'the abomination of desolation' cannot itself refer to the destruction of the sanctuary in August 70 or to its desecration by Titus' soldiers in sacrificing to their standards. [Furthermore,] By that time it was far too late for anyone in Judaea to take to the hills, which had been in enemy hands since the end of 67."[30] He adds that "if Matthew intended the reader to 'understand' in the prediction events lying by then in the past he has certainly given him no help."[31] And, most significantly, that "it is significant therefore that in 24.29, 'the distress of those days' (i.e., on the assumption of ex eventu prophecy, the Judaean war) is to be followed 'immediately' (εὐθέως) by the coming of the Son of Man . . . This makes it extraordinarily difficult to believe that Matthew could deliberately be writing during the interval between the Jewish war and the parousia."[32] Finally, Robinson concludes, "I fail to see any motive for preserving, let alone inventing, prophecies long after the dust had settled in Judaea, unless it be to present Jesus as prognosticator of uncanny accuracy (in which case the evangelists have defeated the exercise by including palpably unfulfilled predictions)."[33]

In other words, since this prophecy is not altogether accurate, it most certainly cannot be a prophecy ex eventu. I find Robinson's argument quite compelling at this point, with one quibble: the prophecy was completely accurate, but it has not yet been completely fulfilled. Just as the separation in time between the Lord's first and second comings was unforeseen by the OT prophets, so also the separation in time between the destruction of Jerusalem and Jesus' return were unforeseen by Jesus himself (cf. Matt 24:36). Robinson's argument is a tour de force for a pre-66 date of the synoptic gospels, and, inadvertently, for an “earnest” fulfillment of the Olivet Discourse (in which the ultimate fulfillment still lay ahead).

The Olivet Discourse in the synoptic gospels was not entirely fulfilled in the Jewish War. hence, it is doubtful that for any of them it could be a vaticinium ex eventu. Most scholars hold to Markan priority and that Mark was written at the beginning of the Jewish War. If we could treat Mark in isolation of the other gospels, this might make sense.[19] But this approach fails to explain both the vagueness and unfilled predictions in Matthew's and Luke’s Olivet Discourse. Hence, if Matthew and Luke are dated before 66 CE, Mark must precede them by some time. As Guthrie notes, “the key item in the internal evidence is the reference in Mark 13:14 to the ‘abomination that causes desolation.’ . . . If it be admitted that Jesus himself predicted the event, Mark 13:14 would cease to be a crux . . . The phrase used to describe the event is of such vagueness . . . that it is even more reasonable to assume that it belongs to a time well before the actual happenings.”[20]

Was the Olivet Discourse a vaticinium ex eventu (a prophecy after the fact)? It is safe to say that the assumption that it was is the single most important reason for overturning an early date (pre-70) for Luke (as it was for Matthew and Mark). We have dealt with this in our discussion of Matthew’s date and simply need to summarize our two points here: (a) only a denial of the possibility of predictive prophecy on the lips of Jesus would necessitate a late date; (b) the synoptic gospels are both vague and imprecise in their prophecies assuming that those prophecies were fulfilled in the Jewish War; but if there is more to come, and if the Olivet Discourse was given before 66 CE, then the discourse makes sense.

Understanding the Olivet Discourse
https://israelmyglory.org/article/understanding-the-olivet-discourse/

Excerpt:

There has been considerable discussion as to whether the Olivet Discourse was fulfilled in the past or is yet to be fulfilled, as futurists believe. Historicists have held that most of the events described (except Christ's advent) have been fulfilled. Preterists contend all events (including the advent) were specifically fulfilled in A.D. 70. The disciples had also presumed a connection between the Temple's destruction and the Messianic advent. Jesus gave the Olivet Discourse to correct this misunderstanding and protect the disciples from becoming deceived as a result of the events that would take place in their generation, since Jesus would not bodily return to restore Israel and establish the Messianic Kingdom after Rome razed the Temple.[3]

Therefore, Jesus began His discourse with a warning: "'Take heed that no one deceives you'" (v. 4). Failing to understand this warning, preterists have been led astray in their interpretation, being forced to spiritualize prophecy in an attempt to force a first-century fulfillment. However, what the disciples saw as connected events, Jesus explained were chronological and sequential but would not all occur within the same time frame.

Despite the terrible conditions of the Tribulation, one of the greatest evangelistic outreaches in history is predicted: "'And this gospel of the kingdom will be preached in all the world as a witness to all the nations, and then the end will come'" (Mt. 24:14).

This global message, while having the same elements as the gospel of grace, that is, faith in Jesus as Savior, focuses on repentance concerning Messiah's coming to overthrow the nations and establish the Messianic Kingdom for Israel. It is this repentance that will reverse the condition of Israel's house being left desolate (Mt. 23:38–39; cf. Acts 3:19–21).

This was the same message initially preached by John the baptizer and by Jesus during His earthly ministry. However, “the gospel of the kingdom” cannot again be proclaimed until the nation has moved into the chronological confines of Daniel’s 70th week. The Greek term for “world” in verse 14, while meaning “the inhabited earth,” cannot be limited to a particular region but must include the entire world of Gentile occupation.

It is this “world” that Christ is coming to judge (Acts 17:31), which is implied by the phrase then the end will come. For this reason this global evangel cannot be limited to the first-century Roman Empire. Nor could it have been accomplished within 25 to 30 years of Christ’s ascension. Nor did it fulfill the Great Commission by A.D. 70, as preterists contend.

The good news that the Lord Jesus has left for believers in this future time of Jacob’s trouble is that “birth pangs” will not hinder the gospel of the Kingdom. Instead, the judgments will magnify its message, enforce its urgency, and fulfill the promise of Jeremiah’s prophecy that Israel “shall be saved out of it” (Jer. 30:7).

Harmony of the Olivet Discourse (Table Format) with Luke 17:22-32 and Luke 19:43-44 Message to the Disciples

The purpose of the…table is to provide a parallel review of the Olivet Discourse. The Olivet Discourse is primarily found in Matthew 24, Mark 13 and Luke 21. However, portions of Luke 12 and Luke 17 record similar Bible verses and are therefore, included within the table. By studying the Olivet Discourse in parallel, greater truths can be seen. For example, when looking at a significant signpost of the beginning of the Great Tribulation called the ‘Abomination of Desolation’ in Mat 24:15 and Mark 13:14, we also find in Luke 21:20 that this occurrence is tied to Jerusalem being surrounded by armies (sieged) and ultimately the people of Jerusalem being taken captive Luke 21:24. In this, Jerusalem refers to people who identify themselves with being Christian.

Introduction to the Olivet Discourse
http://www.bereanbiblechurch.org/transcripts/matthew/intro_olivet_discourse.htm

We are beginning a study of Matthew 24 which is known as the Olivet discourse. This is also a sermon on the mount. Few chapters of the Bible have called forth more disagreement among interpreters than Matthew 24 and its parallels in Mark 13 and Luke 21.

Before we begin our study of chapter 24, we need to examine its context. Apart from an understanding of its context, you can come up with all kinds of weird interpretations.

Amen, Truly or Verily – Where Used? and Which is Correct?

You will find any of these words used interchangibly, depending what version of the Bible you are reading.

They are essentially equivalent.

These words are translations (or in the case of “amen”, transliterations) of the Greek word amēn, taken directly from the Hebrew word āʾmēn. This word has different implications depending on how and where it is used.

How many times did Jesus cleanse the temple?

https://www.gotquestions.org/temple-cleanse.html See also: Herod's Temple

Question: "How many times did Jesus cleanse the temple? Why did He cleanse the temple?"

Answer: Jesus cleansed the temple of the money-changers and sellers of merchandise because of His disgust at what they had made of God's house of prayer and His zeal to purify it from the abuse of ungodly men. Judea was under the rule of the Romans, and the money in current use was Roman coin. However, the Jewish law required that every man should pay a tribute to the service of the sanctuary of "half a shekel" (Exodus 30:11–16), a Jewish coin. It became, therefore, a matter of convenience to have a place where the Roman coin could be exchanged for the Jewish half shekel. The money-changers provided this convenience but would demand a small sum for the exchange. Because so many thousands of people came up to the great feasts, changing money was a very profitable business and one that resulted in fraud and oppression of the poor.

Also, according to the Law, two doves or pigeons were required to be offered in sacrifice (Leviticus 14:22; Luke 2:24). Yet it was difficult to bring them from the distant parts of Judea, so a lucrative business selling the birds sprang up, with the sellers gouging the faithful by charging exorbitant prices. There were other merchants selling cattle and sheep for the temple sacrifices as well. Because of these sellers who preyed on the poor and because of His passion for the purity of His Father's house, Jesus was filled with righteous indignation. As He overturned the tables of the money-changers, He condemned them for having turned God's house of prayer into "a den of thieves" (Matthew 21:13). As He did so, His disciples remembered Psalm 69:9, "Zeal for your house consumes me, and the insults of those who insult you fall on me."

Jesus' first cleansing of the temple is described in John 2:11–12 as having occurred just after Jesus' first miracle, the turning of water into wine at the wedding in Cana. John makes it clear that it was "after this" that He went to Capernaum, where He "stayed for a few days." Then in the next verse (verse 13), John tells us that the "Passover of the Jews was at hand" (NKJV). These verses trace Jesus' movements over a short period of time from Cana in Galilee to Capernaum and eventually to Jerusalem for the Passover. This is the first of the two times Jesus cleansed the temple. The Synoptic Gospels do not record the temple cleansing mentioned in John 2, instead only recording the temple cleansing that occurred during Passion Week. (See Chapter VII)

The second cleansing of the temple occurred just after Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem the last week of His life. This second cleansing is recorded in Matthew, Mark, and Luke but not in John. There are differences in the two events, aside from their being nearly three years apart. In the first cleansing, temple officials confronted Jesus immediately (John 2:18), whereas in the second cleansing, the chief priests and scribes confronted Him the following day (Matthew 21:17–23). In the first event, Jesus made a whip of cords with which to drive out the sellers, but there is no mention of a whip in the second cleansing. So there are two recorded occasions when Jesus cleansed the temple—the first time at the beginning of His public ministry, and the second time just after His triumphal entry into Jerusalem shortly before He was crucified. (See Chapter LXV)

1st Cleansing:

> He found in the temple those that sold oxen and sheep and doves; and the changers of money sitting doing business. When he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple, with the sheep and the oxen; poured out the changers' money, and overturned the tables; and he said to those who sold doves, “Take these things away! Do not make my Father's house a house of merchandise!”

2nd Cleansing:

> They came into Jerusalem and Jesus went into the temple of God and drove out all those who bought and sold in the temple, and overturned the tables of the money changers and the seats of those who sold doves. And he said to them, “It is written, ‘My house shall be called a house of prayer,’ but you have made it a ‘den of thieves.’ ”

How Many Times Did Jesus Cleanse the Jerusalem Temple?

https://bibleask.org/how-many-times-did-jesus-cleanse-the-jerusalem-temple/

Jesus cleansed the temple two times during His earthly ministry.

The first cleansing took place in the spring of A.D. 28, at the beginning of His early Judean ministry (John 2:13–17). By this act, Jesus declared His authority and announced His mission as the Messiah at the Passover. (See Chapter VII)

When Jesus heard the noise and saw the bargaining in God’s dwelling place (Ex. 25:8), He rushed to cleanse the temple and took a “whip” and drove “those who sold oxen and sheep and doves, and the money changers doing business” (v. 14,15). And He said, “Take these things away! Do not make My Father’s house a house of merchandise!” (v. 16).

Then, His disciples remembered that it was written, “the Zeal for Your house has eaten Me up” (v. 17). This is a quote from Ps. 69:9. Jesus earnestly desired that His Father’s house should be used exclusively for worship (Ex. 25:8, 9; Matt. 21:13). When the temple officials confronted Him immediately asking Him for a sign to prove His authority, He gave them the undeniable sign of His resurrection from the death (John 2:18-20).

The second cleansing occurred three years later at the end of His public ministry, at the fourth Passover just after His triumphal entry into Jerusalem the last week of His life (Matt. 21:12–17; Mark 11:15–19: Luke 19:45–48.) (See Chapter LXVI)

At this time, Jesus said, “It is written, ‘My house shall be called a house of prayer,’ but you have made it a ‘den of thieves” (Matthew 21:13). Jesus spoke of the temple as “my house” (Matt. 21:13). But when the leaders rejected His final appeal the following day, He referred to it as “your house” (Matt. 23:38). This quotation is from Isa. 56:7 and points to the fact that Gentiles were to be called to the temple to know the true God (Isa. 56:6–8).

By making the sacred symbols of the temple a source of personal profit, the rulers were making sacred things common and robbing God of His honor and also robbing the worshipers of an opportunity to know the truth. Those who earnestly seek to make their Father’s house a “house of prayer” (Matt. 21:13) should not make it a place for unholy thoughts, words, or actions. Rather, they should cleanse the temple and be reverent in His holy presence (John 4:23, 24) and worship Him “in spirit and in truth” (John 4:24).

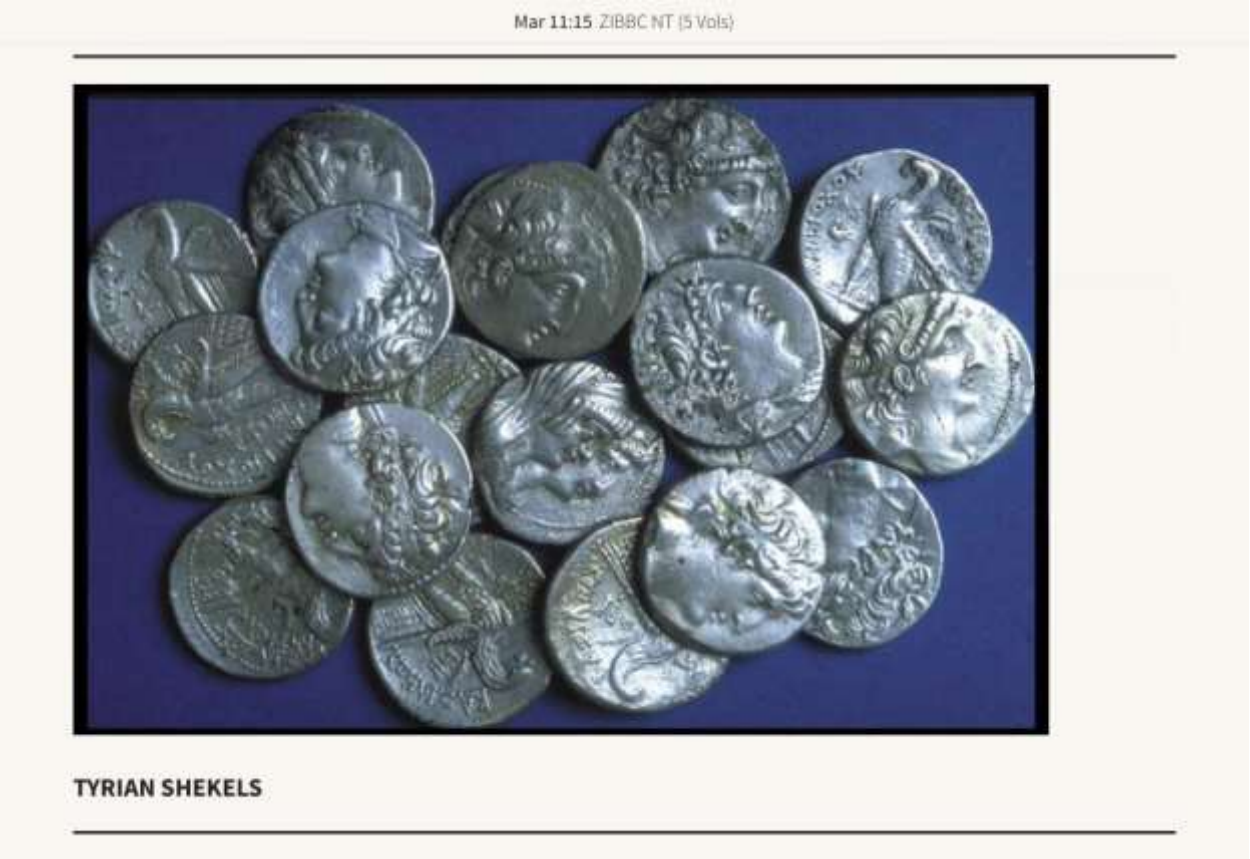
Why Did Jesus Clear the Temple? (Mark 11:15-18)
https://www.olivetree.com/blog/why-did-jesus-clear-the-temple/

Referencing the Zondervan Illustrated Bible Backgrounds Commentary to investigate…

Zondervan Bible Commentary:
Jesus enters the temple (the 35-acre outer court of the Gentiles) and wreaks havoc on those who sold the animals for sacrifice (specifically mentioning “pigeons,” the sacrificial animal for the poor) and exchanged money. Further, He blocked the thoroughfare that may have become a sort of “short-cut” for those who wanted to get from one side of the temple mount to the other without having to go the long way around. They had no respect. No reverence.



Apparently the temple area was being used as a shortcut between the city and the Mount of Olives.

THE TEMPLE HAD BECOME A SACRED COW, particularly for those whose livelihood and dominance depended on the sacrificial system. Jesus recognizes that this institution is barren despite the veneer of piety and holiness. In challenging it, he takes on a massive mountain of tradition and entrenched power. Boldly condemning religious or political corruption has its costs. Holders of power usually do not placidly tolerate denunciation but will strike out to crush their nemeses. Many Christians, therefore, remain shamefully silent before wickedness, particularly when it manifests within their own group. Jesus’ prophetic defiance cost him his life. The result is an atoning sacrifice that replaces once and for all the system of animal sacrifices.

Tables lined the outer courts three weeks before Passover to receive the annual half-shekel tax required of every Jewish male (Ex. 30:11–16). This tax funded the daily sacrifices for the atonement of sin. For a modest commission, money changers exchanged inadmissible local currencies for the sanctioned Tyrian shekel used to pay the tax. Jewish authorities were forbidden to mint silver coins; they adopted the Tyrian shekel because of its high quality and because it did not flaunt Rome's dominion over Israel. These coins, however, had an image of the god Melkart (Herakles) on the obverse and an eagle with the inscription, "Tyre the holy and inviolable," on the reverse.

JESUS' ACTIONS ARE INTENTIONALLY SYMBOLIC. Like prophets of old, he makes a dramatic gesture acting out God's rejection of the temple cult and its coming destruction. He assaults the foundation of the temple's operation: the contributions and sacrifices. If money cannot exchange into the holy currency, then monetary support for the temple sacrifices and the priesthood must end. If sacrificial animals cannot sell, then sacrifice must end. And if no vessel can go through the temple, then all cultic activity must cease. He makes his point. The chief priests will take up his challenge and ask him by what authority he does these things (11:28).

Jesus also attacks the temple operations that tended to encourage the merchandising of religion. Any church or ministry that tries to take advantage of the presence of God to make a profit, to hawk religious benefits like the peddlers in the bazaar, or to build a financial empire stands under his judgment.

Preacher's Commentary:

The prophetic fulfillment. In the Court of the Gentiles, Jesus sees violations against the sanctity of the temple. Merchants sell sacrificial animals at exorbitant prices, and priests serve as moneychangers to collect a temple tax from the worshipers. The courtyard also serves as a shortcut for business traffic through the temple. A Jewish mind might rationalize these violations by thinking that the Court of the Gentiles is least holy among the outer courts of the temple. As long as the inner court which houses the Most Holy Place remains sacrosanct, no harm is done. Jesus has another view of the temple. All of its precincts are holy, and for priests to choose the Court of the Gentiles for merchandising speaks again of their corruption. Rationalized encroachment upon holy centers through peripheral areas is still a way of spiritual corruption. What are the peripheral areas of the church that are open to violation? More and more functions are being added to the traditional ministries of the church, such as day care centers, Christian schools, senior citizen centers, singles activities, counseling clinics, and food banks. Are their policies consistent with the standards of the holy place? Does the same sacred spirit pervade their space? Are ministers diverted from prayer, visitation, counseling, and the preaching of the Word by these activities? In higher education, the term "veto groups" is used to describe factions on campus whose purposes run counter to the mission of the college or the university. In the Court of the Gentiles, merchants and priests formed a "veto group" whose policies and practices countered the purpose and corrupted the spirit of the temple. For them, and sometimes for us, a therapeutic cleansing is in order.

The corruption goes deeper than evidenced by merchants selling sacrificial doves and animals at outrageous prices to the poor who come to worship. Priests exploit their position by taking a share of the profits and collecting an artificially contrived temple tax from the pilgrims and worshipers. The scene is reminiscent of a big-time gambling operation. Cheating and crime are companions to the gambling industry, but they cannot continue without the corruption of police and public officials. Likewise, the temple could not have been corrupted without the collusion of the priests. Heavy responsibility rests upon those who are called to be keepers of the courts that surround the holy place.

The prophetic future. A purging must have a purpose. Otherwise, seven devils return to replace each one that is cast out. Jesus has more in mind than just clearing out the merchants and repudiating the priests. By His action in the Court of the Gentiles, He restores the space given to God's purpose of making His temple "a house of prayer for all nations" (v. 17). Corruption in the courtyard has blocked Gentiles from entering into faith. Never again. The Lord of the temple comes—not just to restore His temple as a house of prayer, but to reopen the promise that His salvation is for all nations.

A purging also brings out hate. Because Jesus undercuts the profits and publicly embarrasses the agents of the high priests, the hierarchy of the temple joins in conspiracy with the scribes to kill Him. Strange, isn't it? Jesus has denied their tradition, repudiated their teaching, and condemned their spirit, but the chief priests do not think about violence until He touches their pocketbook. As the forces line up, the people are on Jesus' side. And opposite them are His enemies, now including the chief priests who will stop at nothing to eliminate the man who is taking away their profits and their power.

Who Were the Money Changers In the Bible?

https://www.gotquestions.org/money-changers-in-the-Bible.html

Question: "Who were the money changers in the Bible?"

Answer: The Bible records two instances of Jesus cleansing the temple of money changers and those selling sacrificial animals. Jesus' first encounter with money changers was at the beginning of His three-year ministry (John 2:14–16). He made a whip of cords and drove them out. The second time He confronted the money changers was the week before His trial and crucifixion. Seeing that the money changers had come back, He again drove them out, saying, ""It is written, 'My house will be called a house of prayer,' but you are making it 'a den of robbers'"" (Matthew 21:13).

Because Jewish law required a temple tax of a half-shekel (Exodus 30:11–16), Jews and visitors from other nations came pay their taxes when they offered their sacrifices. But foreign coins with the likeness of pagan emperors would not be accepted in God's temple. So money changers exchanged those foreign coins for Jewish money, but they did so at an exorbitant profit. Rather than provide this service as a business in another part of town, they exploited the religious zeal of the visitors to Jerusalem and did their business on temple grounds. Because they determined their own exchange rate, money changers easily took advantage of the poor and the foreigners pouring into Jerusalem for Passover.

These same money changers were associated with others who engaged in shady business practices in the temple courts. Some sold sacrificial animals, overcharging people who did not bring their own. Others were in charge of examining the animals to be sacrificed, and it was a simple matter to declare an animal "unapproved" and force the worshiper to buy another animal—at an inflated price—from the temple vendors. Such goings-on, exploiting the poor and the foreigner, angered the Lord Jesus and was strictly forbidden in the Mosaic Law (Exodus 22:21; Leviticus 19:34).

The money changers in the temple courts were similar to tax collectors in that they extorted money from their own people. They were more than ordinary businessmen. They were seeking to profit financially from the worship of God. Wherever passion and zeal are found, there will also be those who seek to profit from that zeal. Paul wrote to Timothy about such people, false teachers who found a way to make a fortune off the gospel (1 Timothy 6:5). Modern versions of the money changers flood the airways, promising to exchange your hard-earned dollars for blessings, healing, and God's favor. For a suggested donation, they will supposedly pray for you or promise virtually anything you want. For another twenty bucks, they will sell you a book about how to wrangle prosperity, health, or spiritual insights from God. And, like the simony of the first-century money changers, the practices of modern religious price gougers only aid those worshipers who have enough cash to purchase their wares.

Paul often clarified the difference between his ministry and that of false teachers by pointing out their greed. In 2 Corinthians 2:17 he wrote, "Unlike so many, we do not peddle the word of God for profit. On the contrary, in Christ we speak before God with sincerity, as those sent from God." Peter also warned that one way to spot a modern-day money changer is to notice his or her fascination with financial gain (2 Peter 2:3). Jesus hated the money changers' exploitation of the devout two thousand years ago, and He still hates it. We may not have shady characters collecting temple taxes outside our places of worship, but we have them invading our homes through radio and television. We are wise to remember how Jesus reacted to such selfish swindlers. With no apologies, He drove them out of His Father's house. When we identify a modern money-changer, we should do the same.

The Difference Between "LORD" and "Lord" and "lord"

Q: When the Bible uses the word "lord," sometimes it is all in capital letters ("LORD"), sometimes only the first letter is capitalized ("Lord"), and sometimes no letters are capitalized ("lord"). Why is this?

A: When you encounter the word in all lower case — lord — it is simply a reference to a human ruler.

When you encounter the word with the first letter only capitalized — Lord — it is either because it is at the front of a sentence or because it is a reference to one of the three divine Persons of the Godhead (the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit) or to the entire Godhead.

When you see the term entirely capitalized — LORD — it will be in the Old Testament and is translating the Hebrew word for the name of God — YHWH, or Yahweh (Biblical Hebrew has no vowels, only consonant letters). The reason for this is that the Ten Commandments forbid anyone to misuse the name of Yahweh, stating:

> "You shall not misuse the name of Yahweh your God, for Yahweh will not hold anyone who misuses his name guiltless." (Ex. 20:7; cf. Deut. 5:11).

Although the name Yahweh was used freely in the early history of Israel, by the time of Jesus the Jews (especially the Pharisees) had become hyper-scrupulous about breaking the Mosaic Law and, in an attempt to "build a wall" around the commandments of the Law so that no one could even get close to breaking them, they ruled that no one should speak the name of the Yahweh ever. The only exception to this was during one feast day of the year when the priest would intone the actual name Yahweh once during the liturgy.

This prohibition on saying "Yahweh" created a problem for people reading the Bible out loud in synagogue liturgies. Since the name of Yahweh was freely used in the Scripture texts, what were they to say in its place as they read the Bible out loud? The answer that was reached was that they were to say the word "Adonai" instead. Adonai is the Hebrew word for "lord," or actually "my lord."

When the Septuagint (the Greek version of the Old Testament) was translated, it replaced the Hebrew word YHWH with the Greek word for "lord" (kyrios).

Thus the New Testament writers, because they were both devout Jews and people who were quoting the Septuagint in their writings, never used the name "Yahweh" in the New Testament, but consistently used "Kyrios" in its place. … In reality, the Apostle Paul himself used "Kyrios" instead of "Yahweh."

…when vowels were eventually introduced into the Jewish alphabet, they came in the form of vowel points above and below the consonant letters that were written on the page of Scripture. Because the custom of saying "Adonai" instead of "Yahweh" was already in place, when the Jews added vowel points to the Old Testament, they used the vowel points for "Adonai" (a-o-ai) whenever the encountered the word "YHWH," giving us "Yahowaih," which is transliterated into English as "Jehovah." …. "Jehovah" is not God's true name. Based on the patristic and other evidence available, the actual way the divine name was pronounced was "Yahweh," not "Jehovah."

Jesus Christ-Lord God of the Old Testament and Son of God

In order to truly understand the Scriptures, it is critical to realize that the Lord God of the Old Testament was the one Who was made flesh and became Jesus Christ, the Son of God. As we will see, “God” in the Old Testament is frequently translated from the Hebrew word elohim, which is a collective plural noun that refers to a holy family of spirit beings. Scripture reveals that there are at present two Who are Elohim—members of the God Family: God, Who is called the Father in the New Testament, and the one Who became Jesus Christ, and is thus now God the Son.

How many times is Jesus called Lord in the New Testament?

According to Charles T. Carter in his article "Preaching: the Lordship of Jesus Christ" (posted on preachingpoint.org) "The term "lord" occurs over 600 times in the New Testament. It is true that sometimes it is merely a term of address or respect or affection. However, at least 150 of these times it is used of God Himself, and nearly 250 times it is used to describe Jesus."

Jesus: Judge

Jesus Will Be Our Judge

https://truthfortheworld.org/jesus-judge

The story is told about a man who came before a judge after he had committed a crime. When the man saw the judge, he was happy. The judge had been his defender in an earlier case. When the judge sentenced the man to prison, he asked: “Don’t you remember who I am? I am the man you defended many years ago. How can you sentence me to prison now? The judge replied: “In the earlier case, I was your defender. It was my desire to set you free. Now, I am your judge and I must judge you fairly according to the law.”

The same is true of Jesus. Now He is our Saviour and Mediator (Matthew 1:21; Luke 19:10; 1 Timothy 2:5). His salvation is available to all who are willing to obey His will (Matthew 7:21-23. Hebrews 5:8-9). However, the time is coming when He will be our Judge. The first time, Jesus came to save. The next time He will come to judge (Hebrews 9:27-28).

John the baptizer was the first to tell us Jesus would be our judge (Matthew 3:12). Paul tells us every person will stand before Christ to be judged (2 Corinthians 5:10). Whether we are rich or poor, black or white, short or tall, Asian, African, European, or American, we will all be judged (2 Timothy 4:8). Paul also tells us that Christ is a righteous judge (2 Timothy 4:8). The Bible says all judgment has been given to him (John 5:22). The Bible also shows us a picture of the Judgment (Matthew 25:31-46). The fact that Jesus will be our Judge must be preached to the world (Acts 10:42; Romans 2:9-16). Jesus will judge us according to the Gospel (John 12:48; Romans 2:9-16). All people will be judged fairly (Acts 10:34-35; Colossians 3:24-25).

Jesus is qualified to be our Judge. He knows what is in our hearts (John 2:24-25; Revelation 2:23). Because Jesus is God and knows our hearts, He is able to be a just and righteous Judge of all the world (Acts 17:30-31).

There is a great day coming! It is a day when everyone in the world will be judged. Jesus will be the Judge. In order for us to go to Heaven, we must obey God’s will (John 14:15; Romans 6:17-18; 1 John 5:3). By the grace and mercy of God we can be saved (Ephesians 2:8-9; Titus 3:5). If we do not obey, we will be sent to Hell (Matthew 7:13-14; 2 Thessalonians 1:7-9; Matthew 25:46).

What does the Bible say about when God will judge us?

Question: "What does the Bible say about when God will judge us?"

Answer: There are two separate judgments. Believers are judged at the Judgment Seat of Christ (Romans 14:10-12). Every believer will give an account of himself, and the Lord will judge the decisions he made—including those concerning issues of conscience. This judgment does not determine salvation, which is by faith alone (Ephesians 2:8-9), but rather is the time when believers must give an account of their lives in service to Christ. Our position in Christ is the “foundation” spoken of in 1 Corinthians 3:11-15. That which we build upon the foundation can be the “gold, silver, and precious stones” of good works in Christ’s name, obedience and fruitfulness—dedicated spiritual service to glorify God and build the church. Or what we build on the foundation may be the “wood, hay and stubble” of worthless, frivolous, shallow activity with no spiritual value. The Judgment Seat of Christ will reveal this.

The gold, silver, and precious stones in the lives of believers will survive God’s refining fire (v. 13), and believers will be rewarded based on those good works—how faithfully we served Christ (1 Corinthians 9:4-27), how well we obeyed the Great Commission (Matthew 28:18-20), how victorious we were over sin (Romans 6:1-4), how well we controlled our tongues (James 3:1-9), etc. We will have to give an account for our actions, whether they were truly indicative of our position in Christ. The fire of God's judgment will completely burn up the "wood, hay and stubble" of the words we spoke and things we did which had no eternal value. "So then, each of us will give an account of himself to God" (Romans 14:12).

The second judgment is that of unbelievers who will be judged at the Great White Throne Judgment (Revelation 20:11-15). This judgment does not determine salvation, either. Everyone at the Great White Throne is an unbeliever who has rejected Christ in life and is therefore already doomed to the lake of fire. Revelation 20:12 says that unbelievers will be "judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." Those who have rejected Christ as Lord and Savior will be judged based on their works alone, and because the Bible tells us that "by the works of the Law no flesh will be justified" (Galatians 2:16), they will be condemned. No amount of good works and the keeping of God's laws can be sufficient to atone for sin. All their thoughts, words and actions will be judged against God's perfect standard and found wanting. There will be no reward for them, only eternal condemnation and punishment.

https://couragematters.com/2017/07/did-jesus-judge/

We've all heard it. We may even believe it: "Jesus didn't judge." It's a huge claim, considering the life and teachings of Jesus. But is it true? The word "judge" means to "give an authoritative opinion." For those who keep reciting the mantra that "Jesus didn't judge," and that his followers shouldn't either, I have a humble message to deliver: Merriam Webster called. She wants her dictionary back. Did Jesus judge? All the time. In fact, you'll never be able to love God, people, or yourself until you learn how to judge as Jesus did.

Stay with me, because what you're about to read could forever change your life.

The "Jesus didn't judge" argument is typically made by people who want to justify attitudes and behaviors long prohibited in the Bible. If you don't know your Bible (and Jesus), the statement can freeze you, rendering you incapable of saying anything further — because it seems, on the surface, to be such a powerful statement of truth. In fact, it's entirely false. When people use it, they reveal their lack of Bible knowledge — and lack of knowing the biblical Jesus. Notice I say "biblical Jesus." It's so important to do this nowadays, because so many have recreated Jesus in their own image. The end result is a Jesus who isn't the Jesus of Scripture at all. In 1 Corinthians 11:4 (ESV) Paul warns us to resist this practice:

> "For if someone comes and proclaims another Jesus than the one we proclaimed, or if you receive a different spirit from the one you received, or if you accept a different gospel from the one you accepted, you put up with it readily enough."

FAKE vs. REAL JESUS

A non-judging Jesus isn't Jesus. As a matter of historical fact, Jesus did judge — continually. He still does. The coy lie that Jesus didn't judge, or that His followers should not judge, can only lead to the conclusion of tossing the entire Bible out the window — along with Christianity. To follow Jesus is to be judged and to judge – it's simply a matter of how that judgment takes place.

The entire Bible is a book about judging attitudes and behavior in the here and now, so that they conform to what honors God. It is impossible to read or teach the Bible without quickly getting to the issue of morals — and morals deal with motives and behaviors. Passing judgment. The entire Bible is a book about reforming thoughts and behaviors so that they fall in line with God.

> "God hates being separated from us, and that's why he decided to do something about it. There has never been a more potent, simultaneous expression of hatred and love . . . justice and mercy kissed at the cross."

What does this mean for Jesus' followers? It means that it's not possible to follow him without first judging ourselves. Then, and only then, can we be in position to help others change their ways, too. The key is to judge with true humility toward God and people. If you judge with arrogance, or a self-righteous attitude, you haven't yet learned how to judge with the kind of humility Jesus calls each of us to.

Consider 2 Corinthians 10:5 (NIV), as one potent reminder: "We demolish arguments and every pretension that sets itself up against the knowledge of God, and we take captive every thought to make it obedient to Christ." Is it possible to demolish an argument or pretension, or to take a thought captive without judging it? And if this doesn't lead to reining in otherwise sinful behavior, then what's the point?

NOT THE REAL JESUS: The idea that Jesus didn't judge can only be supported if we throw away his teachings. To do so would give us a Jesus other than the one presented in the Bible.

THE CROSS

The cross is where God made his definitive judgment against sin. He hates it. But the cross is also his ultimate act of love toward sinners. God hates being separated from us, and that's why he decided to do something about it. There has never been a more potent, simultaneous expression of hatred and love. In other words, justice and mercy kissed at the cross. The next time someone says, "Jesus didn't judge," ask them to think more — much more — about the cross.

COMING JUDGMENT — BY JESUS

In fact, one day we will all appear before Jesus — to be judged. Believers appear for a judgment of rewards. This is known as the "judgment seat" of Christ (Romans 14:10, 2 Corinthians 5:10). Unbelievers will be judged at the "great white throne" judgment spoken of in Revelation 20:11-15. The white throne judgment is not a judgment of rewards, because there is no reward for those who reject Christ. It is a judgment of eternal separation known as the "second death." A simplified way to understand the great white throne judgment is that people who go through this life willingly rejecting God will get their desire granted, eternally, at the great white throne judgment.

The Bible presents right and wrong, good and bad. If Jesus didn't judge, we would have no Bible — the Bible from which Jesus constantly taught. If Jesus didn't expect us to judge each other and one another, then He would not have called anyone to preach or teach about Him. We wouldn't even be able to read the Bible for ourselves, let alone others. If judgment weren't part of the Christian turf, God would not have used human beings to plant a single church, where the Bible is to be taught, embraced and applied around the world. The fulfillment of the Great Commission would be impossible.

SEEING RED?
Keep in mind that the red letters found in some publications of the New Testament (intended to help readers quickly identify the spoken words of Jesus), were non-existent in Jesus' day. He quoted and taught from the Old Testament. In light of this, it's vital to understand that Jesus' teachings go far beyond the red letters of the New Testament. They are contained throughout the Bible. 2 Timothy 3:16-17 (NIV) reminds us that it is not just parts of the Bible that matter, but all of it:

> "All Scripture is God-breathed and is useful for teaching, rebuking, correcting and training in righteousness, so that the servant of God may be thoroughly equipped for every good work"

It's all the teachings of the Bible that are inspired, given to us by God — and continually quoted by Jesus. (Of course, some passages have a limited context in time and scope, but we must be very careful we don't dismiss the obvious, ongoing application of the overwhelming majority of the Bible).

ERASING TRUTH: To think that only the red letters in a New Testament are the teachings of Jesus is to have the most elementary misunderstanding of Jesus' words.

FOUR LETTER WORD
Think about this: the Great Commission (Matthew 28:19-20) is to go into the world and not merely sprinkle or immerse people under water (baptize), but teach people to obey Jesus' commands. Here it is, in all its splendor:

> "Therefore go and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and teaching them to obey everything I have commanded you. And surely I am with you always, to the very end of the age."

Notice the words "obey everything." If there is no difference between a person who obeys, and a person who does not, then what's the point? Obedience requires judging our thoughts and behaviors, and weighing them against God's standards. Obedience requires perpetual judgment and adjustment.

SO, WHAT DID JESUS MEAN?
When Jesus said "do not judge or you will be judged" (Matthew 7:1-6), the context was a rebuke against a critical, self-righteous, legalistic spirit, not against judging with humility, using the plumb line of God's word as the measure. Cults are formed and forge followings by taking words out of context. They lead people astray. Jesus' words, "do not judge or you will be judged" are among the most out-of-context quotes in the history of civilization — and when we misquote them, we lead people away from Jesus in droves.

Consider Paul's words in 1 Corinthians 5:9-13 (ESV):

> "I wrote to you in my letter not to associate with sexually immoral people — not at all meaning the sexually immoral of this world, or the greedy and swindlers, or idolaters, since then you would need to go out of the world. But now I am writing to you not to associate with anyone who bears the name of brother if he is guilty of sexual immorality or greed, or is an idolater, reviler, drunkard, or swindler—not even to eat with such a one. For what have I to do with > judging outsiders? Is it not those inside the church whom you are to judge? God judges those outside. “Purge the evil person from among you.”

Did Jesus judge? If you’re still asking that question, you aren’t paying attention.

Jesus: Authority

Matthew 7:29 for He was teaching them as one having authority, and not as their scribes.

Matthew 28:18 And Jesus came up and spoke to them, saying, “All authority has been given to Me in heaven and on earth.

Mark 1:27 They were all amazed, so that they debated among themselves, saying, “What is this? A new teaching with authority! He commands even the unclean spirits, and they obey Him.”

John 5:27 and He gave Him authority to execute judgment, because He is the Son of Man.

John 8:28 So Jesus said, “When you lift up the Son of Man, then you will know that I am He, and I do nothing on My own initiative, but I speak these things as the Father taught Me.

Luke 10:22 All things have been handed over to Me by My Father, and no one knows who the Son is except the Father, and who the Father is except the Son, and anyone to whom the Son wills to reveal Him.”

John 5:26-27 For just as the Father has life in Himself, even so He gave to the Son also to have life in Himself; and He gave Him authority to execute judgment, because He is the Son of Man.

John 7:16 So Jesus answered them and said, “My teaching is not Mine, but His who sent Me.

John 10:18 No one has taken it away from Me, but I lay it down on My own initiative. I have authority to lay it down, and I have authority to take it up again. This commandment I received from My Father.”

Matthew 8:23-27 Then He got into the boat, His disciples followed Him. And behold, there arose a great storm on the sea, so that the boat was being covered with the waves; but Jesus Himself was asleep. And they came to Him and woke Him, saying, “Save us, Lord; we are perishing!
He *said to them, “Why are you afraid, you men of little faith?” Then He got up and rebuked the winds and the sea, and it became perfectly calm. The men were amazed, and said, “What kind of a man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey Him?”

Jesus Taught With Authority

https://ptv.org/devotional/jesus-taught-with-authority/

Excerpt:

Luke 4:32 says, “They were amazed at His teaching, for His message was with authority.” What is it that gave Jesus’s message authority? It wasn’t His natural charisma. It wasn’t His booming voice. That’s not what gave His words authority. As I look at this passage of Scripture, I find three characteristics of Jesus’s teaching that gave Him true authority.

Number one: Jesus’s teaching was rooted in God’s Word. Mark’s account says, “He was teaching them as one having authority, and not as the scribes” (Mark 1:22). When the scribes taught in the synagogue, they just quoted one expert after another, one opinion after another, and one tradition after another. But Jesus spoke with the authority of God Himself.

Number two: Jesus’s teaching was filled with application. … He always included what we are supposed to do in light of that truth.

Number three: Jesus’s teaching was lived out in integrity. The word “integrity” means “undivided” or “whole.” A person who has integrity is a person whose life is in balance. There is no dichotomy between what he says and how he lives. However, that wasn’t true of the Pharisees. People knew the Pharisees weren’t living out what they professed to be true. If you are a teacher of God’s Word and you are not living out what you proclaim, then you have no authority. But Jesus lived out His message with integrity.

That’s why when Jesus taught, people sensed something was different. His teaching was rooted in the authority of God’s Word, He used practical application, and He lived it out in integrity.

Difference between Apostle and Disciple

Apostle vs Disciple

Difference between apostle and disciple can be understood when you know what the two terms stand for individually. The words apostle and disciple are often encountered in biblical study. Many treat apostles and disciples to be the same and often use these words interchangeably. However, it is wrong and needs to be clarified. You ought to know the difference between an apostle and a disciple to have a clearer understanding of the concepts. Therefore, in this article, we will be discussing what each term stands for in order to make you understand the difference between apostle and disciple.

Who is a Disciple?

According to the Oxford English dictionary, a disciple is 'a follower or pupil of a teacher, leader, or philosopher.' So, you understand that a disciple is basically a pupil or a student. In his time, Jesus accepted all as his disciples, and this huge population consisted of sinners and women and that made purists angry. The word disciple comes from a Latin word discipulus, which means a learner who learns from his teacher.

If you study the Bible, you would come to know that disciples were followers or students of the Jesus Christ. Out of his scores of followers, Jesus chose twelve to travel and learn from him. Of course, these 12 were also originally the Disciples of Christ. These were the men who were later sent to far off lands to act as messengers, and these 12 men became first apostles.

Jesus and his apostles.

Who is an Apostle?

According to the Oxford English dictionary, the general meaning of the term apostle is 'a vigorous and pioneering advocate or supporter of a particular policy, idea, or cause.' This is apart from its use to Jesus Christ's 12 apostles. In that sense, they were twelve disciples or students, who later became messengers of the religion as they supported the religious belief of Jesus.

It is true that apostles were also disciples, but one cannot use the word apostle when he is referring to someone who has merely been a follower or a disciple of the Christ. So, not all of disciples were apostles though all apostles were disciples.

An apostle was, apart from being a follower of Jesus, a special trainee who was to be later sent out as a messenger to preach Christianity. Interestingly, among the 12 that Jesus chose as apostles, there was Judas Iscariot, who betrayed Christ and later killed himself. Matthais replaced Judas and joined rest of the group to become an apostle. The original 12 apostles were Peter, Andrew, James, John, Philip, Bartholomew, Thomas, Matthew, James (the Less), Judas (or Thaddaeus), Simon, and Judas Iscariot.

What is the difference between Apostle and Disciple?

Apart from the word disciple, there is also mention of the word apostles in Bible and people think of these two as being same which is not true.

• If you get to the Greek roots of the words apostle and disciple, the difference between the two becomes crystal clear. The Greek word for disciple literally means student while the Greek word for apostle means a messenger or sent one.

• While it is true that Jesus chose 12 of his disciples to become messengers later on, not all disciples can be called apostles.

• All 12 apostles of Jesus were disciples. However, you cannot say all the disciples of Christianity are apostles.

12 Disciples

The 12 Disciples – Chosen by Jesus
The New Testament is the only extensive source of information about the lives of the 12 disciples. Throughout the Bible there have been men, as well as women, whom God has chosen to accomplish His divine plans. Yet there were twelve men, specifically selected by Jesus, to travel with Him. The responsibility of the very words of the Master weighed like a heavy mantle upon them. The Twelve would continue representing Jesus long after He ascended into Heaven. Their dedication would impact the church long after their deaths.

The 12 Disciples – Why Twelve?
In the Bible, twelve, like seven, frequently suggested completeness and perfection. In the Old Testament, twelve represented "all Israel" (Genesis 49:28; Joshua 13-19). The Book of Revelation provides numerous references to twelve.

- 12 tribes of Israel, which are sealed and protected (Revelation 7:5-8; Revelation 21:12)
- 12 stars in the woman's (Israel) crown, symbolizing the 12 sons of Jacob (Revelation 12:1; Genesis 37:9)
- 12 gates of the great high wall of the New Jerusalem (Revelation 12:12)
- 12 angels guarding the heavenly gates (Revelation 12:12)
- 12 apostles of the Lamb, part of the church and body of Christ (Revelation 12:14)
- 12 pearls or precious stones of different colors, adorning the 12 foundations (Revelation 21:14, Revelation 19-21)
- 12 crops of fruit, continually producing wholesome and pleasant fruit (Revelation 22:2)

The mention of "twelve" appears in other areas of the New Testament as well.

- Jesus first spoke in the Temple at 12 years of age (Luke 2:42, 49-52).
- Jesus raised Jarius' 12-year-old daughter from a death-like state (Mark 5:42).
- The miraculous multiplication of the loaves and fishes, providing 12 baskets of leftovers (Matthew 14:19–20; John 6:13).

As Jesus' immediate followers, the Twelve's faithful obedience would be challenged repeatedly. A promise of eternal honor was extended to these chosen men. "Jesus said to them [disciples], 'I tell you the truth, at the renewal of all things, when the Son of Man sits on his glorious throne, you who have followed me will also sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel'" (Matthew 19:28). This promise shows the glory and status reserved for these saints who had suffered persecution on earth for the cause of Christ. "The wall of the city had twelve foundations, and on them were the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb" (Revelation 21:14).

The 12 Disciples – Why These Men?
After Jesus had endured the temptation in the wilderness, He "returned to Galilee in the power of the Holy Spirit." He tried to speak in His hometown of Nazareth, but was rejected. So spiritually blinded were the people of the synagogue that they tried to kill Jesus by attempting to throw Him off a cliff. Jesus chose to establish His base and a new team in Capernaum, a beautiful town nearby, on the edge of the Sea of Galilee. The prophet, Isaiah, had prophesied that Jesus would live in Capernaum. "In the future he [Jesus] will honor Galilee of the Gentiles, by the way of the sea, along the Jordan" (Isaiah 9:1).

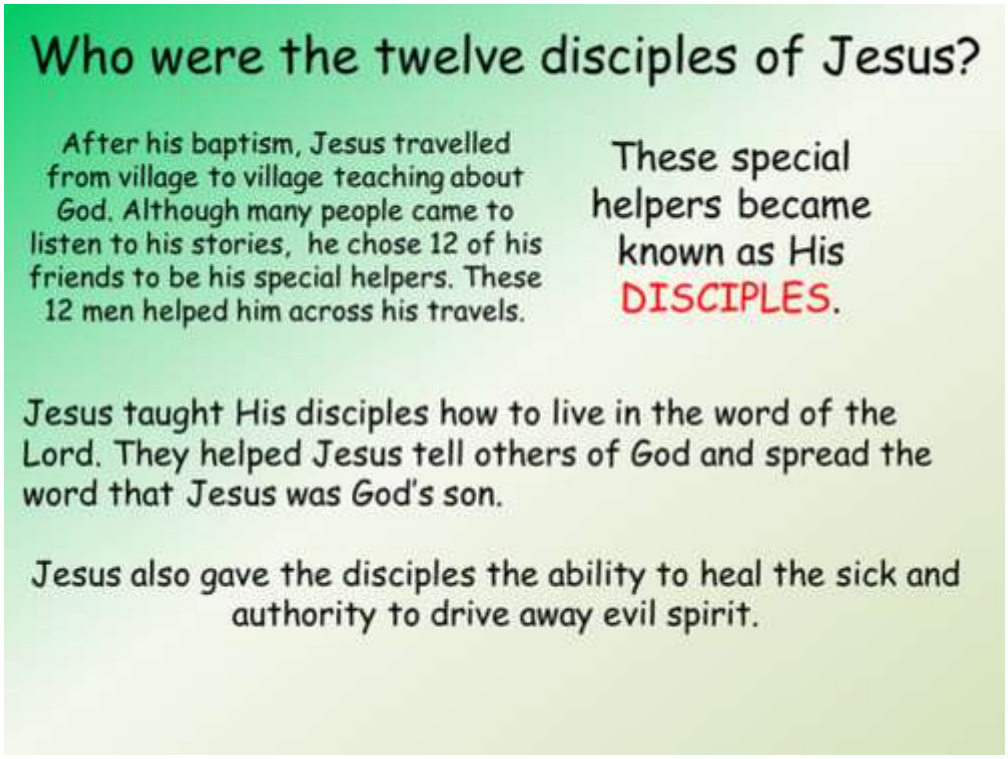
The selection of the Twelve demanded the utmost deliberation as well as sacrifice. Prior to Jesus choosing these men, He fervently sought to fulfill the will of God, the Father. ". . . Jesus went out to a mountainside to pray, and spent the night praying to God" (Luke 6:12). These men would not only be His followers, but individuals who would be closest to Him. In every way, the Son of God chose to be vulnerable to these individuals. They would witness His fury against the moneychangers, His grief at a dear friend's death, and His misery as they abandoned Him in the Garden of Gethsemane (John 2:13-16; 11:35; Mark 14:32-42). Still these men were the sort of people God has always desired—the humble. Despite their faults, the Twelve were teachable. Jesus wanted men who could understand the struggles of the broken-hearted, the poor, and the afflicted.



The 12 Disciples – Before and After

Jesus could not have picked a more diverse group of men to accomplish His divine purpose. By human standards, the Twelve had very little in common with one another—one unpredictable fisherman, possibly one with a bias against Nazareth, a fanatic Jewish nationalist, a despised tax-collector, a skeptic/pessimist, two "Sons of Thunder" with explosive tempers, and a covetous betrayer. They argued among themselves about which disciple would be the greatest (Luke 9:46; 22:24). He showed displeasure when they contradicted Him (Matthew 16:23). Repeatedly, Jesus spoke of His betrayal, death, and resurrection (Matthew 16:21-22; Mark 9:30; Luke 18:31-34), yet the disciples faltered.

- "All the disciples deserted [Jesus] and fled" (Matthew 26:56)
- "Later Jesus appeared to the Eleven as they were eating; he rebuked them for their lack of faith and their stubborn refusal to believer those who had seen him after he had risen" (Mark 16:20).
- "Jesus himself stood among [the disciples] and said to them, 'Peace be with you.' They were startled and frightened . . . He said to them, 'Why are you troubled, and why do doubts rise in your minds'" (Luke 24:36-38).

The Twelve would witness miracles of healing, power over nature, and of raising the dead. Yet it wasn't until "after" Jesus' death, resurrection, and ascension that the disciples' were transformed. Prior to His Ascension, Jesus "opened the disciples' minds so they could understand the Scriptures." Upon returning to His Father, Jesus would fulfill God's promise—clothing them with the Holy Spirit's power (Luke 24:45-49). The Holy Spirit supplied the driving force, enabling the disciples to accomplish the mandate Jesus had entrusted to them. The Twelve testified of who they knew Jesus Christ to be: Lord of all creation, Redeemer of all who trust in His death for their deliverance from sin, and the Source of eternal life for all who accept Him as their Savior.

Jesus Picks His Disciples

https://www.dummies.com/religion/christianity/the-bible/jesus-picks-his-disciples/

It seems likely that Jesus picked 12 followers during his lifetime. The gospels don't explain why Jesus picked these particular guys, and they don't agree about how early in the movement's history they became the core group. But nevertheless, the gospels of Mark and John, which are independent witnesses to the historical Jesus, refer frequently to "the Twelve" (Mark 9:35; 10:32; 11:11; John 6:67–71; 20:24). The author of Luke's gospel usually relies on Mark for his information, but one of Luke's names in his list of the Twelve is different, which may mean that the author had a different and independent list.

Here's a list of the disciples who are usually considered "the Twelve," arranged in order of the earliest noted in the gospel of Mark:

- Peter: He was a fisherman from Capernaum (John says Bethsaida). He's also often called Simon, Simon Peter, or Cephas. (Cephas comes from the Aramaic for "rock," and Peter comes from the Greek equivalent for the same.)
- Andrew: He was Peter's brother and fishing partner; John's gospel says that Andrew was first a disciple of John the Baptist.
- James: He was son of Zebedee and a fisherman from Capernaum. He's called "James the Great" in later tradition.
- John: He was James's brother and partner in the family fishing business. And maybe because they're so brazen, in Mark, Jesus gives the two brothers the name Boanerges, which is a Greek form of the Aramaic "sons of thunder" (Mark 10:35–45).
- Philip: He was from Bethsaida, another town on the coast of the Sea of Galilee.
- Bartholomew: This member of the Twelve doesn't get a lot of press. There simply aren't any stories about him apart from the list of the Twelve. Since the ninth century CE, some people have wondered if he's the Nathanael mentioned in John 1:45–51 and 21:2. Why? Because Nathanael is a normal first name and Bartholomew was more likely a surname (the Greek is based on the Aramaic Bar-Talmai, which means "son of Talmai").
- Matthew: He's called a toll collector in Matthew's gospel. This reference solves the problem in Mark that the toll collector Levi is called (Mark 2:13–17), but never listed among the Twelve (Mark 3:13–19).
- Thomas: Thomas, or "twin" in Aramaic, is called "doubting Thomas" because he doubted Jesus's resurrection until he could touch Jesus's wounds himself (John 20:24–29). He's also called Didymus Thomas (which is like saying "twin" twice in both Greek and Aramaic).
- James: This man, who was the son of Alphaeus, was called in later tradition "James the Less" — not to be confused with James the Great or James brother of Jesus (James was obviously a popular name at the time!).
- Simon: He was called "the Cananean" (which means "zealous" or "jealous" in Aramaic) in Matthew and Mark and "the Zealot" (the Greek equivalent of the same) in Luke.
- Thaddeus: There's a bit of controversy when it comes to this 11th disciple. In Mark and Matthew, he's called Thaddeus. Luke, on the other hand, calls this man Jude, son of James.
- Judas Iscariot: He's the one who betrayed Jesus to the authorities (so he's always put last on lists of the Twelve!).

The differences in the various lists suggest that, by the time the gospels were written, the importance of the Twelve had begun to wane. After all, if they or the communities they founded were still potent, their names would be firmly entrenched and well-known to the gospel authors.

The Twelve disciples' importance may have been dwindling because of their deaths, because of changing leadership patterns in the church, or simply because traditions about the lesser-known ones had been lost. Another reason the Twelve as a group may not have loomed so large at the end of the first century CE has to do with their role. The gospels report that their job was to preach to Israel (Matthew 10:5–6) and to judge the 12 tribes of Israel at the end of time (Q 22:30). But by the late first century, when the gospels are composed, the message is no longer being preached just to Israel, and the end of time seems indefinitely delayed.

When Were the 12 Disciples Chosen

http://www.thejesusbible.faith/when-were-the-12-disciples-chosen/

Whenever we read the word disciples in the Gospel stories we automatically think of the 12 disciples. But it wasn't until the summer of 31AD or 18 months into Jesus ministry that he actually choose the 12.

The timing of the Jesus choosing the 12 disciples

Prior to this whenever we read the word 'disciples' there may have been 100's of people or as few as a handful of people. However after the 12 were formed it appears that he spent more time with them and less with the crowds.

Luke takes care to mention here that there were also some special female disciples who weren't included in the 12 but took a special place in Jesus' ministry. From this point on it seems that not everyone was allowed to follow him everywhere and it is interesting to note his inner circle includes Mary Magdalene, Joanna and Susanna.

> After this Jesus began travelling around the nearby towns and villages, preaching the Good News about the Kingdom of God. He took his twelve disciples with him, along with some women who had been delivered from evil spirits and healed of various diseases. Among them were Mary Magdalene, from whom he had expelled seven demons; Joanna (Yochanna), Susanna the wife of Chuza, Herod's business manager; and many others who were helping support the work of the ministry from their own resources. TJB 10:61

Have you ever wondered what happened to the 12 Apostles after Jesus died on the cross? We all know that the Romans and the powerful Jewish leaders in Jerusalem were all looking for them for being guilty "by involvement" with Jesus.

They were not the kind of group you might have expected Jesus to discharge on his mission to reach the world. There was nothing special or spectacular about them. They were just simple working men. But Jesus formed them into the backbone of the church and gave them the most incredible task possible calling the entire world, including the mightiest empire ever known, to repentance and faith in the risen Christ. You can be sure that any skilled, first-century Roman citizen would have mocked at any prophecy that within three centuries Christianity will be the official faith of the empire. We came to know that the Apostles (except, of course, Judas Iscariot) "… locate a ship and sailed away" to another city, leaving Jerusalem for fear of being arrested. They only returned to Jerusalem– after all the anguish and controversy quieted down– during Pentecost (originally a Jewish festival celebrating grain harvest and commemorating Moses receiving the Ten Commandments). But, according to Acts 2:1:4, while the Apostles gathered for the feast:

> "…Suddenly there was a noise from heaven like the sound of a mighty wind. It filled the house where they were meeting. Then they saw what looked like fiery tongues moving in all directions, and a tongue came and settled on each person there. The Holy Spirit took control of everyone, and they began speaking whatever languages the Spirit let them speak."

The martyrdom of some of the Apostles is more certain than others. Historians will have different degrees of certainty concerning the circumstances of their deaths. For instance, unbiased historians will not take issue with the historical credibility of the martyrdom of Peter, Paul, and James the Apostle. Many of the other accounts have decent historic validity as well. Some accounts, however, raise the eyebrow and cause us to remain agnostic.
However, when boiled down to their least common denominator, it is very feasible to believe that all but one of the Apostles suffered and died a martyr's death, even if we can't be sure of the exact details.

Amidst some vagueness, one thing is clear—the reason given for their death was the same in all accounts. They were killed because they stated publicly to have seen Christ die and then to have seen Him alive. They all died because of an dogged, unremitting claim that Christ rose from the dead. That's how they received the Holy Spirit—and soon after, they daringly left their hiding place and started preaching and performing miracles, in the name of Jesus Christ, right in the streets of Jerusalem and in different languages!

Try to imagine the simplest, most quiet and easily panic-stricken man you know (most of the Apostles were fishermen, remember) suddenly speaking out like the smartest Nobel laureate you think highly of or a diplomatic statesman—and you'll get the idea on how miraculous this was.

The effective preaching the Apostle Peter attracted a huge crowd and he preached a sermon to the crowd with great competence that "On that day about three thousand believed his message and were baptised…" (Acts 2:41) establishing a solid and unstoppable Christian group in Jerusalem.

Lists of the 12 Apostles occur in Mark 3:16-19; Luke 6:13-16; Matthew 10:2-4 and Acts 1:13.

Comparing the four lists, we note that there appear to have been three groups of four disciples each. Peter, Philip, and James the son of Alphaeus seem to have been the leaders of these groups (see rows 1,5 and 9).

Peter's name occurs first, here, as in all the other lists, probably because he was the "first among equals." Matthew may also have listed him first because he became the leading apostle to the Jews.[879] James' name occurs before his brother John's, probably because James was older. Matthew described himself humbly as "the tax collector."

Thaddaeus ("Warm-Hearted") and Judas the son (or brother) of James, seem to be two names for the same man, and Simon the Cananaean seems to have been the same person as Simon the Zealot. The Zealots constituted a political party in Israel, centered in Galilee. They sought independence from the Roman occupation of Israel.[880] However, the name Zealot did not become a technical term for a member of this revolutionary group until the time of the Jewish Wars (A.D. 68-70).[881] So Zealot here probably refers to Simon's reputation for religious zeal.[882] Cananaean is the Aramaic form of Zealot and does not refer to the land of Canaan.

Iscariot may mean of Kerioth, the name of two Palestinian villages, or the dyer, his possible occupation. It may be a transliteration of the Latin sicarius, another Zealot-like movement.[883] Some scholars believe that Iscariot means false one and comes from the Aramaic seqar meaning falsehood.[884] The names Andrew and Philip are Greek and probably reflect the more Hellenistic flavor of their hometown, Bethsaida, which was on the east bank of the Jordan River (John 1:44).

These men became Jesus' main agents in carrying out His mission, though Judas Iscariot, of course, proved to be a hypocritical disciple. Probably Matthew described the Twelve in pairs because they went out in pairs (Mark 6:7)

Note: All the Apostles were from Galilee; except for Judas Iscariot, who was possibly from Judah.

Why are the lists of disciples different?

https://carm.org/bible-difficulties/matthew-mark/why-are-lists-disciples-different

There are four lists of the disciples found in Scripture. They sometimes differ in order, but this is not a problem since listing people in a different order still demonstrates that the people were the same. Matthew, Mark, and Luke, each contain a list of 12 disciples. However, Acts contains only 11. This is because Judas Iscariot, who had betrayed Christ, had died and was not listed. Acts 1:21-26 tells how they replaced Judas with Matthias thus retaining 12 disciples.

As you can see from the chart below, the disciples are listed according to each section of Scripture. The difference in content occurs with Thaddaeus and Judas the son of James. The most logical explanation is that both names describe the same person. Afterall, Judas the son of James would have been sharing the name of Judas Iscariot, the betrayer of Christ. It's highly probable that he preferred to be called Thaddeus.

It is common in Scripture to demonstrate people's alternate names. Take for example Acts 1:23 where we see that someone named Joseph is also called Barsabbas and Justus.

Who Were the 12 Disciples and What Should We Know about Them?

https://www.crosswalk.com/faith/bible-study/who-were-the-12-disciples-and-what-should-we-know-about-them.html

- Allyson Holland Crosswalk.com Contributing Writer

It was at this time that He went off to the mountain to pray, and He spent the whole night in prayer to God. And when day came, He called His disciples to Him and chose twelve of them, whom He also named apostles. (Luke 6:12-13)

Twelve men responded to the call. They were Jews, uneducated commoners, and simple men of faith who gave up everything to be followers of Christ. Jesus spent three years training these men to be leaders. Jesus' plan was to eventually have the disciples take over and carry on the work He had started.

The Twelve Disciples (Apostles): Who Were They?

You didn't choose me. I chose you. (John 14:16)

Now the names of the twelve apostles are these: The first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; and James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother; Philip and Bartholomew (Nathanael); Thomas and Matthew the tax collector; James the son of Alphaeus (James the Less), and Thaddaeus (Judas, son of James)*; Simon the Zealot, and Judas Iscariot, the one who betrayed Him. Peter and Andrew

And He said to them, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men." (Matthew 4:19)

Peter and Andrew--Sons of John, were born in Bethsaida. They later settled in a home together in the town of Capernaum. They were fisherman and worked alongside James and John. They were companions and had probably known each other for years.

Peter and Andrew were early followers of John the Baptist. It was Andrew who first introduced his older brother Peter to Jesus when they were in the wilderness with John. (John 1:40-42) It is thought that they became spiritual followers of Jesus at this time. Once Peter was introduced to Jesus they left John and became followers of Christ.

1. Peter

Also known as Simon, Simon Peter, or Cephas (Rock), Peter was a gregarious, natural leader, and an obvious spokesperson for the twelve. Peter's name is mentioned far more in the New Testament than any other of the disciples. He was the older of the two brothers and the only married disciple. (Luke 4:38) His wife was known to travel with him when he was on mission. (1 Cor. 9:5) His assignment was to bring the Gospel to the circumcised. (Gal. 2:7)

Peter is well known for denying Christ three times after Christ was arrested. After his own arrest many years later he requested to be crucified with his head down. He didn't believe he was worthy to be crucified in the same manner as his Lord. He died a martyr's death in Rome during the reign of Nero. Some speculate around the same time as Paul was being beheaded.

2. Andrew

An early disciple of John the Baptist, Andrew, and John, the Son of Zebedee were present when John the Baptist said, “Behold, the Lamb of God!” (John 1:35) Andrew was the first to follow Jesus and his enthusiasm was evident as his desire to introduce his older brother to Jesus revealed what was already in his heart—a deep love for God.

He was not a dominant person next to his outspoken brother. He was a passionate preacher and shared the gospel boldly and was a significant contributor to the early church.

Andrew died a martyr’s death. He faced crucifixion with boldness and courage. He said, “Oh, cross most welcome and longed for! With a willing mind, joyfully and desirously, I come to you, being a scholar of Him which did hang on you, because I have always been your lover and yearn to embrace you.”

James and John—Sons of Zebedee

There is some evidence that Zebedee was a man of affluence. He was able to hire enough servants to help with his fishing business. (Mark 1:20). In Scripture, James is listed before his younger brother John, yet he remains somewhat obscure except for the fact he is part of Jesus' inner three. John is much more in the forefront of what is happening during the three years of training with Christ. James and John were both known for being men of intense passion and fervor. Because of this Jesus nicknamed them the Sons of Thunder. (Mark 3:17)

3. James

James is the elder brother of John. He is a rather quiet part of the team of disciples in that we don't read much about him in Scripture. As part of Jesus' "inner three" he was permitted to be present along with Peter and John when Jesus raised Jairus' daughter from the dead (Mark 5:37), he witnessed Jesus' transfiguration on the Mount of Olives (Matthew 17:1), and he was in the Garden of Gethsemane with Jesus. (Mark 14:33)

James was the first disciple to be martyred (he was beheaded) and the only disciple to have their martyrdom recorded in Scripture. (Acts 12:1-3)

4. John

Known as the “disciple Jesus loved,” he was also a part of the inner three. (John 3:23) He wrote a large portion of the New Testament—The book of John, 1, 2, and 3 John, and the book of Revelation. He wrote more about love than any other New Testament author. His close proximity to Jesus taught him much about love.

He was exiled to the island of Patmos under Domitian, but after his death, John was allowed to return to Ephesus where he governed churches in Asia until his death at about A.D. 100.

5. Philip

"The next day He purposed to go into Galilee, and He found Philip. And Jesus said to him, Follow Me." (John 1:43)

What do we know about Philip? Almost nothing. Although a Jew, we only know him by his Greek name, Philip. A heart for evangelism, he was anxious to tell Nathanael the One foretold by Moses and the prophets had been found. (John 1:45) They were close companions and possibly studied the Old Testament together.

Philip was stoned and crucified in Hierapolis, Phrygia.

6. Nathanael

Also known as Bartholomew, Nathanael came from Cana in Galilee. (John 21:2) He expressed some local prejudice about Nazareth. (John 1:46) Jesus recognized how sincerely his love for God was from the beginning when He said, "Behold, an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no deceit!" (John 1:47)

Nathanael may have preached in India and translated the book of Matthew into their language. He was beaten, crucified, and beheaded. He died as a martyr while serving the people of Albinopolis, Armenia.

Jesus Chose Ordinary Men

What we know to be true about Jesus is that He chose ordinary and unrefined men. They were the commonest of the common. They were from rural areas, farmers, and fisherman. Christ purposely passed over the elite, aristocratic, and influential men of society and chose mostly the men from the dregs of society. That's how it has always been in God's economy. He exalts the humble and lays low those who are proud.

As Jesus went on from there, He saw a man called Matthew, sitting in the tax collector's booth; and He said to him, Follow Me! And he got up and followed Him. (Matthew 9:9)

7. Matthew

Levi, the Son of Alphaeus, Matthew was a tax collector--the most despised people in all of Israel. They were known for taking extra money from the people of Israel to pay off the Romans and to pad their own pockets.

Then it happened that as Jesus was reclining at the table in the house, behold, many tax collectors and sinners came and were dining with Jesus and His disciples; for there were many of them, and they were following Him. When the scribes of the Pharisee's saw that He was eating with the sinners and tax collectors, they said to His disciples, Why is he eating and drinking with tax collectors and sinners? And hearing this, Jesus said to them, It is not those who are healthy that need a physician, but those who are sick; I did not come to call the righteous, but sinners. (Mark 2:16)

Matthew brought the gospel to Ethiopia and Egypt. Hircanus the king had him killed with a spear.

8. Thomas

Usually nicknamed “Doubting Thomas," Thomas was also called Didymus, meaning The Twin (although a twin brother or sister is never mentioned in the Bible.) He was an outspoken skeptic to the point of being known as a pessimist. No details are given about Thomas in the first three Gospels other than the mention of his name. John’s first mention of Thomas is in John 11:16. Lazarus had died and the disciples feared for the life of Jesus and themselves if they were to go back to Bethany. Thomas speaks up. “Let us also go, that we may die with Him.” (John 11:16 NASB) Here we see the character quality of courage and loyalty to Christ, a quality not often attributed to Thomas.

His devotion to Christ is further displayed when Jesus told the disciples that He was going to go away and prepare a place for them. “And you know the way where I am going. Thomas said to Him, Lord, we do not know where You are going, how do we know the way?” (John 14:4-5) Thomas didn’t want to be left behind. And then Thomas’ love for Jesus and his desire to see and touch before he believed and then his declarat*ion, “My Lord and My God!” (John 20:28)*

Tradition strongly suggests that Thomas started the Christian church in India. Some suggest being run through by a spear killed him, ironically, similar to Jesus being pierced by a spear.

9. James the Less

He is the son of Alphaeus (Luke 6:15). His mother's name is Mary (Mark 15:40) and he has a brother named Joseph (Matthew 27:56). Except for a few details about his family, there is nothing more mentioned about him in Scripture. Maybe this is why he is referred to as James the Less in Mark 15:40. What is important to remember is although James was somewhat in the background, he was chosen by Jesus to be one of the twelve disciples. He was trained and used by Christ in a powerful way to further the Kingdom of God. He was a valuable team member.

Tradition says he was crucified in Sinai or possibly stoned to death in Jerusalem.

10. Simon the Zealot

Simon was probably a political activist in his younger years. Why would Jesus choose someone with this background?

“It is amazing that Jesus would select a man like Simon to be an apostle. But he was a man of fierce loyalties, amazing passion, courage, and zeal. Simon had believed the truth and embraced Christ as his Lord. The fiery enthusiasm he once had for Israel was now expressed in his devotion to Christ.” - Twelve Ordinary Men

There is some speculation about what happened to Simon. Tradition says that after preaching on the west coast of Africa, Simon went to England where he ended up being crucified in 74 AD.

11. Judas, son of James

The eleventh name on the list of disciples is Judas. Also known as Jude, Thaddeus, and Lebbaeus, Judas lived in obscurity as one of the Twelve. He did ask Jesus a question in John 14:22, “Lord, why are you going to reveal yourself only to us and not to the world at large?” Judas seemed overly concerned with this question. Christ responded by saying He would reveal Himself to anyone who loved Him.

Most early tradition says that Judas, son of James, a few years after Pentecost, took the gospel north to Edessa. There he healed the King of Edessa, Abgar. Eusebius the historian said the archives at Edessa contained the visit of Judas and the healing of Abgar (the records have now been destroyed). The traditional symbol of Judas is a club and tradition says he was clubbed to death for his faith.

12. Judas Iscariot

Jesus answered them, "Did I Myself not choose you, the twelve, and yet one of you is a devil?" Now He meant Judas the son of Simon Iscariot, for he, one of the twelve, was going to betray Him. (John 6:70-71)

The Traitor. Nothing is known about Judas' background. His encounter and call by Jesus is not recorded in Scripture. He was not from Galilee--that much is known. He obviously became a follower and stayed with Jesus for three years. He gave Christ three years of his life, but he certainly didn't give Him his heart, and Jesus knew this. Judas betrayed Jesus for thirty pieces of silver. (Matthew 26:15)

"The other eleven apostles are all great encouragements to us because they exemplify how common people with typical failings can be used by God in uncommon, remarkable ways. Judas, on the other hand, stands as a warning about the evil potential of spiritual carelessness, squandered opportunity, sinful lusts, and hardness of the heart. Here was a man who drew as close to the Savior as it is humanly possible to be. He enjoyed every privilege Christ affords. He was intimately familiar with everything Jesus taught. Yet he remained in unbelief and went into a hopeless eternity."

In what order were the disciples chosen?

In Mark, Jesus saw Peter and his brother Andrew together fishing, and called them to follow him. James and John, sons of Zeberdee, were the next disciples to be chosen. Mark chapter 3 has Jesus formally choose the twelve from those who followed him.

In Matthew, Jesus once again saw Peter and his brother Andrew together fishing, and called them to follow him. James and John, sons of Zeberdee, were the next disciples to be chosen. Matthew has Jesus call Matthew the tax-collector.

In Luke, Jesus met Simon Peter in his mother's house, but did not call him at that stage. Later, he helped some fishermen in a boat - James and John, sons of Zebedee, and Simon. Jesus told Simon that he would follow Jesus, so the three left their boat and followed Jesus. It was some time later that Jesus actually chose the remainder of his disciples, including Andrew, brother of Peter, but not necessarily in any order.

In John's Gospel, Andrew was a disciple of John the Baptist. John told him and another disciple to follow Jesus. Later, Andrew fetched his brother Simon, who joined the other disciples. John does not mention all the disciples and provides least information as to when the author believed them to have been chosen

https://www.gotquestions.org/how-old-were-Jesus-disciples.html

Question: "How old were Jesus' disciples?"

Answer: The Bible does not specifically give the ages of any of the original twelve disciples. However, a few observations can be made regarding their ages.

First, Scripture teaches Jesus was about 30 years old when He began His public ministry (Luke 3:23). In Jewish culture, disciples (or students) were generally younger than their teacher. Therefore, it is likely the disciples were under 30 years of age. Jesus also referred to them as "little children," possibly indicating they were several years younger than He.

Second, many of the disciples worked as fishermen. James and John specifically left their father in the boat to follow Jesus (Matthew 4:21–22). This means they were old enough to work full-time. They were likely at least teenagers by this time, since they could leave home to follow a rabbi.

Third, Peter is noted as already married when he began following Jesus. His sick mother-in-law is mentioned in Matthew 8:14. This means Peter was at least old enough to be married; at the very least, Peter was in his mid-teens.

Fourth, the later lives of many of the disciples help to reveal their possible ages. John lived the longest, passing away in the last decade of the first century, according to church history. This was 60 years after walking with Jesus. Even if John were in his 90s when he died, he would have been no more than 30 years old at the time he was with Jesus. Since John was old enough to care for the mother of Jesus (John 19:26–27), he was probably at least 20 at the time of the crucifixion.

Peter referred to himself as an old man when he was in his 60s, about 30 years after walking with Jesus. This may mean Peter was in his 20s or 30s at the time he was with Jesus. The Gospel of

Matthew was written 30–40 years after Jesus' resurrection, indicating that Matthew was perhaps in his 20s when following Jesus on earth.

Jewish culture made it customary for a child to begin his religious training at the age of 5 and to continue to age 12 or 13. If a boy was intelligent and interested in continuing his religious studies, he would then seek a rabbi to disciple him and would follow and pattern his life after the rabbi until age 30. At that time he could take on disciples of his own. A young man's discipleship training under a rabbi would usually begin between the ages of 13 and 15. If this pattern was consistent with the followers of Jesus, some of them may have joined Jesus as early as age 13 and would have still been teenagers at the time of His death, resurrection, and ascension.

Though the Bible does not give the exact ages of the disciples of Jesus, it is likely they were all between the ages of 13 and 30 at the time they followed Jesus. This view allows for some variety in their ages, with John likely the youngest and Peter perhaps one of the oldest since he was already married.

Selection of the Twelve Apostles (Luke 6:12-19)

http://www.jesuswalk.com/lessons/6_12-19.htm

Excerpts:

Exposition

Up until this time in Jesus' ministry there was little organization. He was an extremely popular itinerant preacher and teacher that increasingly attracted crowds from far away. At this point you have two classes of people, the crowds and the disciples. The crowds came to hear him, but a growing band of followers trailed him wherever he went. These were called "disciples," Greek mathetes, "learner, pupil, disciple" from the verb manthano, "to learn." If the movement is to grow and mature, Jesus must choose leaders.

All Night in Prayer on the Mountain (6:12)

If you've ever been a manager, you know that one of your most difficult and important tasks is hiring the right employee for key positions in your organization. When mistakes are made here -- and they are far too often made -- they are extremely difficult and expensive to repair. Sometimes they can deeply hurt the organization for years to come.

Luke records, "One of those days Jesus went out to a mountainside to pray, and spent the night praying to God." (6:12) Neither Matthew nor Mark mention this all night prayer session. But Jesus' prayer life is one of Luke's themes; we will see Jesus' example of prayer again and again in Luke. Luke uses a Greek word here that is used only once in the New Testament: dianuktereuo, "spend the whole night."[1] It was vital that Jesus hear the Father correctly in this matter. An error could cause disaster. Would that we spent all night sessions of prayer before selecting officers for our churches! Better have no one in an office, than the wrong person.

Disciples and Apostles (6:13)

"When morning came, he called his disciples to him and chose twelve of them, whom he also designated apostles" (6:13)

The text implies to me that his disciples were encamped nearby. This was outside of town in a remote place. Those who were his serious followers came everywhere with him.

Notice the distinction Jesus makes between disciples and apostles. Jesus has many disciples, but he only selects twelve to be designated apostles. We see later that Jesus appoints 70 others for a preaching mission (Luke 10). It is important that we see that the apostles are being selected from a considerably larger group of followers.

While "disciple" means "learner, pupil, devoted follower," the word "apostle" means something different. Our English word "apostle" is a transliteration of the Greek word apostolos, "ambassador, delegate, messenger,"[2] from the verb apostello, "to send away or out."[3] These men are designated apostles because they are given a particular commission or set of orders. "The Great Commission" was given first to the apostles, and then, by extension, to the Church they established. Often the New Testament refers to these twelve apostles as "the disciples," but there is a distinction we need to keep in mind: disciples are learners and followers; apostles are disciples who have been given a particular commission.

In what order did Jesus find his apostles?

https://www.answers.com/Q/In_what_order_did_Jesus_find_his_apostles

It may not be possible to identify the order in which all the apostles were called, but each gospel gives some information about who may have been among the first:

In Matthew's Gospel, Jesus was walking by the Sea of Galilee when he called the brothers, (1 and 2) Simon and Andrew. Afterwards he called (3 and 4) James and John, sons of Zebedee, and subsequently (5) Matthew. After this all twelve are listed.

Similarly, in Mark's Gospel, Jesus was walking by the Sea of Galilee when he called the brothers, (1 and 2) Simon and Andrew, and soon afterwards (3 and 4) James and John, sons of Zebedee, who were mending their nets. The next disciple was (5) Levi, whom some regard as the same person as Matthew in Matthew's Gospel. In chapter 3, Jesus chose twelve disciples of all those who followed him.

In Luke's Gospel, Jesus met (1) Simon Peter in a house in Capernaum, where he healed Peter's mother-in-law. Later, he saw Simon Peter with (2) James and (3) John, sons of Zebedee, on fishing boats together, but does not seem to have called them. The next disciple was (4) Levi. In Luke chapter 6, Jesus was on a mountain when he chose twelve of those who were with him, to be his apostles. This is the only mention in Luke's Gospel of Andrew.

In John's Gospel, Jesus had returned to the place of his baptism, traditionally by the River Jordan, when John the Baptist pointed him out to two of his disciples, one of whom was (1) Andrew. The disciples followed Jesus and later Andrew called his brother, (2) Peter, to follow Jesus. The next disciple was (3) Philip, then (4) Nathaniel.

What are the biblical qualifications for apostleship?

https://www.gotquestions.org/apostleship.html

Question: "What are the biblical qualifications for apostleship?"

Answer: An apostle ("one sent on a mission") is one whom God has sent on an errand or with a message. An apostle is accountable to his Sender and carries the authority of his Sender. An apostleship is the office an apostle holds.

Jesus Christ Himself has an "apostleship." He wears "Apostle" as one of His descriptive titles (Hebrews 3:1). He was sent to earth by the Heavenly Father with God's authoritative message, which He faithfully delivered (John 17:1–5).

While Jesus was here on earth, He personally selected from His many followers twelve men and gave them an apostleship—special responsibility to receive and spread His message after He returned to heaven (John 17:6–20; Matthew 10:1–4; Mark 3:14–15). These chosen and sent ones were His apostles. During the time Jesus was training them, He did not explain the criteria that He used to choose them.

One of the twelve was Judas Iscariot, who betrayed Jesus to His enemies. In agony of conscience, Judas hanged himself (Matthew 27:5). Thus, when Jesus returned to heaven, He left behind only eleven apostles.

Some days later, the remaining apostles were in Jerusalem praying with Jesus' mother, His brothers, and other believers. The group totaled about 120 (Acts 1:12–26). Simon Peter addressed the group and told them that Psalm 69:25 predicted Judas' desertion and Psalm 109:8 predicted that the defector's place among the apostles should be filled. The apostleship must fall to someone else.

Peter proposed choosing a new apostle and set the qualifications. Not everyone could be considered for an apostleship. Candidates needed to have been with Jesus during the whole three years that Jesus was among them. That is, he needed to be an eyewitness of Jesus' baptism when the Heavenly Father validated Jesus' person and work. He needed to have heard Jesus' life-changing teachings and been present to see His healings and other miracles. He needed to have witnessed Jesus sacrifice Himself on the cross and to have seen Jesus walk, talk, and eat among the disciples again after His resurrection. These were the pivotal facts of Jesus' life, the heart of the message they were to teach, and personal witnesses were required to verify the truth of the good news.

The prayer group in Jerusalem nominated two who met these qualifications for apostleship: Joseph Barsabbas and Matthias. Then the disciples asked God to guide them to know which one was to fill the post. Using a method of determining God's will that was common at that time, they cast lots, thus giving God freedom to make His choice clear. The lot fell to Matthias, and he became the twelfth apostle.

On repeated occasions, the apostles gave witness of their personal observations of Jesus, making such statements as, "We are witnesses of everything Jesus did in the country of the Jews and in Jerusalem. They killed him by hanging him on a tree, but God raised him from the dead on the third day and caused him to be seen" (Acts 10:39–40).

Months later, Saul, one of the Pharisees, was trying to stamp out the new "cult" of Christianity by killing and jailing some of Jesus' followers. While Saul was on one of his deadly errands to Damascus, the living Jesus personally appeared to him. This undeniable encounter with the resurrected Lord revolutionized Saul's life. In a vision to another believer in Damascus, Jesus said that He had chosen Saul "as My chosen instrument to carry My name before the Gentiles and their kings and before the people of Israel" (Acts 9:15; cf. 22:14–15). Following his conversion, Paul spent some time in Arabia, where he was taught by Christ (Galatians 1:12–17). The other apostles recognized that Jesus Himself had appointed their former enemy to be one of them. As Saul went into Gentile territories, he changed his name to the Greek "Paul," and Jesus, who gave Paul his apostleship, sent many messages through him to His churches and to unbelievers. It was this apostle, Paul, who wrote over half of the books of the New Testament.

In two of his Epistles, Paul identifies the office of apostle as the first that Jesus appointed to serve His churches (1 Corinthians 12:27–30; Ephesians 4:11). Clearly, the work of apostleship was to lay the foundation of the Church in a sense secondary only to that of Christ Himself (Ephesians 2:19–20), thus requiring eyewitness authority behind their preaching. After the apostles laid the foundation, the Church could be built.

While Paul never claimed to be included among the original twelve, believers have recognized that Jesus appointed him as His special apostle to the Gentiles (Galatians 1:1; 1 Corinthians 9:1; Acts 26:16–18). There are others in the early church referred to as “apostles” (Acts 14:4, 14; Romans 16:7; 1 Thessalonians 2:6), but only in the sense that they were appointed, authorized, and sent by churches on special errands. These individuals bore the title “apostle” in a limited sense and did not possess all the qualifications of apostleship that the original twelve and Paul did.

No biblical evidence exists to indicate that these thirteen apostles were replaced when they died. See Acts 12:1–2, for example. Jesus appointed the apostles to do the founding work of the Church, and foundations only need to be laid once. After the apostles’ deaths, other offices besides apostleship, not requiring an eyewitness relationship with Jesus, would carry on the work.

Who Were The 12 Disciples or Apostles of Jesus Christ? (and Other Disciples?)
https://www.whatchristianswanttoknow.com/who-were-the-12-disciples-or-apostles-of-jesus-christ/

Excerpts:

The 12 closest friends of Jesus are called the 12 disciples or apostles. The word disciple means someone who is a student or pupil of someone else. The biblical sense of the word is that the person is not just a learner, but an adherent of the teacher’s doctrines. Apostle means that the person is a representative, ambassador or delegate of someone else. Practically there is little difference between the way these two words are used in the Bible. However, there is one small distinction. Not all disciples are called apostles in the Bible. But all apostles are disciples (that somewhat depends on how you define Paul the Apostle).

Other Disciples?

There were many other men and women who followed Christ in the Bible. There were also disciples of some of the disciples. Of the four writers of the beginning books of the New Testament, called the Gospels, Matthew and John are in the list above. Mark was a follower of Peter and Luke was a disciple of Paul.

The Calling of the Disciples [Recommended]

Excerpts:

The Gospels contain records of Jesus calling his disciples that can be very confusing. The key to understanding Jesus' calling of his disciples is to read all four Gospels, and then we can piece the records together. It is also important to have some knowledge of the first-century culture, especially the rabbinic practices. The four Gospel records we will compare are: Matthew 4:18-22; Mark 1:16-20; Luke 5:4-11; and John 1:29-2:2.

In summary, many of the apostles, certainly Peter, Andrew, Philip and Nathaniel, and likely James and John as well, became followers of Jesus before he lived in Galilee, while John the Baptist was alive. Months later, after Jesus had performed many miracles and John the Baptist had been killed, Jesus told some of the Apostles he would make them fishers of men, and their discipleship intensified. At some time after that, in Luke 5, Jesus said, "From now on you will be catching people," and at that time the disciples started into full-time ministry. So when we study the full chronology of the calling of the Apostles, Jesus did not simply tell people who barely knew him to give up their occupations and follow him. He cultivated a relationship with his future Apostles, discipled them to some extent, and then finally called them into full-time ministry…

The Gospel of John

- There is no list of the 12 in John, but more references to individual apostles is made here than in the Synoptics. John does not name Bartholomew but in Jn 1:43-50 tells about the discipleship of Nathaniel.
- Bar-tholomew means son of Tolmai, thus tradition suggests that Nathanel was "son of Tolmai".
- In the synoptics, Philip is paired with Bartholomew in the lists of the apostles. In John's narrative, Philip introduced Nathanel to Jesus.
- The historian, Eusebius of Caesarea, says Bartholomew preached in India.

Where did the Apostles live?

- Those chosen by Jesus appear to have all been from Galilee, mostly from around the Sea of Galilee.
- After his death, they stayed in or around Jerusalem, leading the community and a few travelled abroad, carrying Jesus' message outside Palestine.
- These men accompanied Jesus on his journeys, watching his actions, learning from his teachings, and scripture implies that they had access to teaching not available to the general public.
- It was the post-resurrection encounters that changed them.

Note: All the Apostles were from Galilee; except for Judas Iscariot, who was possibly from Judah.

What happened to the 12?

- The New Testament tells of the fate of only two of the apostles: Judas, who betrayed Jesus and then went out and hanged himself, and James the son of Zebedee, who was executed by Herod about 44 AD (Acts 12:2). Herod Agrippa I ruled Palestine from 41-44 C.E. This is the only biblical account of the death of one of the twelve. The information we have about the death of other members of the 12 come from historians.

The 12 Apostles as Listed in the Gospels

Lists of the 12 Apostles occur in Mark 3:16-19; Luke 6:13-16; Matthew 10:2-4 and Acts 1:13. Comparing the four lists, we note that there appear to have been three groups of four disciples each. Peter, Philip, and James the son of Alphaeus seem to have been the leaders of these groups (see rows 1, 5 and 9).

Judas Iscariot

Background Information

Iscariot. Means “man from Kerioth” (in Judea; see Joshua 15:25) and would apply equally to the father (Simon) and the son (Judas) (cf. John 12:4). Judas seems to have been the only non-Galilean among the Twelve. One of the Twelve. Therefore one of the last persons likely to betray Jesus.
[Source: NIV ’08 Study Bible Notes]

Regarding Judas: One cannot be an official apostle without seeing Jesus’ resurrection, which Judas did not see because he hung himself beforehand. The 12 were called apostles (chosen sent ones) prior but did not become the apostles of the Church until the resurrection, for the church was not officially born until the Holy Spirit was sent on Pentecost. It was then the apostles were put in their office of teaching, planting churches and doing miracles in the power of the Holy Spirit.

Was Judas saved because he was a disciple and lost salvation? It is assumed he was saved because he traveled with the other disciples but it may be more prudent to take the position he was not. Judas was hand-picked like the other disciples but his position was temporary (Jesus knew what was going on all along). He was given the job of treasury but he was secretly a thief. Jesus put Judas in charge of the very thing that would give either wings to his hearts corruption or for his repentance, money. Judas often heard Jesus speak on money but it did not change him. The possibility to reform him was always there but it did not occur because of his own heart not inclined to obey the words spoken by our Lord.

thirty silver coins (thirty pieces of silver). Equivalent to 120 denarii. Laborers customarily received one denarius for a day’s work (ch. Mark 20:1-16); the price of a slave among the Israelites in ancient times. (See reference to this amount in Zechariah 11:12.)

thirty shekels, This was the price an Israelite had to pay his neighbor if his ox accidentally gored his neighbor’s slave to death (Exo_21:32).[a freeman was double] This [relatively] small amount of money shows the light esteem with which the chief priests and Judas regarded Jesus (cf. Isa_53:3).

The word used in Matthew 26:15 (arguria) simply means “silver coins,” and scholars disagree on the type of coins that would have been used. Donald Wiseman suggests two possibilities. They could have been tetradrachms of Tyre, usually referred to as Tyrian shekels (about 0.5 troy ounces), or staters from Antioch, which bore the head of Augustus. Alternatively, they could have been Ptolemaic tetradrachms… The Tyrian shekel weighed four Athenian drachmas, about 14 grams, more than earlier 11-gram Israeli shekels, but was regarded as the equivalent for religious duties at that time. Because Roman coinage was only 80% silver, the purer (94% or more) Tyrian shekels were required to pay the temple tax in Jerusalem. The money changers referenced in the New Testament Gospels (Matt. 21:12 and parallels) exchanged Tyrian shekels for common Roman currency.

Then entered Satan. — but not yet in the full sense. The awful stages of it were these: (1) Covetousness being his master — passion, the Lord let it reveal itself and gather strength by entrusting him with “the bag” (John 12:6), as treasurer to Himself and the Twelve. (2) In the discharge of that most sacred trust he became “a thief,” appropriating its contents from time to time to his own use. Satan, seeing this door into his heart standing wide open, determines to enter by it, but cautiously (2Corinthians 2:11); first merely "putting it into his heart to betray Him" (John 13:2), suggesting the thought to him that by this means he might enrich himself. (3) This thought was probably converted into a settled purpose by what took place in Simon's house at Bethany. (See Matthew 26:6, and see note on John 12:4-8.) (4) Starting back, perhaps, or mercifully held back, for some time, the determination to carry it into immediate effect was not consummated till, sitting at the paschal supper, " Satan entered into him " (see note on John 13:27), and conscience, effectually stifled, only rose again to be his tormentor. What lessons in all this for every one (Ephesians 4:27; Jas 4:7; 1Peter 5:8,9)! [Source: Jamieson, Fausset and Brown Commentary]

St Mark, like St Matthew, connects the treachery of Judas with the scene in Simon's house. His worldly hopes fell altogether at the thought of "burial." It is a striking juxtaposition: as Mary's is the highest deed of loving and clear-sighted faith, Judas' is the darkest act of treacherous and misguided hate.

The motive that impelled Judas was probably not so much avarice as disappointed worldly ambition. Jesus said of him that he was a "devil" (diabolus or Satan), the term that was on a special occasion applied to St Peter, and for the same reason. Peter for a moment allowed the thought of the earthly kingdom to prevail; with Judas it was the predominant idea which gained a stronger and stronger hold on his mind until it forced out whatever element of good he once possessed. "When the manifestation of Christ ceased to be attractive it became repulsive; and more so every day" (Neander, Life of Christ, Bohn's trans., p. 424).
[Source: The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges note]

Jewish literature reports that the high priests bullied those who opposed them; against some popular misconceptions, the Gospels are no more anti-Jewish for their reports of high-level corruption and abuses than are the ancient rabbis, Dead Sea Scrolls and Josephus who report the same sort of behavior by the priestly aristocracy. (Indeed, many scholars today believe that Josephus even mentions the Jewish aristocrats alongside the Romans as involved in Jesus' execution; despite later Christian editing, much of Jewish Antiquities 18.63-64 is original.) The aristocratic priests who dominated Jerusalem's municipal elite would certainly not tolerate someone who claims that God has directed him to attack their temple cult. But they have to be cautious due to Jesus' popularity.

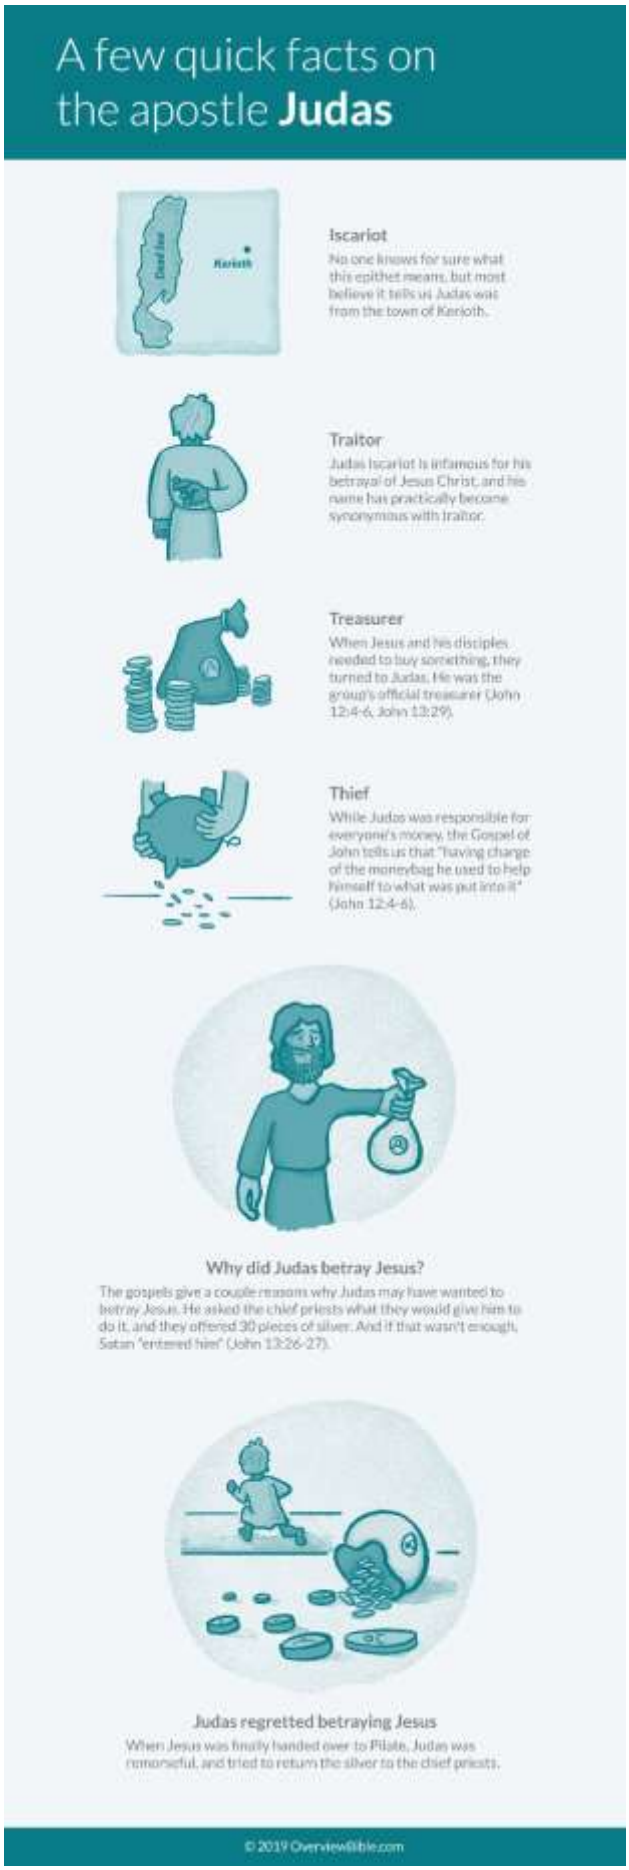
Who Was Judas Iscariot? The Beginner's Guide

Judas Iscariot was one of the 12 apostles of Jesus Christ. He infamously betrayed Jesus for 30 pieces of silver, which lead to his death on the cross. Today, "Judas" is virtually synonymous for "traitor."



Among the disciples, Judas was the official treasurer, and he was apparently pretty shady even before he made his big debut as the worst person in history. (He stole money.) Despite that, Judas was a fairly conflicted person. He tried to return the 30 pieces of silver, and according to the Gospel of Matthew, he hanged himself not long after betraying Jesus.

Judas appears in several New Testament stories, and while the Gospel writers are in unanimous agreement that he betrayed Jesus, they present various takes on his motives and the circumstances surrounding his death.

So what else do we really know about Judas? For starters, here are the quick facts.

What does Iscariot mean?

People in ancient Israel didn't have last names like we do. In the Bible, the "last names" you see are epithets—or descriptions—which generally refer to where someone comes from, a title, their father's name, or a group they're identified with. Unfortunately, scholars aren't totally sure what Iscariot refers to.

Most scholars believe Iscariot means that Judas came from the town of Kerioth, which could make him the only disciple from Judea (the others were from Galilee). But there have been a number of other theories, including the possibility that it identifies him with the Sicarii—a group of Jewish rebels who were trained as assassins.

Whatever it means, "Iscariot" helps us distinguish Jesus' betrayer from the other people named Judas.

Speaking of which, let's make sure we've got the right guy.

Which Judas are we talking about?

"Judas" seems to have been a common name in Jesus' time. That makes sense, considering that it's the Greek form of the Hebrew "Judah," the tribe of the heroic King David and the coming Messiah.

There are three people named Judas in the gospels (and eight total in the New Testament). Two of them were disciples of Jesus, and one of them was Jesus' half-brother, which probably made family gatherings a little awkward after Jesus' death. It's also possible that Jesus' brother Judas was one of the Twelve.

The Judas is distinguished from the others as Judas Iscariot.

He thought something else would happen

Like the rest of the disciples (and most first-century Jews), Judas likely thought that the promised Messiah would physically overthrow Israel's enemies and restore the kingdom through force. And all Jesus' talk of "the kingdom of God" may have added to the confusion.

After all Judas Iscariot witnessed, it's hard to imagine that he couldn't believe Jesus was the Messiah. He may have genuinely thought that by creating conflict, he'd be tipping Jesus hand and accelerating his movement.

The Bible doesn't tell us that, but when Jesus is eventually handed over to Pilate (and thus at the mercy of the Roman government), Judas expresses remorse (Matthew 27:3), which could be a sign that he expected a different outcome.

Did Judas know something the other disciples didn't?

Interestingly, a second-century text (written long after the death of Judas and the other apostles) suggested a different reason why Judas killed Jesus: Judas was the good guy.

The Gospel of Judas is a Gnostic text which claims to contain conversations between Jesus and Judas Iscariot. It suggests that Jesus actually instructed Judas to betray him, and that Judas was the only one who truly understood Jesus' message.

The early Christian church didn't buy it. Bible scholars don't either.

Jesus knew Judas was going to betray him

Throughout his ministry, Jesus dropped regular hints to his disciples that he was going to die. But during the Last Supper, the gospel writers tell us that Jesus also knew exactly how he was going to die—and who would betray him.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

In some accounts, Jesus even blatantly tells the disciples which one of them would betray him, but somehow they miss it:

"After he had said this, Jesus was troubled in spirit and testified, 'Very truly I tell you, one of you is going to betray me.'

His disciples stared at one another, at a loss to know which of them he meant. One of them, the disciple whom Jesus loved, was reclining next to him. Simon Peter motioned to this disciple and said, 'Ask him which one he means.'

Leaning back against Jesus, he asked him, 'Lord, who is it?'

Jesus answered, 'It is the one to whom I will give this piece of bread when I have dipped it in the dish.' Then, dipping the piece of bread, he gave it to Judas, the son of Simon Iscariot. As soon as Judas took the bread, Satan entered into him.

So Jesus told him, 'What you are about to do, do quickly.' But no one at the meal understood why Jesus said this to him. Since Judas had charge of the money, some thought Jesus was telling him to buy what was needed for the festival, or to give something to the poor." —John 17:21–29

The disciples often failed to understand what Jesus was really saying, and here it seems that Judas' role as the group's treasurer contributed to the confusion. It's plain as day to us, reading John's account after the fact, where every mention of Judas Iscariot is colored by hindsight, but clearly, the disciples had no reason to suspect Judas more than anyone else. He had been with them for three years, and despite his dishonesty, each of them wondered if they might be the eventual traitor.

But Jesus knew what Judas was going to do all along. And he didn't stop him, because it was all part of God's plan for redemption.

Did Judas regret betraying Jesus?

Once the chief priests found Jesus guilty of blasphemy and handed him over to Pilate, Judas had a change of heart. Some debate about whether or not Judas was repentant or simply remorseful, but it's clear that he was consumed by guilt after seeing the consequences of his actions.

He tried and failed to return his "reward," and openly acknowledged the sin of his betrayal:

"When Judas, who had betrayed him, saw that Jesus was condemned, he was seized with remorse and returned the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and the elders. 'I have sinned,' he said, 'for I have betrayed innocent blood.'

'What is that to us?' they replied. 'That's your responsibility.'

So Judas threw the money into the temple and left." —Matthew 27:3–5a

Ultimately, Judas' remorse led to his death, which is why many scholars make a point of distinguishing his regret from repentance. He acknowledged Jesus' innocence, but not his Lordship, and he sought other ways to cope with his guilt, rather than pursuing forgiveness from the only one who could deliver it—even after three years of witnessing Jesus freely offer that forgiveness…

How did Judas Iscariot die?

According to Matthew, Judas hanged himself (27:5), but according to Luke, he “fell headlong, his body burst open and all his intestines spilled out” (Acts 1:18). This seems like a pretty obvious contradiction.

Skeptics love this one, and if we are honest and searching for the truth we should want a good explanation ourselves. Josh McDowell and Don Stewart point out that Matthew didn’t say that Judas didn’t fall, and Luke [the writer of Acts] didn’t say that Judas didn’t hang himself. A possible reconstruction is that Judas hanged himself on a tree growing on the edge of the Valley of Hinnom, and that after his body hung there for a while, the branch from which he dangled snapped, causing his body to tumble the twenty-five to forty feet from the edge of the cliff, mangling it on the rocks or on other trees, with the gory result that Luke describes.
[Source: Glenn Pearson, “That’s A Great Question”]

Question: "How did Judas die?"

Answer: Matthew 27:5-8 says, "So Judas threw the money into the temple and left. Then he went away and hanged himself. The chief priests picked up the coins and said, ‘It is against the law to put this into the treasury, since it is blood money.’ So they decided to use the money to buy the potter's field as a burial place for foreigners. That is why it has been called the Field of Blood to this day." Acts 1:18-19 says, "With the reward he got for his wickedness, Judas bought a field; there he fell headlong, his body burst open and all his intestines spilled out. Everyone in Jerusalem heard about this, so they called that field in their language Akeldama, that is, Field of Blood." Which is correct? Did Judas hang himself or did he fall? Did Judas buy the field or did the priests buy the field?

Judas hanged himself in the potter’s field (Matthew 27:5), and then, after his body decayed and bloated, evidently the rope broke, and he burst into pieces on the land of the potter’s field (Acts 1:18-19). The Acts passage presumes Judas' hanging, as a man falling down in a field does not result in his body bursting open. Only decomposition and a fall from a height could cause a body to burst open. When Judas threw the thirty pieces of silver down, the priests took the money and used it to buy the potter’s field (Matthew 27:7), not knowing that Judas was going to hang himself there. Judas may not have purchased the field himself, but it was the money Judas received for betraying Jesus that purchased the field.

When and How Judas Iscariot Died

The general teaching concerning Judas hanging himself before Jesus' crucifixion is not substantiated by the Word of God.

I Corinthians 15:3-5: How that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; And that he [Christ] was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures; And that HE WAS SEEN of Cephas [Peter], then OF THE TWELVE.

According to the Scriptures, JUDAS ISCARIOT WAS STILL AMONG THE TWELVE APOSTLES AFTER CHRIST DIED AND WAS RAISED FROM THE DEAD AND WAS ALIVE DURING THE APPEARANCES OF JESUS.

The times and appearances of Jesus after the Resurrection: The accounts in both the Gospel of Luke and John are identical. This was Jesus' first appearance to His apostles that Jesus showed them His scars. The time of His appearances was the first day of the week, after the resurrection, toward the evening.

John 20:19: Then the same day at evening being the first day of the week...

Luke 24:1 and 29: Now upon the first day of the week...for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent...

Luke 24:33 and 36: And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them.

And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

There were "eleven" of the apostles gathered together, and those who were with them, when Jesus stood in the midst of them.

John 20:24 GIVES THE SAME ACCOUNT ONLY THIS TIME THE RECORD STATES THE NAME OF THE ABSENT DISCIPLE.

John 20:24: BUT THOMAS, one of the twelve, called Didymus, WAS NOT WITH THEM when Jesus came.

Thomas was not present during the time of Jesus' first appearance after his resurrection. THE ELEVEN THAT WERE PRESENT HAD TO INCLUDE JUDAS ISCARIOT.

According to the Gospel of John, chapter 20, verse 26: "...after eight days when his disciples were within ...." These are the same apostles who were assembled together during the first appearance as recorded in Luke 24.

Luke 24:33: The eleven [WITHOUT THOMAS] gathered together, and them that were with them.

THE TIME THAT JESUS WAS SEEN OF THE TWELVE is stated in John 20.

John 20:26: Again HIS DISCIPLES WERE WITHIN, AND THOMAS WITH THEM [eleven and Thomas made the count twelve]: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you.

"Again" the disciples were within, and this time Thomas was present. JESUS STOOD IN THE MIDST OF THE TWELVE, WHICH ESTABLISHES AND CONFIRMS WHAT IS WRITTEN in I Corinthians 15:5: "...he was seen of Cephas, THEN OF THE TWELVE.

After Judas betrayed Jesus

Matthew 27:5: And he [Judas Iscariot] cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Judas could not have left the temple and immediately killed himself because Judas was present during the first (excluding Thomas) and second (including Thomas) appearances of Jesus to His apostles "after" His resurrection. This account is just a summarization of the life of Judas.

Another account that confirms Judas was alive after the Resurrection

Acts 1:1-2: The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach. UNTIL THE DAY IN WHICH HE WAS TAKEN UP, AFTER THAT HE THROUGH THE HOLY GHOST HAD GIVEN COMMANDMENTS UNTO THE APOSTLES WHOM HE HAD CHOSEN.

Verse 2 states that Jesus gave commandments to the apostles he had chosen. According to Luke 6:13, Jesus chose twelve apostles, not eleven.

Acts 1:3: To whom also he shewed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days...

"To whom" refers back to the apostles (of verse 2) whom Jesus had chosen. He showed himself alive by many infallible proofs, being seen of them (the twelve apostles) forty days.

In order to accurately understand the rest of Acts I, it is necessary to recognize that eleven of the apostles were Galileans. JUDAS WAS FROM THE TOWN OF KERIOTH IN SOUTHERN JUDEA. The Hebrew word for "Iscariot" is Iskariotes and means, "men of Kerioth" according to Strong's Concordance. Judas was from the town of Kerioth in southern Judea.

“Jesus answered them, "Did I not choose you, the twelve, and one of you is a devil?" He spoke of Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon, for it was he who would betray Him, being one of the twelve.” (John 6:70-71)

“While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled.” (John 17:12)

“While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled.” (John 17:12)

Judas Iscariot

“Before the Betrayal: For any definite allusion to Judas during the interval lying between his call and the events immediately preceding the betrayal, we are indebted to John alone. These allusions are made with the manifest purpose of showing forth the nefarious character of Judas from the beginning; and in their sequence there is a gradual development and growing clearness in the manner in which Jesus makes prophecy regarding his future betrayer.

“Thus, after the discourse on the Bread of Life in the synagogue of Capernaum (John 6:26-59), when many of the disciples deserted Jesus (verse 66) and Peter protested the allegiance of the apostles (verse 69), Jesus answered, ‘Did not I choose you the twelve, and one of you is a devil’ (verse 70).

“Then follows John's commentary, ‘ Now he spake of Judas the son of Simon Iscariot, for he it was that should betray him, being one of the twelve ’ (verse 71), implying that Judas was already known to Jesus as being in spirit one of those who ‘ went back, arid walked no more with him ’ (verse 66). But the situation, however disquieting it must have been to the ambitious designs which probably actuated Judas in his acceptance of the apostleship (compare below), was not sufficiently critical to call for immediate desertion on his part.

“Instead, he lulled his fears of exposure by the fact that he was not mentioned by name, and continued ostensibly one of the faithful. Personal motives of a sordid nature had also influence in causing him to remain. Appointed keeper of the purse, he disregarded the warnings of Jesus concerning greed and hypocrisy (compare Matt 6:20; Luke 12:1-3) and appropriated the funds to his own use. As a cloak to his avarice, he pretended to be zealous in their administration, and therefore, at the anointing of Jesus' feet by Mary, he asked ‘Why was not this ointment sold for 300 shillings, and given to the poor? NOW THIS HE SAID, NOT BECAUSE HE CARED FOR THE POOR; BUT

BECAUSE HE WAS A THIEF, AND HAVING THE BAG TOOK AWAY WHAT WAS PUT THEREIN' (John 12:5-6; compare also Matt 26:7-13; Mark 14:3-8).

"The Betrayal: Yet, although by this craftiness Judas concealed for a time his true nature from the rest of the disciples, and fomented any discontent that might arise among them (compare Mark 14:4), he now felt that his present source of income could not long remain secure. The pregnant words of his Master regarding the day of his burial (compare Matt 26:12; Mark 14:8; John 12:7) REVEALED TO HIS BETRAYER THAT JESUS ALREADY KNEW WELL THE EVIL POWERS THAT WERE AT WORK AGAINST HIM; AND IT IS SIGNIFICANT THAT, ACCORDING TO MATTHEW and MARK, who alone of the syncopists mention the anointing, Judas departed immediately afterward and made his compact with the chief priests (compare Matt 26:14-15; Mark 14:10-11; compare also Luke 22:3-6).

"But his absence was only temporary. He was present at the washing of the disciples' feet, there to be differentiated once more by Jesus from the rest of the Twelve (compare ' Ye are clean, but not all ' and ' HE THAT EATETH MY BREAD LIFTED UP HIS HEEL AGAINST ME, ' John 13:10,18), BUT AGAIN WITHOUT BEING NAMED. It seemed as if Jesus wished to give Judas every opportunity, even at this late hour, of repenting and making his confession. For the last time, when they had sat down to eat, Jesus appealed him thus with the words, 'ONE OF YOU SHALL BETRAY ME. ' (Matt 26:21; Mark 14:18; Luke 22:21; John 13:21).

"And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and THOU SHALT BRUISE HIS HEEL." (Genesis 3:15)

"He was present at the washing of the disciples' feet, there to be differentiated once more by Jesus from the rest of the Twelve (compare ' YE ARE CLEAN, BUT NOT ALL ' and ' HE THAT EATETH MY BREAD LIFTED UP HIS HEEL AGAINST ME, ' John 13:10,18), but again without being named. It seemed as if Jesus wished to give Judas every opportunity, even at this late hour, of repenting and making his confession. For the last time, when they had sat down to eat, Jesus appealed him thus with the words, 'One of you shall betray me' (Matt 26:21; Mark 14:18; Luke 22:21; John 13:21). And at the end, in answer to the anxious queries of His disciples, 'Is it I?'

"'HE INDICATED HIS BETRAYER, NOT BY NAME, BUT BY A SIGN: 'HE IT IS, FOR WHOM I SHALL DIP THE SOP, AND GIVE IT HIM.' (John 13:26). Immediately upon its reception, Judas left the supper room; the opportunity which he sought for was come (compare John 13:30; Matt 26:16). There is some doubt as to whether he actually received the Eucharistic bread and wine previous to his departure or not, but most modern commentators hold that he did not. On his departure, Judas made his way to the high priests and their followers, and coming upon Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane, he betrayed his Master with a kiss (Matt 26:47-50; Mark 14:43,44; Luke 22:47; John 18:2-5).

"Character and Theories: Joined the Apostles to Betray Jesus: Much discussion and controversy have centered, not only around the discrepancies of the Gospel narratives of Judas, but also around his character and the problems connected with it. That the betrayer of Jesus should also be one of the chosen Twelve has given opportunity for the attacks of the foes of Christianity from the earliest times (compare Orig., Con. Cel., ii.12); and the difficulty of finding any proper solution HAS PROVED SO GREAT THAT SOME HAVE BEEN INDUCED TO REGARD JUDAS AS MERELY A PERSONIFICATION OF THE SPIRIT OF JUDAISM...

Whey they [THE TWELVE] therefore were come together asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?

And when he [Jesus] had spoken these things, while they [THE TWELVE APOSTLES] beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their [THE TWELVE APOSTLES] sight.

And while they [the twelve apostles] looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them [the twelve] apostles in white apparel; Which also said, “Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven?”

It is interesting to note that in verse 11, the words "ye men of Galilee" are stipulated. THIS COULD NOT BE REFERRING TO JUDAS BECAUSE JUDAS WAS NOT A GALILEAN. WHENEVER ANY REFERENCE IS MADE TO “MEN OF GALILEE” OR GALILEANS, JUDAS IS LEFT OUT FOR HE WAS A JEW.

What caused these two angels to specify "men of Galilee?" What happened to Judas? It was some time "after" Jesus ascended toward heaven that Judas Iscariot went and hung himself. Verse 12 of this same chapter: "Then returned they [the eleven] unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet...." They, the "men of Galilee" returned unto Jerusalem. Verse 13: "And when they [the men of Galilee] were come in, they [eleven apostles] went up into an upper room, where abode..." Eleven men of Galilee are then all named one by one, Judas Iscariot is never heard of again. Peter tells what happened to Judas in verse 18.

Acts 1:18: Now this man [Judas Iscariot] purchased [provided for himself] a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out.

Judas Iscariot betrayed the Son of God, but afterwards was still with the other eleven apostles. He was with them during Christ's several appearances and at the place of the ascension. Later on he left and hanged himself.

THE TERM “HANGED HIMSELF” IS NOT THE TYPICAL PICTURE VIEWED BY THE WESTERN MIND, WHICH IS A ROPE TIED AROUND A PERSON’S NECK AND DANGLING FROM A TREE OR HIGH PLACE OF SOME KIND. ACCORDING TO THE EASTERN CULTURE, THE METHOD OF HANGING ONESELF DRAWS AN ENTIRELY DIFFERENT PICTURE.

King Saul fell upon his own sword. This was the method of hanging or committing suicide for government or military personnel. JUDAS WAS A COMMON MAN WHO FELL UPON A STAKE. THE TERM “HANGING” IS USED FOR THIS TYPE OF SUICIDE BECAUSE THE VICTIMS SUSPENDED THEMSELVES ON POINTED OBJECTS. BY SUCH ACTION, THE ABDOMEN WAS PUNCTURED AND THE BOWELS GUSHED OUT, AS IS DESCRIBED.

Discrepancy Regarding Judas' Death As Recorded In Matthew 27:3-10 and Acts 1:15-19

Acts 1:15: And in those days [the days between the ascension and the day of Pentecost] Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the number of names together were about an hundred and twenty).

This event had occurred some time after the ascension and before Pentecost. Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples to elect a replacement for Judas Iscariot who hanged himself after the ascension - Acts 1:26: "And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles."

Verses 16-18: [Peter said], Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus.

For he was numbered with us, and had obtained part of the ministry. Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out.

In verse 18, Judas purchased a field with the reward of iniquity. The word "purchased" is the word "provided." This word is used in Matthew 10:9: "Provide neither gold...." Judas had purchased or provided for himself a field. The word "field" in this verse is the Greek word chorion and means "property." Judas provided for himself a property which he purchased with the reward of iniquity. It is generally believed by most Christians that the "reward of iniquity" is referring to the thirty pieces of silver. This cannot be accurate because he cast them down in the temple. (Matthew 27:5)

Judas Was A Thief

According to John 12:6: "This he said, not that he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein." Judas was a "thief." Judas was the treasurer or caretaker of the money of the apostles. Judas, being a thief, stole money from the treasury and provided for himself a property. This stolen money, which Judas took for himself, is called the "reward of iniquity."

Judas had returned to his own property which he had obtained with money stolen from the bag "...and falling, headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out." Judas hanged himself on his own property sometime after the ascension and before Pentecost because after the ascension the "about a hundred and twenty" elected Matthias as a replacement for Judas Iscariot.

Acts 1:19: And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, the field of blood.

This property which Judas had provided for himself is called Aceldama, "the field of blood." It was given this name after Judas killed himself on his own property.

Matthew 27 gives us information concerning the chief priests and what they did with the thirty pieces of silver Judas returned and cast back in the temple.

Matthew 27:6: And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, “It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood.”

The chief priests, who paid Judas for the betrayal of Jesus, called the thirty pieces of silver the "price of blood" Some time after Judas was paid, the priests had Jesus crucified.

Matthew 27:7: And they [the chief priests] took counsel [They got together in a discussion as to what to do with the thirty pieces of silver since it was not lawful for them to be put back into the treasury, because they were the price of blood], and bought [purchased in the open market place where the sales of properties and fields were made] with them [the thirty pieces of silver] the potter's field, to bury strangers in.

The word "field" in Matthew 27:7 is not the same word chorion used for "field" in Acts 1:18. The word "field" in Matthew is the Greek word agros meaning a large area than the chorion, property, purchased by Judas.

The chief priests did not buy the property on which Judas hanged himself because it was Judas' own property. The chief priests took the thirty pieces of silver and purchased a field in which to bury strangers that were criminals, poor people and those who had no place to be buried. This field was called "the potter's field."

Matthew 27:8: Wherefore that field was called, the field of blood, unto this day.

This field was called the "field of blood" after it was purchased by the chief priest because they bought it with the thirty pieces of silver that betrayed the innocent blood of Jesus. This is an entirely different field from the one recorded in Acts. The field in Acts was the "property of blood" (Aceldama) and in Matthew it is called "the field of blood" (agros haimatos).

There are no contradictions to be found between these two accounts regarding Matthew 27:3-10 and Acts 1:15-20, when we carefully and diligently study the Scriptures according to II Timothy 2:15.

The Word of God simply states that Judas Iscariot, a Jew, betrayed the Lord Jesus Christ for thirty pieces of silver. The Bible clearly stipulates that Judas was present and alive after Jesus was crucified and resurrected. Jesus was seen by Judas along with the other eleven apostles; once without Thomas, and at another time when Thomas was present with the other apostles.

Judas was also present with the eleven apostles and had witnessed Jesus' ascension to His Father. Some time after the ascension Judas went to the property (afterwards named "the property of blood"), which he had purchased with the money he stole from the apostle's treasury, and deliberately thrust himself on the sharp point of a stake and died.

Judas – A Player in the Drama of the Cross

“On the first day of Unleavened Bread when the Passover lamb was being sacrificed, His disciples,” that would be the first day meaning Passover which was really kind of synonymous with the feast that followed, “His disciples said to Him, ‘Where do You want us to go and prepare for You to eat the Passover?’” Where do You want us to have this? They’re, you know, they all are without a home. Where do we do this?

The Lord has a plan. There has to be a Passover on Thursday night, the Lord knows that. Jerusalem is crowded. They need a private room where twelve of them, plus Jesus, can go. I think this is something Judas excitedly anticipated because this would be a perfect place to have Jesus arrested. Why? It’s at night, private room, only the twelve…plus Jesus. No one in the streets late that night. The fixed, specific place, a location, easy to tell the leaders, easy to let them in and easy for Judas to get his cash.

Our Lord knows Judas’ thoughts. So verse 12 (Mark 14:12), they asked the question, “Where are we going to have this?” Judas is listening, I’m sure. Once he knows where they’re going to have it, that’s it. That’s just too good to pass up. He wouldn’t know what the future is and he wants the money and he wants it now because he wants out fast. Though he had fear of the crowd, this was a way to waylay that fear, do it at night, do it in a private room.

Our Lord knows this so He sent two of His disciples, this is Peter and John, by the way, two of them and said to them, “Go into the city and a man will meet you carrying a pitcher of water, follow him.”

Now that’s pretty sneaky. First of all, carrying a pitcher of water was women’s work. So to find a man carrying a pitcher of water would be rather unusual and that’s what they needed, they needed a sign and a signal that was unusual, go and find a man carrying a pitcher of water. He sends His two most intimate confidants, Peter and John and this is very, very important. He must have the Passover with His disciples. Why? Because He must transform the Passover into the Lord’s table. Furthermore, He has a lot of intimate teaching that He needs to do with them and all of it is recorded in John 13 to 17. He must die, listen, Friday, around three o’clock when the Passover lambs are being slaughtered, but He must also celebrate the Passover with His disciples so that He can give them final instruction, His last will and testament, if you will, and so that He can institute His table, playing off the Passover. And it has been suggested that He must also fulfill all righteousness and therefore He must celebrate the Passover commanded by God because it hasn't been negated and it won't be negated until this Passover is finished. For that to happen, He must not be arrested that night. He can't be arrested until afterwards.

So this is how He did it. "He sent two of His disciples and said, 'Go into the city and a man will meet you carrying a pitcher of water, follow him.'" Just go where he goes. And that's exactly what they did. Wherever he enters, say to the owner of the house, "The teacher says where is My guest room in which I may eat the Passover with My disciples."

What does that tell you? It tells you that the man was familiar with Jesus, the teacher. They don't even say the word Jesus in case somebody is listening. They don't want anybody to know where this is going to be. You just follow the man with a pitcher on his head. This tells us that our Lord had prearranged this, either actually, or supernaturally. He says, "Follow the man and when you get to the house, the owner of the house, say, 'The Teacher says, where is My guest room where I may eat the Passover with My disciples?'"

Now this is a believer, the Teacher, ha didaskalos, the teacher. It has to have been someone who knew Him, loved Him, believed in Him. So go find Mr. So-and-so, follow him. Verse 15, "And he himself will show you a large upper room furnished and ready. Prepare for us there."

Why all the secrecy? Why all the mystery? Why all the intrigue? Why not just say, "Hey guys, we're all going to meet over on Sixth Street and such time, it's easily recognizable, the address number is so-and-so and we're all going to be there." Can't do that. Why? Because Judas will know and Judas is hungry for the money even though he's trying to avoid the crowds, he's not going to postpone this any longer than he has to, he just wants the money. He wants it fast. This is perfect, a perfect place away from the crowd and the leaders can capture Jesus who will be alone with His helpless disciples. Jesus cannot let that happen…cannot let it happen. And so that's why there's all the intrigue.

And by the way, the disciples went out and came to the city. Just a footnote, apparently Peter and John never came back. On this Thursday, this is Thursday, they went, followed the man, got to the house, were shown the room and they made the preparation so that the rest of the disciples went out from where they were, came to the city, probably back in Bethany where they've been every night, and found it just as He had told them and they prepared the Passover.

They didn't know where they were going until they got there. And by the time they got there, listen, Judas couldn't leave. He couldn't go and report where they were or he would have been revealed. The Lord covers every single detail because of the urgency and importance of His time with His own.

There is a very interesting footnote, and I'm not going to drag it out cause it's a little bit of scholarly work. There actually were two different evenings when the Passover was celebrated. I'll just leave it at this. The northern people in Galilee celebrated it on Thursday evening while the Judeans, the Sadducees and the people in the south celebrated it on Friday evening. This is perfect, so that Jesus could celebrate the Passover with His friends in Galilee when they celebrated it on Thursday and still die as the Passover lamb on Friday at the time when the southern Judeans were slaughtering their lambs for their Passover. So there are actually two times; on Thursday for those in the north, and on Friday for those in the south. And that's an important reckoning because there are texts in John's gospel, in particular, that make it necessary to understand that.

It's an absolutely astounding array of persons that are all moving around in the scene, right? All these people doing what they're doing, and our Lord moving inexorably to the cross as God directs everything. Maybe in summation we could say He borrowed human life for 33 years. He was born in a borrowed manger. He lived in borrowed houses all through His ministry. He entered Jerusalem on a borrowed animal. Borrowed lodgings from friends in Bethany. Borrowed a room for Passover, borrowed a Roman cross for a few hours and borrowed a grave while He actually owned everything. That's His condescension, isn't it?

The Metamorphosis of Judas Iscariot

In the gospel of Mark, regarded by most scholars as the earliest and most historically authentic of the four gospels, we find Jesus saying "go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven... hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God" (10:21). It seems clear that his disciples understood the rejection of worldly comforts and a dedication to helping the poor as important aspects of Jesus' teachings. Indeed this doctrine of selflessness may have been what attracted some of the more secular and cerebral disciples, such as Judas Iscariot.

Mark's gospel describes how Jesus' fame spread rapidly as he and his disciples traveled from town to town, leading up to the time of Passover. There then appears one of the most intriguing episodes in the New Testament (Mark 14:3):

And being in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious; and she brake the box and poured it on his head. And there were some [Judas?] that had indignation within themselves, and said, "Why was this waste of ointment made? For it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor." And they murmured against her. And Jesus said, "Let her alone; why trouble ye her? She hath wrought a good work on me. For ye have the poor always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good: but me ye have not always. She hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying. Verily I say into you, wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her." And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests, to betray him unto them. And when they heard it, they were glad, and promised to give him money."

The clear suggestion is that the scolding Jesus gave to his murmuring disciples led to a falling out, and this was the proximate cause for one of them, Judas, to betray Jesus. Since the disciples did not possess divine knowledge, it isn't clear how they were intended to interpret Jesus' explanation that the woman "is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying". If this were an ordinary story of ordinary men, we would infer that Judas believed Jesus was beginning to regard his own person as more important than helping the poor. In an ordinary human context, an incident such as the argument over the alabaster box would be necessary in order for the overall story to make sense, i.e., to provide some motivation for Judas' act of betrayal.

Of course, the status, motivation, and significance of Judas Iscariot has always been among the central questions of Christian theology. Judas is the traitor who facilitates the execution of Christ, so he is naturally despised, and yet the sequence of events leading to Christ's death and resurrection is essential to Christianity, so we're faced with the question of whether Judas was somehow playing a necessary role, and, if so, whether this mitigates his culpability. Could he have acted differently than he did? Should we wish that he had? This leads directly to questions of free will and the pre-destination of souls.

In any case, it's fascinating to trace the evolution of Judas' role and motivation in the later gospels. We can see the basic doctrines of the church taking form, with the corresponding changes in the representation of Judas. The next gospel after Mark chronologically was Matthew, where the story of the alabaster box and Judas' act of betrayal (26:9) is almost identical, except for one notable difference. After retelling the story of woman breaking open the alabaster box and anointing Jesus, the indignation of the disciples, and Jesus' answer - all nearly verbatim from Mark - the gospel of Matthew continues

Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests, and said unto them, "what will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you?" And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver. From that time on he sought the opportunity to betray him..."

Recall that, in Mark, Judas went to the priests and betrayed Jesus to them immediately after being berated by Jesus (for having scolded the woman for the "waste" of ointment). The priests were glad of this, and give Judas money, but the money was not represented as Judas' main motivation. The thrust of the story (according to Mark) was that Judas had had a falling out with Jesus over the alabaster box incident, and felt that Jesus had betrayed his principles. In contrast, the gospel of Matthew has Judas going to the priests and asking how much they will pay him, and they agree to a specific price (thirty pieces of silver). This represents a subtle but significant shift in Judas' motivation. Instead of anger over what he perceives as Jesus' misbehavior, his main motivation is now simple greed.

The next gospel (by date of composition) is Luke, and here we find an even more radical change in the story (22:1). It still centers around the time of the Passover feast, but the woman and the alabaster box are nowhere to be seen. Luke says

Now the feast of the unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover. And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill him; for they feared the people. Then entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve. And he went his way, and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray him unto them. And they were glad, and covenanted to give him money.

The primary cause for Judas' act of betrayal here is nothing other than Satan. No hint of a falling out appears, and there is no mention of the argument over the alabaster box. Considering that Jesus says (in the first two gospels) that the story of the woman will be told "wheresoever the gospel shall be preached", this is a significant deletion, but its deletion is clearly necessary to remove all "ordinary" motivation for Judas' actions, leaving only imponderable Satan as the explanation.

In the gospel according to John, yet another element is added to the story, transforming the meaning in a still more profound way.

Now before the Feast of the Passover, when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father... and supper being ended, the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot... to betray him, Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands... for he knew who should betray him; therefore said he "Ye are not all clean... Verily, verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me... He it is, to whom I shall give a sop when I have dipped it". And when he had dipped the sop, he gave to Judas Iscariot... and after the sop Satan entered into him. Then said Jesus unto him, "That thou doest, do quickly".

This final version seems slightly conflicted, because it says the devil has "put into the heart of Judas" at the beginning, prior to his being identified as the traitor by Jesus, but then "Satan enters into him" after Jesus identifies him. Do these represent multiple entries of Satan into Judas' heart, or is there some confusion on the part of the author as to the precise sequence of events? In any case, the main feature of this version is that everything is explicitly known to Jesus in advance, and in fact Jesus seems to be almost appointing Judas as his betrayer, to fulfill the purposes of the Father. The distance from Mark to John is immense. In Mark, the earliest gospel, we have something that closely resembles a realistic story about actual men with comprehensible human motivations, a story of argument, disappointment, misunderstanding, and betrayal. By the time we reach the gospel of John, the story has become entirely supernatural. The incident of the alabaster box and the argument between Jesus and Judas has been removed to an earlier point (12:4), and modified so that it is Mary who annoints the feet of Jesus with a pound of ointment. (This is, however, the only gospel to explicitly tell us that it was, indeed, Judas Iscariot who voiced the objection to the perceived extravagance.) Even the base motivation of greed, emphasized by Matthew, is absent in this version, and the role of Satan, emphasized by Luke, is here confused, and treated more as an effect than a cause. In John's version, the events leading up to the betrayal and execution of Jesus are all pre-ordained, with Judas designated as the necessary traitor.

It's interesting that the evolution of Judas through the four gospels closely parallels the main stages of coping with grief. Initial perceptions are "of the moment", and reflect the immediate unvarnished and uninterpreted version of events, as in Mark. Then there is a closer examination of the circumstances and critique of motives, as in the 30 pieces of silver in Luke. Following this is a stage of incomprehension, during which the tragic events can only be attributed to the existence of evil in the world, e.g., "the devil entered his heart" in Luke. Then, finally, we arrive at the stage exemplified by the gospel of John, in which every action and event is seen and re-interpreted in the context of a higher purpose.

What About Judas?

The story of Judas doesn't catch Arminians off-guard in any way; nor does it pose a challenge. Judas chose to betray the Lord, and God knew He was going to do so. Based on His foreknowledge, He arranged history accordingly, foretold it to His prophets, and then pointed to it when it happened.

All of this causes the Arminian to bow in worship to the all-knowing, all-wise Creator and Lord.

Of course, the Arminian would not concede that God wanted Judas to choose evil and inherit eternal torment, but for the Arminian, this is more of a comfort than a concern. It does not signify that God is not God; only that God is not malicious.

Then Jesus said, "The Son of Man will go just as it is written about him. But woe to that man who betrays the Son of Man! It would be better for him if he had not been born" (Matthew 26:24). He seems to be saying, in effect, "Judas, I will be crucified, as Scripture has foretold. But you don't have to be the one who betrays me. If you don't do it, God will arrange some other way for it to happen. Think what you are doing and save yourself from a terrible outcome." Judas chose not to change. According to John's gospel. Jesus offered Judas a piece of bread dipped in the dish, Judas took it, and "As soon as Judas took the bread, Satan entered into him" (John 13:27). Is not this saying that it was Judas' decision to take the bread (thereby confirming that he was the betrayer) that finally sealed his outcome? Note that when Jesus referred to Judas as "doomed to destruction" it was after Judas had chosen to accept the 30 pieces of silver, after he had refused to turn away from his plan of betrayal, and after satan had entered into him. Was Judas "doomed to destruction" because God had preordained Judas' destruction, or was he doomed because of the choices he made? The record is not wholly clear, but I tend to favor the view that Judas could have repented and saved his soul, and that he was "doomed" because of the choices he made.

Who killed Jesus?

We may rightfully blame Judas, the Jewish leaders, the Jewish people, or the Romans for Christ's death, but we, ourselves, are the real reason why Jesus had to die and shed His life-giving blood in sacrifice for our sins. In this sense, we are responsible for the death of Christ!

Judas' suicide: A mystery explained

Matthew says that Judas hanged himself (Matthew 27:5). "This establishes the fact that Judas fastened a noose around his neck and jumped from the branch to which the other end of the rope was attached.

In addition, Acts 1:18 reveals that "falling headlong, [Judas] burst open in the middle and all his entrails gushed out"—a considerably more dramatic picture than Matthew gives. It is terrible enough to commit suicide, but to take a fall, have your body burst open, and your inner parts gush out, is horrendous to say the least.

The question is: Do we have a contradiction in the Bible, or is it possible to harmonize Matthew and Luke? It is possible to harmonize:[7]

- The limb from which Judas hung was over a precipice, that is, the valley of Hinnom. In fact, to this day there are many dry trees on the brink of this canyon near the traditional site of Judas' suicide. Thus, it could be that the weight of his body on a dry and dead limb broke the limb causing his body to plummet into the canyon and burst open.
- Or, perhaps the rock shattering earthquake that ripped through Jerusalem at the moment Jesus "yielded up His spirit" caused the limb to break and plunged the swollen, three day old corpse into the canyon splitting it open (cp. Matthew 27:51).
- Or, even a strong gust of wind, funneled through the canyon, could have caused the limb to break.

Whatever, there is no contradiction in God's Word; a contradiction here is only in the minds of those who want a discrepancy. The ultimate tragic end of the "son of perdition"—an end immeasurably more dreadful than his burst open body—is that he went to Hades, to await the second resurrection and judgment at the Great White Throne, then an eternity in Hell.

Jesus had said at the Last Supper:

Woe to that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed! It would have been good for that man if he had not been born (Matthew 27:24).

Two Lessons

Lesson #1: The life of Judas Iscariot is an enormous tragedy. It shows what happens when one exposes himself to the truth day-after-day, but does not embrace it, use it, obey it! By application, we cannot go to church Sunday after Sunday, and even attend Bible classes during the week, thinking that our mere presence there will keep God pleased with us.

Nearly every day for three plus years Judas listened to the best Bible teacher who ever walked this planet. He heard the truth not only preached, but also saw it perfectly lived-out in the Person of Jesus Christ.

Yet, the more Judas heard, the more he possessed to reject, and the more he rejected the more his heart became hardened. His conscience became seared so that he no longer felt the critiquing ministry of the written Word and the convicting ministry of the Holy Spirit. His inner man gradually hardened to the point that it became a convenient habitation for the devil himself, leading to betrayal and finally suicide.

We must not let be lost on ourselves what happened to Judas. The corrective is diligently to put into practice what we learn from God's Word. Do not permit your intake of the Bible to be merely an academic head-trip.

- If you learn that you may confess your sin: Keep confessing.
- If you learn that you should pray: Keep praying.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

- If you learn that you are to witness to Christ: Keep witnessing.
- If you learn that you should not forsake the assembling of yourselves together: Keep assembling.
- If you learn that God gave you a spiritual gift for the common good: Use your gift to serve your fellow believers in love.

As Christians, we must become vigorous doers of the Word, not mere hearers only, lest the hardening process overtakes us and we lose opportunity for eternal reward to the glory of God.

Lesson #2: For those who are servants in various leadership positions as pastors, teachers, evangelists, elders, deacons, Sunday school teachers, and so on, there is encouragement from the tragic life of Judas—back door encouragement!

Every leader eventually experiences the disappointment and grief of someone close to him turning traitor. It may not be as dramatic as what Judas did to our Lord, but betrayal it is.

Judas violated Jesus, deceiving Him with the world's greatest hypocritical kiss, resulting in Christ's execution. However, in three days God turned the tables on Jesus' enemies and raised Him from the dead. And the same God who raised the Lord Jesus out of seemingly utter, devastating treachery and defeat is still in the business of supporting and protecting us, even reversing our losses.

The devil thought he had won. The demons threw their biggest celebration party ever. The religious leaders danced home after the crucifixion and toasted their success. However, God raised Jesus from the dead!

There are other examples of the Father delivering His people from treachery and defeat. The Lord raised David from sure defeat to victory in the civil war with his treacherous son, Absalom. Why? Because David confessed his sin, repented, and his heart was still inclined to serve the Lord.

The Lord brought Jonah back from the depths of the Mediterranean Sea to minister to Nineveh. Why? Because in the belly of the great fish, Jonah repented! Although he still needed an attitude adjustment about the Assyrians, God worked through Jonah the greatest evangelistic crusade recorded in the Old Testament.

So, where are we? Though there may be a "Judas" in our church, or school, or fellowship group, God will never desert or abandon those who fear the Lord and take refuge in Him.

Therefore, let us take heart! "Let us not grow weary while doing good, for in due season we shall reap if we do not lose heart" (Galatians 6:9). God will take care of the Judases of life; our business is to be faithful so long as He gives us breath and energy to serve.

Was Judas "Predestined" to Betray Christ? BY WAYNE JACKSON

"Was Judas Iscariot predestined to be lost? If not how are the following passages to be explained (Matthew 26:25; John 13:27-30; 17:11-12; Psalms 41:9; Acts 1:16)?"

No, it is not the case that Judas was "predestined" to be lost. The passages listed above may be explained easily without resorting to the unscriptural, Calvinistic theory of predestination.

Was Judas' Question, "Is It I?" Sincere?

According Matthew 26:20ff, during the course of the Passover supper Christ informed the disciples that one of them would betray him. Each of them began to question the Savior, "Is it I, Lord?" It is amazing that each could plumb the depths of his soul, wondering if he could be the culprit.

Presently, Judas framed the same query. "Is it I, Rabbi?" [Note the change in the address.]

The Lord responded (perhaps in almost a whisper), "You have said so" (v. 25, ESV). This was an affirmative answer, to the effect: "Yes, you are the one."

But did Judas' question imply that he did not know that he was the one who would betray the Lord? Certainly not, for already he had bargained with the chief priests to deliver Christ unto them (Matthew 26:14-16; Mk. 14:10-11; Lk. 22:3-6). One must thus conclude that the traitor's question was insincere — a mere parroting of what the other apostles had said.

Was Judas A Helpless Pawn?

Some would suggest that Judas was but a helpless pawn, unable to resist the invasion of Satan into his life. That certainly is not the case, as even Judas himself conceded. He never pled: "I could not help myself; Satan made me do it!" Rather, he confessed: "I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood" (Matthew 27:4).

It is a remarkable oddity when modern man, twenty centuries removed from the event, can profess to know more about the situation than the culprit himself!

How Was Judas' Betrayal a Fulfillment of Old Testament Prophecy?

But what did the apostle mean when he stated that Judas perished "that the scripture might be fulfilled" (John 17:12; cf. 13:18)?

The "scripture" most likely alluded to is Psalm 41:9. There, the sacred writer (likely David; see superscription), referring primarily to someone who had turned against him, wrote:

"Even my close friend in whom I trusted, who ate my bread, has lifted his heel against me."

It is interesting that when the Lord cited this passage, he omitted "whom I trusted" (13:18), the reason being, he "knew from the beginning who they were that believed not, and who it was that should betray him" (John 6:64). The Lord never trusted Judas. The prophecy, therefore, has a primary (personal), and a secondary (Christological) application. Acts 1:16 must be viewed in the same light.

Foreknowledge Not Predetermination

Another important fact that must be recognized is that foreknowledge does not demand predetermination. God foreknew that Judas, exercising his own freewill, would betray his Son.

These passages, therefore, reflect Heaven's foreknowledge, but not a predetermined action over which the betrayer had no control. Even Presbyterian scholar Albert Barnes, in commenting on John 13:18, wrote: "It does not mean that Judas was compelled to this course in order that the Scriptures might be fulfilled" (320).

A further illustration of this principle is seen in the fact that Christ was delivered up to death by the determinate counsel and the "foreknowledge" of God (Acts 2:23), and yet the ones who were involved in the Savior's crucifixion were held accountable for their evil deed (23b; cf. 36-38).

The frequent rationalization, "I can't help what I do; I was predestined to do it," is a false notion, but one that finds ready acceptance in a modern world that seeks to escape from personal responsibility.

The Scriptures teach that men will give an account on the Day of Judgment for their own conduct (Romans 14:12; 2 Corinthians 5:10) — not for actions thrust upon them by God. The very idea of such is an affront to the Almighty.

"Considering all the issues involved, I arrive at the following conclusion as one way to settle the debate. Before the foundation of the universe God predetermined that a group known as the 'elect', composed of all who freely receive Jesus as their Lord and Savior, are predestined to 'be conformed to the image of Christ.'" (Romans 8:28-29 and Ephesians 1).

Main Passages in Bible (with Comments) Referencing Judas Iscariot and the "Twelve" or "Eleven" Apostles

Bible References	Bible Texts (NKJV)	Commentary
Luke 6:13-16	[13] And when it was day, He called His disciples to Himself; and from them He chose twelve whom He also named apostles: [14] Simon, whom He also named Peter, and Andrew his brother; James and John; Philip and Bartholomew; [15] Matthew and Thomas; James the son of Alphaeus, and Simon called the Zealot; [16] Judas the son of James, and Judas Iscariot who also became a traitor.	Judas (who became a traitor) chosen as part of the "Twelve". Note: Iscariot means "man from Kerioth," a city in the Negev of the region in Jesus' day which was called Judea. Judas was the only one of the twelve apostles, the scriptures record, not coming from Galilee; i.e, he was a "Jew".
Mark 3:14-18	[13] And He went up on the mountain and called to Him those He Himself wanted. And they came to Him. [14] Then He appointed twelve, that they might be with Him and that He might send them out to preach, [15] and to have power to heal sicknesses and to cast out demons: [16] Simon, to whom He gave the name Peter; [17] James the son of Zebedee and John the brother of James, to whom He gave the name Boanerges, that is, "Sons of Thunder"; [18] Andrew, Philip, Bartholomew, Matthew, Thomas, James the son of Alphaeus, Thaddaeus, Simon the Cananite; [19] and Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed Him. And they went into a house.	Jesus appoints the twelve apostles, including Judas Iscariot (who also betrayed him), to send them out to preach and have power to heal sickness and cast out demons.
Matthew 10:1-6	[1] And when He had called His twelve disciples to Him, He gave them power over unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all kinds of sickness and all kinds of disease. [2] Now the names of the twelve apostles are these: first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother; [3] Philip and Bartholomew; Thomas and Matthew the tax collector; James the son of Alphaeus, and Lebbaeus, whose surname was * Thaddaeus; [4] Simon the Cananite, * and Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed Him. [5] These twelve Jesus sent out and commanded them, saying: "Do not go into the way of the Gentiles, and do not enter a city of the Samaritans. [6] "But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.	Called his twelve disciples, including Judas Iscariot, and gave them power over unclean spirits to cast them out and to heal sicknesses and disease.
John 6:70-71	[70] Jesus answered them, "Did I not choose you, the twelve, and one of you is a devil?" [71] He spoke of Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon, for it was he who would betray Him, being one of the twelve.	Jesus talks about choosing Judas Iscariot as part of the twelve, and calling him a devil (a false accuser).

John 12:4-8	[4] But one of His disciples, Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, who would betray Him, said, [5] "Why was this fragrant oil not sold for three hundred denarii* and given to the poor?" [6] This he said, not that he cared for the poor, but because he was a thief, and had the money box; and he used to take what was put in it. [7] But Jesus said, "Let her alone; she has kept* this for the day of My burial. [8] "For the poor you have with you always, but Me you do not have always."	Judas had issues with the use of expensive oil to anoint Jesus and was chastised by Jesus.
Matthew 26:14	Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went to the chief priests [15] and said, "What are you willing to give me if I deliver Him to you?" And they counted out to him thirty pieces of silver. [16] So from that time he sought opportunity to betray Him.	Judas makes a deal with chief priests to betray Jesus for 30 pieces of silver.
Mark 14:10	[10] Then Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went to the chief priests to betray Him to them. [11] And when they heard it, they were glad, and promised to give him money. So he sought how he might conveniently betray Him.	Judas makes a deal with the chief priest to betray Jesus for money.
John 13:2,25-27	[2] Now by the time of supper, the Devil had already put it into the heart of Judas, Simon Iscariot's son, to betray Him. [25] Then, leaning back* on Jesus' breast, he said to Him, "Lord, who is it?" [26] Jesus answered, "It is he to whom I shall give a piece of bread when I have dipped it." And having dipped the bread, He gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon. [27] Now after the piece of bread, Satan entered him. Then Jesus said to him, "What you do, do quickly."	At the Last Supper the Devil put into the heart of Judas to betray Him and later Satan entered Judas and Judas left the supper to carry out his betrayal.
John 17:6-19	[6] "I have manifested Your name to the men whom You have given Me out of the world. They were Yours, You gave them to Me, and they have kept Your word. [7] "Now they have known that all things which You have given Me are from You. [8] "For I have given to them the words which You have given Me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came forth from You; and they have believed that You sent Me. [9] "I pray for them. I do not pray for the world but for those whom You have given Me, for they are Yours. [10] "And all Mine are Yours, and Yours are Mine, and I am glorified in them. [11] "Now I am no longer in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to You. Holy Father, keep through Your name those whom You have given Me, that they may be one as We are. He acknowledges that all, except for the Son of Perdicition (or destruction or waste; v.12) were kept in God's name. None were lost except for the "son of perdition" (i.e., Judas Iscariot). And for those he prays that they not be taken out of the world, but kept from the evil one. [Judas was following the leading of the devil, and Satan had earlier entered Judas by this time. [13] "But now I come to You, and these things I speak in the world, that they may have My joy fulfilled in themselves. [14] I have given them Your word; and the world has hated them because they are not of the world, just as I am not of the world. [15] "I do not pray that You should take them out of the world, but that You should keep them from the evil one. [16] They are not of the world, just as I am not of the world. [19] And for their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they also may be sanctified by the truth.
John 18:2-3	[2] And Judas, who betrayed Him, also knew the place; for Jesus often met there with His disciples. [3] Then Judas, having received a detachment of troops, and officers from the chief priests and Pharisees, came there with lanterns, torches, and weapons.	Judas, left the Last Supper, meet up with the detachment from the chief priests and Pharisees, and lead them to where he knew Jesus would be.
Mark 14:43	[43] And immediately, while He was still speaking, Judas, one of the twelve, with a great multitude with swords and clubs, came from the chief priests and the scribes and the elders.	Judas betrays Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane.

Matthew 27:1-8,11	When morning came, all the chief priests and elders of the people plotted against Jesus to put Him to death. [2] And when they had bound Him, they led Him away and delivered Him to Pontius * Pilate the governor. [3] Then Judas, His betrayer, seeing that He had been condemned, was remorseful and brought back the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, [4] saying, "I have sinned by betraying innocent blood." And they said, "What is that to us? You see to it! " [5] Then he threw down the pieces of silver in the temple and departed, and went and hanged himself. [6] But the chief priests took the silver pieces and said, "It is not lawful to put them into the treasury, because they are the price of blood." [7] And they consulted together and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in. [8] Therefore that field has been called the Field of Blood to this day. John 20:10-26	[10] Then the disciples went away again to their own homes. [11] But Mary stood outside by the tomb weeping, and as she wept she stooped down and looked into the tomb. [12] And she saw two angels in white sitting, one at the head and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain. [13] Then they said to her, "Woman, why are you weeping?" She said to them, "Because they have taken away my Lord, and I do not know where they have laid Him." [14] Now when she had said this, she turned around and saw Jesus standing there, and did not know that it was Jesus. [15] Jesus said to her, "Woman, why are you weeping? Whom are you seeking?" She, supposing Him to be the gardener, said to Him, "Sir, if You have carried Him away, tell me where You have laid Him, and I will take Him away." [16] Jesus said to her, "Mary!" She turned and said to Him, * "Rabboni!" (which is to say, Teacher). [17] Jesus said to her, "Do not cling to Me, for I have not yet ascended to My Father; but go to My brethren and say to them, 'I am ascending to My Father and your Father, and to My God and your God.'" [18] Mary Magdalene came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord, * and that He had spoken these things to her. [19] Then, the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled, * for fear of the Jews, Jesus came and stood in the midst, and said to them, "Peace be with you." [20] When He had said this, He showed them His hands and His side. Then the disciples were glad when they saw the Lord. [21] So Jesus said to them again, "Peace to you! As the Father has sent Me, I also send you." [22] And when He had said this, He breathed on them, and said to them, "Receive the Holy Spirit. [23] "If you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven them; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained." Mark 16:9-14	[9] Now when He rose early on the first day of the week, He appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom He had cast seven demons. [10] She went and told those who had been with Him, as they mourned and wept. [11] And when they heard that He was alive and had been seen by her, they did not believe. [12] After that, He appeared in another form to two of them as they walked and went into the country. [13] And they went and told it to the rest, but they did not believe them either. [14] Later He appeared to the eleven as they sat at the table; and He rebuked their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they did not believe those who had seen Him after He had risen.	Jesus appears to Mary, then two while walking, then to the eleven as they sat at the table. (From John 20:24 we know that Thomas was the one missing when Jesus appeared to "the eleven".)
Acts 1:1-26	[1] In my former book, Theophilus, I wrote about all that Jesus began to do and to teach [2] until the day he was taken up to heaven, after giving instructions through the Holy Spirit to the apostles he had chosen. [3] After his suffering, he showed himself to these men and gave many convincing proofs that he was alive. He appeared to them over a period of forty days and spoke about the kingdom of God. [4] On one occasion, while he was eating with them, he gave them this command: "Do not leave Jerusalem, but wait for the gift my Father promised, which you have heard me speak about. [5] For John baptized with* water, but in a few days you will be baptized with the Holy Spirit."[6] So when they met together, they asked him, "Lord, are you at this time going to restore the kingdom to Israel?"[7] He said to them: "It is not for you to know the times or dates the Father has set by his own authority. [8] But you will receive power when the Holy Spirit comes on you; and you will be my witnesses in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth."[9] After he said this, he was taken up before their very eyes, and a cloud hid him from their sight.[10] They were looking intently up into the sky as he was going, when suddenly two men dressed in white stood beside them.	v. 1 "former book" is the Gospel of Luke.

	[11] "Men of Galilee," they said, "why do you stand here looking into the sky? This same Jesus, who has been taken from you into heaven, will come back in the same way you have seen him go into heaven." 12] Then they returned to Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, which is near Jerusalem, a Sabbath day's journey. [13] And when they had entered, they went up into the upper room where they were staying: Peter, James, John, and Andrew; Philip and Thomas; Bartholomew and Matthew; James the son of Alphaeus and Simon the Zealot; and Judas the son of James. [14] These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with His brothers. [15] And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples (altogether the number of names was about a hundred and twenty), and said, [16] "Men and brethren, this Scripture had to be fulfilled, which the Holy Spirit spoke before by the mouth of David concerning Judas, who became a guide to those who arrested Jesus; [17] "for he was numbered with us and obtained a part in this ministry." [18] (Now this man purchased a field with the wages of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst open in the middle and all his entrails gushed out. [19] And it became known to all those dwelling in Jerusalem; so that field is called in their own language, Akel Dama, that is, Field of Blood.) [20] "For it is written in the Book of Psalms:'Let his dwelling place be desolate,And let no one live in it';and,'Let another take his office.' [21] "Therefore, of these men who have accompanied us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, [22] "beginning from the baptism of John to that day when He was taken up from us, one of these must become a witness with us of His resurrection." [23] And they proposed two: Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias. [24] And they prayed and said, "You, O Lord, who know the hearts of all, show which of these two You have chosen [25] "to take part in this ministry and apostleship from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place." [26] And they cast their lots, and the lot fell on Matthias. And he was numbered with the eleven apostles.	v. 11 "Men of Galilee" implies that Judas was no longer with them as he was a Judean (a Jew) After returning from Jesus' ascension; Matthias is chosen as a replacement for Judas. [Note: "Men Brothers", rendered as "Men and brethren" [in the KJV and NKJV] or often just as "brethren". In light of the compound phrase ἄνδρες ἀδελφοί (andres adelphoi, "Men brothers") Peter's words are best understood as directly addressed to the males present, possibly referring specifically to the twelve (really ten at this point - eleven minus the speaker, Peter) mentioned by name in v. 13. [Source: NET Bible note] vvs. 18-19 are a parenthetical comment by the author, Luke. It mentions Judas' betrayal, purchase of a field, and suicide (falling headlong and burst open in the middle and all his entrails gushed out). (Assumming Judas hung himself on the day Jesus was crucified as indicated in Matthew 27:5, by this point in time in Acts well over 40 days have gone by.) v. 20 references Psalm 69:25 and Psalm 109:8. v. 25 "go to his own place", the thought being the place of his own choosing. Accordingly, it is not that Judas was foreordained from eternity past to go to hell, without opportunity to be saved. Instead, he chose to reject Jesus Christ and will suffer the consequences of any person who rejects the Savior. [Source: NET Bible notes]

Jesus was seen by Cephas (Peter), then "the twelve", then over 500 brethren at once, then James, then by all the apostles. [This has to be BEFORE Mathias was chosen as a replacement for Judas Iscariot, as Mathias was not chosen until AFTER Jesus had ascended (Acts 1:12-26). Of course, "all apostles" does not specify a number. Of course, since Paul is writing AFTER Mathias was selected, he could be referring to him as part of the twelve, since he was chosen because he had been there the whole time.]

John 17:6-19. keep them . Jesus asks that those who have been specially given to him will be kept to the end (i.e., preserved from denying Christ). And since it is Jesus who intercedes for his disciples, his petition will most certainly be answered. The word "holy" in Holy Father echoes the assertion of God's awesome purity as described in Lev 11:44 (cf. Ps 71:22; 111:9; Isa 6:3); this is the only time in the NT that this form of address is used with reference to the first person of the Godhead.
that they may be one, even as we are one. Jesus shows the kind of profound unity that should be the norm among genuine believers. As the following verses indicate (through John 17:26), this is to be a reflection of the unity that has existed eternally between the Father and the Son (v. 11), namely, the unity of a common mind and purpose, an unqualified mutual love, and a sustained comprehensive togetherness in mission, as revealed in the Father-Son relationship characterized by Jesus' own ministry. Such unity is the result of Jesus' active work of "keeping" (vv. 12, 15) and "guarding" (v. 12); it results in believers being filled with joy (v. 13; see also 3:29; 15:11; 16:24; 1 John 1:4); it is rooted in the truth of God's word (John 17:14, 17, 20); it involves "sanctification," that is, in the sense of consecration to serve (vv. 17, 19); it becomes a witness to the world so that "the world may believe" (v. 21); it is for the revelation of God's glory (v. 24); and it results in the experience of the indwelling love of God and the presence of Christ (v. 26). The kind of unity that is central to Jesus' high priestly prayer is not organizational but is an all-encompassing relational reality that binds believers together with each other and with their Lord—a unity that can be achieved only through the regenerating and sanctifying work of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Although individual Christians, and the church in general, tend to fall short of the fullness of unity that the Lord intends, whenever such unity is even partially realized (never at the expense of truth or holiness; v. 17) the result will always be deep joy (v. 13), a persuasive witness to the world (vv. 21, 23), and a display of God's glory (v. 22).

Akeldama – is the Aramaic name for the field where Judas Iscariot supposedly hanged himseld. It is mentioned in Acts 1:19 as being in "their own language".

The Akeldama area is situated in one of the most impressive locations in Jerusalem. The rocky cliffs and steep slopes of Mt. Zion, the Valleys of Hinnom and Kidron, and the village of Silwan spreading towards the Mt. of Olives, all lend to the historic and biblical atmosphere of the scene. The dramatic presence of the late 19th century monastery of St. Onuphrius, rising from the head of a cliff, adds its own attractive touch to this delightful corner of Jerusalem.

In 1989, the Jerusalem Municipality conducted routine development work in the area. Upon widening a narrow street near one of the approaches to the Silwan village, bulldozers uncovered a number of square openings hewn in the rock. The Israel Antiquities Authority immediately stopped the road construction. After crawling through the narrow openings, the archaeologists found themselves standing inside a large burial complex, which appeared to be intact. Moving carefully from one chamber to the other, their flashlights revealed an abundance of artifacts scattered on the floors: pottery and glass vessels, oil lamps and many ornamented and inscribed ossuaries (stone boxes for collecting bones), all indicating that these caves had not been plundered.

Cave 1, Chamber 1, general view of the loculi

The significance of the findings called for a systematic excavation of the site. The three large caves proved to be part of an extensive Jewish burial ground in use at the end of the Second Temple period, which terminated in the year 70 CE, when Jerusalem was conquered and the Temple destroyed by the Roman Legions. Alongside the original burial phase from the end of the Second Temple period (1st century CE), solid evidence was found of reuse of the tombs for funerary purposes during the Late Roman (2nd~4th centuries CE) and Early Byzantine (5th~6th centuries CE) periods. The miraculously undisturbed caves allowed for optimal reconstruction of the burial sequence at the site.

The Akeldama complex includes three separate burial caves, hewn in the Jerusalemite rock. Each cave contained two to three chambers with loculi (burial niches -kokhim), and an inner chamber hewn with arcosolia (arched shelves) and burial troughs. Special chambers served as ossuary repositories. Some of the chambers were closed by decorated stone doors fitted with pivots and hinges.

The Akeldama excavations revealed some of the finest known examples of tomb architecture and ornamentation. All three burial caves had been meticulously carved in the hard limestone formation, and excel in their precise angles and aesthetic finish. The high quality of execution indicates that these caves served some of the more affluent Jewish families of the city. Among the finds were pottery vessels: bowls, storage jars, and oil lamps, glass vessels and jewelry, as well as 39 complete ossuaries, most of them richly decorated, and inscribed with the names of the deceased in Hebrew and Greek. These unique finds reflect Jewish customs and traditions in Jerusalem on the eve of the destruction of the Temple.

The Jewish Tomb Owners

Some affinities of these Second Temple period Jerusalemite families may be reconstructed by means of the names inscribed on the ossuaries. Two of the caves were probably owned by Jewish families, both originating from North Syria: one belonged to the Eros family, while the other served the Ariston family, which came from the city of Apamea. It is also possible that the two families were linked by marriage. The cornmon origin of both families from the Syrian diaspora may have been the binding link: families from a common cultural milieu, maintaining close contacts in their new homeland.

The name 'Ariston of Apamea', inscribed on one of the ossuaries, may be identified with a person described in the Mishna as bringing gifts from abroad to the Temple in Jerusalem. It is likely that this ossuary indeed that of the same wealthy Apamean Jew. This is one of very few examples of personalities known from ancient sources and attested in archaeological record.

Bill O'Reilly's "Killing Jesus" - A Critique:

Judas (Mat_26:8-9).

The disciples did not know the true character of Judas. His criticism of Mary sounded so "spiritual" that they joined him in attacking her. We know the real reason Judas wanted the ointment sold: The money would go into the treasury and he would be able to use it (Joh_12:6).

Judas is a tragic figure. He was called to be one of Christ's disciples and was named an apostle along with the others (Mar_3:13-19). He received power to heal (Mat_10:1-4), and he probably used this power. It is not the power to do miracles that is proof of salvation (Mat_7:21-29), but obedience to God's Word.

In spite of his affiliation with the band of disciples, and his association with Christ, Judas was not a true believer. When Jesus washed the disciples' feet, He made it clear that one of them (Judas) was not cleansed (Joh_13:10-11). Like many professing Christians today, Judas was "in" the group of believers but not "of" them.

Notice that every time Mary sought to do something for Jesus, she was misunderstood. Her sister Martha misunderstood her when Mary sat at Jesus' feet to hear Him teach the Word. Judas and the other disciples misunderstood her when she anointed Jesus. Her friends and neighbors misunderstood her when she came out of the house to meet Jesus after Lazarus had been buried (Joh_11:28-31). When we give Jesus Christ first place in our lives, we can expect to be misunderstood and criticized by those who claim to follow Him.

Why did Judas follow Jesus for three years, listen to His Word, share His ministry, and then turn traitor? One thing is certain: Judas was not the victim of circumstances or the passive tool of providence. It was prophesied that one of Messiah's close associates would betray Him, (Psa_41:9; Psa_55:12-14), but this fact does not relieve Judas of responsibility. We must not make him a martyr because he fulfilled this prophecy.

While we can never fully understand the mind and heart of Judas, we do know that he had every opportunity to be saved. He was often warned by Jesus: in the Upper Room, Jesus even washed Judas' feet. Probably, Judas saw in Jesus the hope for Israel's political freedom. If Jesus established His kingdom, Judas, as treasurer, would have had an important position. When Jesus repeatedly refused to become a political Messiah, Judas turned against Him. Satan found a willing tool in Judas. Satan put the ideas into Judas' mind (Joh_13:2) and then entered into Judas to use him to betray Jesus to the enemy (Joh_13:27).

Judas' life is a warning to those who pretend to serve Christ but whose hearts are far from God. He is also a warning to those who waste their opportunities and their lives. "Why this waste?" asked Judas when he saw that expensive ointment poured out on Jesus. Yet Judas wasted his opportunities, his life, and his soul! Jesus called him son of perdition (John 17:12) which literally means "son of waste."

The Purchase Of "The Potter's Field" And The Fulfillment Of The Prophecy

There are two difficulties connected with these scriptures:

I. The two purchases recorded in Matthew 27:6-8, and Acts 1:18, 19, respectively; and
II. The fulfillment of the prophecy connected with the former purchase (Matthew 27:9, 10).

I. The Two Purchases.

For there were two. One by "the chief priests", recorded in Matthew 27:6; and the other by Judas Iscariot recorded in Acts 1:18. The proofs are as follows: -

6. The purchase of Judas was made some time before that of the chief priests; for there would have been no time to arrange and carry this out between the betrayal and the condemnation. The purchase of the chief priests was made after Judas had returned the money.

7. What the chief priests bought was "a field" (Gr. agros). What Judas had acquired (see 3, below) was what in English we call a "Place" (Gr. chorion = a farm, or small property). The two are quite distinct, and the difference is preserved both in the Greek text and in the Syriac version.

8. The verbs also are different. In Matthew 27:7 the verb is agorazo = to buy in the open market (from agora = a market place); while in Acts 1:18, the verb is ktaomai = to acquire possession of (Luke 18:12; 21:19, Acts 22:28), and is rendered "provide" in Matthew 10:9. Its noun, ktema = a possession (Matthew 19:22, Mark 10:22, Acts 2:45; 5:1).

9. How and when Judas had become possessed of this "place" we are not told in so many words; but we are left in no doubt, from the plain statement in John 12:6 that "he was a thief, and had the bag". The "place" was bought with this stolen money, "the reward (or wages) of iniquity". This is a Hebrew idiom (like our Eng. "money ill-got"), used for money obtained by unrighteousness (Numbers 22:7, 2Peter 2:15). This stolen money is wrongly assumed to be the same as the "thirty pieces of silver".

10. The two places had different names. The "field" purchased by the chief priests was originally known as "the potter's field", but was afterward called "agros haimatos" = the field of blood; i.e. a field bought with the price of blood ("blood" being put by the Fig. Metonymy (of the Subject).
The "possession" which Judas had acquired bore an Aramaic name, "Hakal dema" which is transliterated Akeldama, or according to some Akeldamach, or Hacheldamach = "place" (Gr. chorion) of blood" : a similar meaning but from a different reason : viz. Judas' suicide. It is thus shown that there is no discrepancy between Matthew 27:6-8 and Acts 1:18, 19.

II. The Fulfillment Of The Prophecy.

Many solutions have been proposed to meet the two difficulties connected with Matthew 27:9, 10.

i. As to the first difficulty, the words quoted from Jeremiah are not found in his written prophecy: and it has been suggested

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

8. That "Matthew quoted from memory" (Augustine and others).
9. That the passage was originally in Jeremiah, but the Jews cut it out (Eusebius and others); though no evidence for this is produced.
10. That it was contained in another writing by Jeremiah, which is now lost (Origen and others).
11. That Jeremiah is put for the whole body of the prophets (Bishop Lightfoot and others), though no such words can be found in the other prophets.
12. That it was "a slip of the pen" on the part of Matthew (Dean Alford).
13. That the mistake was allowed by the Holy Spirit on purpose that we may not trouble ourselves as to who the writers were, but receive all prophecy as direct from God, Who spake by them (Bishop Wordsworth).
14. That some annotator wrote "Jeremiah" in the margin and it "crept" into the text (Smith's Bible Dictionary).

These suggestions only create difficulties much more grave than the one which they attempt to remove. But all of them are met and answered by the simple fact that Matthew does not say it was written by Jeremiah, but that it was "spoken" by him.

This makes all the difference: for some prophecies were spoken (and not written), some were written (and not spoken), while others were both spoken and written. Of course, by the Fig. Metonymy, one may be said to "say" what he has written; but we need not go out of our way to use this figure, if by so doing we create the very difficulty we are seeking to solve. There is all the difference in the world between to rhethen (= that which was spoken), and ho gegraptai (= that which stands written).

ii. As to the second difficulty: that the prophecy attributed to Jeremiah is really written in Zechariah 11:10-13, it is created by the suggestion contained in the margin of the Authorized Version. That this cannot be the solution may be shown from the following reasons:

16. Zechariah 11:10-13 contains no reference either to a "field" or to its purchase. Indeed, the word "field" (shadah) does not occur in the whole of Zechariah except in 10:1, which has nothing to do with the subject at all.
17. As to the "thirty pieces of silver", Zechariah speaks of them with approval, while in Matthew they are not so spoken of. "A goodly price" ('eder hayekar) denotes amplitude, sufficiency, while the Verb yakar means to be priced, prized, precious and there is not the slightest evidence that Zechariah spoke of the amount as being paltry, or that the offer of it was, in any sense and insult. But this latter is the sense in Matthew 27:9, 10.
18. The givers were "the poor of the flock". This enhanced the value. "The worth of the price" was accepted as "goodly" on that account, as in Mark 12:43, 44. 2Corinthians 8:12.
19. The waiting of "the poor of the flock" was not hostile, but friendly, as in Proverbs 27:18. Out of above 450 occurrences of the Hebrew shamar, less than fourteen are in a hostile sense.
20. In the disposal of the silver, the sense of the Verb "cast" is to be determined by the context (not by the Verb itself). In Zechariah 11, the context shows it to be in a good sense, as in Exodus 15:25. 1Kings 19:19. 2Kings 2:21; 4:41; 6:6. 2Chronicles 24:10, 11.
21. The "potter" is the fashioner and his work was not necessarily confined to fashioning "clay", but it extended to metals. Cp. Genesis 2:7, 8. Psalms 33:15; 94:9. Isaiah 43:1, 6, 10, 21; 44:2, 9-12, 21, 24; 45:6, 7; 54:16, 17. Out of the sixty-two occurrences of the Verb (yazar), more than three-fourths have nothing whatever to do with the work of a "potter"
22. A "potter" in connection with the Temple, or its service, is unknown to fact, or to Scriptures.
23. The material, "silver", would be useless to a "potter" but necessary to a fashioner of metallic vessels, or for the payment of artizans who wrought them (2Kings 12:11-16; 22:4-7. 2Chronicles 24:11-13). One might as well cast clay to a silversmith as silver to a potter.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

24. The prophecy of Zechariah is rich in reference to metals; and only the books of Numbers (31:22) and Ezekiel name as many. In Zechariah we find six named: Gold, six times (4:2, 12; 6:11; 13:9; 14:14). Fine gold, once (9:3). Silver, six times, (6:11; 9:3; 11:12, 13; 13:9; 14:14). Brass, once (6:1, margin). Lead, twice (5:7, 8). Tin, once (4:10, margin). Seventeen references in all.
25. Zechariah is full of references to what the prophet saw and said but there are only two refs. to what he did; and both of these have references to "silver" (6:11; 11:13).
26. The Septuagint, and its revision by Symmachus, read "cast them (i.e. the thirty pieces of silver) into the furnace (Gr. eis to choneuterion), showing that, before Matthew was written, yotzer was interpreted as referring not to a "potter" but to a fashioner of metals.
27. The persons are also different. In Matthew we have "they took", "they gave", "the price of him"; in Zechariah we read "I took", "I cast", "I was valued".
28. In Matthew the money was given "for the field", and in Zechariah it was cast "unto the fashioner."
29. Matthew names three parties as being concerned in the transaction; Zechariah names only one.
30. Matthew not only quotes Jeremiah's spoken words, but names him as the speaker. This is in keeping with Matthew 2:17, 18. Jeremiah is likewise named in Matthew 16:14; but nowhere else in all the New Testament.
    iii. The conclusion. From all this we gather that the passage in Matthew 27:9, 10 cannot have any reference to Zechariah 11:10-13.

1. If Jeremiah's spoken words have anything to do with what is recorded in Jeremiah 32:6-9, 43, 44, then in the reference to them other words are interjected by way of parenthetical explanation. These are not to be confused with the quoted words. They may be combined thus: --

"Then was fulfilled that which was SPOKEN by Jeremiah the prophet saying; 'And they took the thirty pieces of silver [the price of him who was priced, whom they of the sons of Israel did price], and they gave them for the potter's field, as the LORD appointed me.'"

Thus Matthew quotes that which was "SPOKEN" by Jeremiah the prophet and combines with the actual quotation a parenthetical reference to the price at which the prophet Zechariah had been priced.

2. Had the sum of money been twenty pieces of silver instead of thirty, a similar remark might well have been interjected thus: --

"Then was fulfilled that which was SPOKEN by Jeremiah the prophet saying; 'And they took the twenty pieces of silver [the price of him whom his brethren sold into Egypt], and they gave them for the potter's field'", &c.

3. Or, had the reference been to the compensation for an injury done to another man's servant, as in Exodus 21:32, a similar parenthetical remark might have been introduced thus: --

"Then was fulfilled that which was SPOKEN by Jeremiah the prophet, saying : 'And they took the thirty pieces of silver [the price given in Israel to the master whose servant had been injured by an ox], and they gave them for the potter's field'" , &c.

A designed parenthetical insertion by the inspired Evangelist of a reference to Zechariah, in a direct quotation from the prophet Jeremiah, is very different from a "mistake" or "a slip of the pen", "a lapse of memory" or a "corruption of the text", which need an apology. The quotation itself, as well as the parenthetical reference, are both similarly exact.

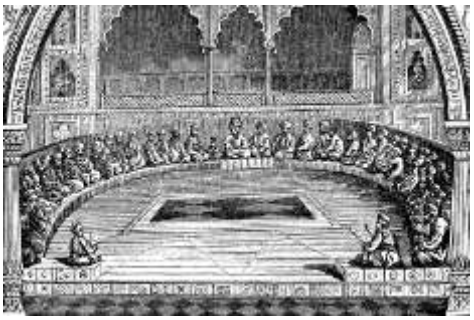
In the 1st century, scribes and Pharisees were two largely distinct groups, though presumably some scribes were Pharisees. Scribes had knowledge of the law and could draft legal documents (contracts for marriage, divorce, loans, inheritance, mortgages, the sale of land, and the like). Every village had at least one scribe. Pharisees were members of a party that believed in resurrection and in following legal traditions that were ascribed not to the Bible but to “the traditions of the fathers.” Like the scribes, they were also well-known legal experts: hence the partial overlap of membership of the two groups. It appears from subsequent rabbinic traditions, however, that most Pharisees were small landowners and traders, not professional scribes. [Source: Encyclopedia Britannica]

After God allowed Babylon to destroyed Solomon’s Temple in 586 B.C. (2 Kg 25 & 2 Chr 36), the central focus for the Jew shifted from the Temple (sacrifice) to obedience to God’s Law (Torah), since the Temple no longer existed and sacrifices were impossible. The Hebrews reasoned that since their failure to observe the Law of God was what got them into national disaster, therefore, its remedy would be careful observance of the Law. And with this shift, the people’s focus and attention changed from being upon the priest (previously performing sacrifices), to the scribe (the one who best knows God’s commands). So, with this swing in spotlight came the rise of new experts and leaders. Here’s a breakdown in some of these leaders:

Scribes: [Teachers of the Law] These were the lawyers [experts in the Mosaic Law] whose primary job was to copy the Scriptures. Their focus became the details or the letter of the law. They transitioned from mere copyists to teachers of the Scriptures (Ezra was a scribe, Neh 8:2-8).

The scribes were the writers, copyists, 'bookmen' and consequently the interpreters of the sacred writings of the Old Testament, as their professional occupation gave them unusual familiarity with these books. Among the forerunners of the scribes were also to be reckoned 'wise' teachers of Israel who produced and handed on a body of oral teaching and eventually the compendium of Wisdom Literature.

After the Exile, the scribe tended to take the place of the priest as teacher of the Law. In the Gospels the scribes are sometimes referred to as 'lawyers', i.e. Experts in the sacred Mosaic Law which was in theory the sole legislation, civil and religious, governing the Jewish people. They were usually associated with the Pharisees. Many of the scribes became members of the Sanhedrin, the highest legal administration body in the Jewish theocratic state. Among them were Gamaliel in Ac 5, Nicodemus in Jn 3 and 7. They sat 'on Moses' seat' (Mt 23:2) as official interpreters of the Law. They had the power of 'binding and loosing,' i.e., of issuing authoritative judgments or decisions upon the legality or illegality of actions.



Their services, both educational and judicial, were rendered freely and without compensation. Unless he possessed independent means the scribe had to earn a livelihood in other ways and then teach as an avocation. It has been suggested that the rule grew out of the danger of bribery, cited in Ex 23;8 and Dt 16:19 {where 'judges' were ordered not to accept fees or gifts}.

In the New Testament, the traditional rendering of γραμματεύς (grammateus) as "scribe" does not communicate much to the modern English reader, for whom the term might mean "professional copyist," if it means anything at all. They were recognized experts in the law of Moses and in traditional laws and regulations. Thus "expert in the law" comes closer to the meaning for the modern reader.

Sanhedrin: This is the group of judges. The Jewish high court. It was made up of a council of 70 Jewish men who were directly under the high priest. They acted as the "supreme court" in legal/religious trials. Some believe that this group began under the rule of King Jehoshaphat around 800 B.C. (2 Chr 19:4-11).

The Sanhedrin, which was in effect the Jewish 'parliament', was composed of representatives from each of the three groups: the chief priests, teachers of the law (scribes) and elders, totaling seventy-one members under the chairmanship of the high priest. The chief priests were members of the leading high-priestly families and holders of various offices (e.g. the ruler of the temple, the leaders of the weekly and daily groups of priests, the captains and the treasurers); the elders were the lay representatives of the people.

Pharisees: It is likely that this group evolved out of a priestly group of Jewish separatists during the Maccabean revolt. The revolt began when certain Jewish priests refused to bow down to Antiochus Epiphanes, but sought to protect the right worship of God. Jesus eventually criticized some of the Pharisees for their inflexible adherence to the “traditions of their fathers” rather than seeking God’s Word (Mt 15:14, 23:16).

The Pharisees were a legalistic and separatistic group who strictly, but often hypocritically, kept the Law of Moses and the unwritten “tradition of the elders”.

Sadducees: This priestly group of religious leaders were functionally like the Pharisees. However, the two groups hated one another, except when they found a common enemy (e.g., Jesus). The primary ways the Sadducees differed from the Pharisees is (1) Sadducees rejected all Scriptures (Joshua — Malachi) besides the Torah (Genesis-Deuteronomy), and (2) Sadducees rejected the belief in a future general resurrection of the body (Luke 20:27)

The Sadducees were more worldly and politically minded than the Pharisees, and were theologically unorthodox—among other things denying the resurrection, angels and spirits (Acts 23:8).

They were a Jewish party that represented the wealthy and sophisticated classes. They were located largely in Jerusalem and made the temple and its administration their primary interest. Though they were small in number, in Jesus' time they exerted powerful political and religious influence.

They were willing to compromise with secular and pagan leaders: working closely with the Romans to protect their own political and economic interests. They controlled the high priesthood during Jesus’ time and held the majority of the seats in the Sanhedrin. They controlled the temple.

They did not believe in a personal Messiah, but held that the Messianic age — an ideal time — was then present and must be preserved. The high priest, one of their number, presided over the Sanhedrin. [Source: NIV ’08 Study Bible Notes]

Probably the name 'Sadducee' is derived from the name Zadok, a notable priest in the time of David and Solomon (2 Samuel 8:17; 15:24; 1 Kings 1:34). His descendants long played the leading part among the priests, so that Ezekiel regarded them as the only legitimate priests (Ezk 40:46, 43:19, 44:15, and 48:11). About the year 200 B.C., when party lines were beginning to be drawn, the name was chosen to point out the party of the priests. That is not saying that no priest could be a Pharisee or a Scribe. Neither is it saying that all the priests were Sadducees. In the time of Jesus many of the poor priests were Pharisees. But the higher priestly families and the priests as a body were Sadducees. With them were joined the majority of the aristocratic lay families of Judaea and Jerusalem. This fact gives us the key to their career. It is wrapped up in the history of the high priesthood. But in Jesus' time its leadership lay far back in the past. Its moral greatness had been undermined

Jesus had almost no dealings with the Sadducees during His ministry. His interests were with the common people. This brought Him into continual conflict with the Pharisees. It was not until His popularity seemed to threaten the peace of Jerusalem that the high priest, with the Sadducees at his back, was moved to decisive action.

After the destruction of the Temple by the Romans in 70 A.D., the Sadducees (the presumed keepers of the Temple) fade into history.

Pharisees

Religious sect active in Palestine during the NT period. The Pharisees are consistently depicted in the Gospels as Jesus' antagonists. It is commonly held that the Pharisees represented mainstream Judaism early in the first century and that they were characterized by a variety of morally objectionable features. Accordingly, most Bible dictionaries and similar works of reference depict the Pharisees as greedy, hypocritical, lacking a sense of justice, overly concerned with fulfilling the literal details of the law, and insensitive to the spiritual significance of the OT. These and other characteristics are furthermore viewed as giving shape to Judaism more generally.

There are several problems with this common perception of Pharisaic Judaism. In the first place, the Gospels themselves give some important information that appears inconsistent with this view. Second, the primary documents of rabbinic Judaism (such as the Mishnah, the Talmud, and the Midrashim) are positive and praiseworthy. Third, it has become increasingly clear, especially since the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls, that prior to AD 70 the Pharisees constituted only a small movement in a highly diversified society; whatever their popularity and influence, they can hardly be taken as representative of Judaism in general.

Origin

The origins of the Pharisees are obscure. According to Jewish tradition, Pharisaic (= rabbinic) Judaism can be traced back to Ezra and the beginnings of the scribal movement in the fifth century BC. At the opposite extreme, a few scholars argue that, since there are no explicit references to the Pharisees in historical documents prior to the second century BC, Pharisaism appeared suddenly after the Maccabean revolt (167 BC). Many specialists take the position that perhaps as early as the third century BC one can find evidence of an incipient form of Pharisaism (as in The Wisdom of Joshua [Jesus] ben Sirach, also known as Ecclesiasticus). It may well be, moreover, that the intellectual pursuits associated with the work of the scribes did have something to do with the development of the Pharisees. It is also probable that prior to the Maccabean revolt some distinctive Pharisaic concerns appeared in connection with the development of the Hasidim (“the faithful ones”—traditionalists who opposed Greek influence in Jewish society).

According to a popular and reasonable interpretation, the Hasidim became disillusioned with the Maccabean rulers, whose conduct violated Jewish sensibilities in several respects. Some of the Hasidim separated themselves from the nation and developed into nonconformist sects, such as that of the Essenes. Those who remained tried to exert their influence on Jewish life and developed into the sect of the Pharisees.

The Pharisees no doubt played a significant role in Jewish affairs during the next century, even though at times they had little political clout. By NT times, they were widely recognized as religious leaders. Josephus, who tells us that he belonged to this sect, wrote toward the end of the first century AD that the Pharisees were “extremely influential among the townsfolk; and all prayers and sacred rites of divine worship are performed according to their exposition. This is the great tribute that the inhabitants of the cities, by practicing the highest ideal both in their way of living and in their discourse, have paid to the excellence of the Pharisees” (Antiquities 18.15). We cannot determine whether this description applies to the period before AD 70, but the evidence of the Gospels themselves confirms it to some extent. For example, the parable of the publican and the Pharisee (Lk 18:9-14), while it condemns the Pharisee, makes sense only if we appreciate the role reversal it announces: the wicked publican, not the one generally regarded as righteous, goes home justified.

Basic Characteristics

It is not possible to give an accurate characterization of the Pharisees, since scholars disagree sharply concerning their fundamental distinctiveness. Some stress the notion of “separateness,” partly on the basis of the supposed etymology of the name (from Hebrew parush, “separated one,” though other suggestions have been made). A more carefully nuanced viewpoint calls attention to the Pharisees' concern with ritual purity (cf. Mk 7:1-4). Some of the evidence indicates that the Pharisees wished to apply the priestly rituals to the people generally (this factor may help to explain the relative ease with which the Pharisees adapted to the absence of the temple and its sacrifices after AD 70). Still another position sees the Pharisees as the scholar class. The close connection between them and the scribes (experts in the law) gives credence to this view, as does the fact that much of the later rabbinic literature reflects an intellectual pursuit, particularly in its detailed logical argumentations regarding the meaning and application of the Torah.

These various approaches are not mutually exclusive. Moreover, there appears to be widespread agreement about one theological conviction that was foundational to Pharisaism, namely, their commitment to the notion of a twofold law: the written Torah (the OT, principally the Pentateuch) and the oral Torah (the traditions handed down through many generations of rabbis). This is certainly one feature that distinguished them from the Sadducees (cf. Josephus's Antiquities 13.297-98). The latter accepted only the authority of the books of Moses and argued strongly that the importance that the Pharisees attached to oral traditions represented an unjustifiable innovation. These traditions, which sought to regulate the lives of the people before God, became more and more detailed over the course of time and were eventually brought together and written down as a single document, the Mishnah (dated c. AD 210). Somewhere in its development the view arose that the oral law itself had been given by God to Moses and thus shared divine authority with the Scriptures.

A careful look at the NT helps in understanding that this feature more than anything else explains the nature of the conflict between the Pharisaic viewpoint and the message of the gospel. The apostle Paul, for example, stresses the distinctiveness of his apostolic preaching by contrasting it to “the traditions of the fathers,” which he zealously pursued in his youth (Ga 1:14). Especially instructive is the key passage in Mk 7, where it is written that the Pharisees complained to Jesus, “Why don't your disciples live according to the tradition of the elders instead of eating their food with ‘unclean’ hands?” (v 5, NIV). Christ's reply counters their criticism with a serious indictment: “You have let go of the commands of God and are holding on to the traditions of men....Thus you nullify the word of God by your tradition that you have handed down” (vv 8, 13; cf. Mt 15:1-6).

The importance the Pharisees attributed to their interpretations of the law compromised the authority of God's own revelation. To make matters worse, the genius of those interpretations was to distort the doctrine of grace by relaxing the divine standards. The very example used by Jesus in Mk 7:10-12 indicates that a rabbinic regulation—the Corban—made it possible for people to ignore the fifth commandment and feel justified in so doing.

The Pharisaic regulations were numerous and aggravating, but at least they could be fulfilled. Those who followed scrupulously the rabbinic traditions were in danger of concluding that their conduct satisfied God's demands (cf. Paul's description of his own preconversion attitude, Phl 3:6). And a muted sense of one's sin goes hand in hand with a false sense of spiritual security; the need to depend on God's mercy no longer appears crucial. This is, of course, the point of the parable of the publican and the Pharisee (Lk 18:9-14). In contrast, Jesus calls for a much higher righteousness than that of the Pharisees: “Be perfect, as your Father in heaven is perfect” (Mt 5:48; cf. v 20).

Herodians:

Herodians. A loosely organized group that sought to advance the political and economic influence of the Herodian family (c. 37 B.C. - A.D. 93). Although the Herodians and the Pharisees were adversaries in regard to many political and religious issues, they join forces to combat the perceived threat to their power and status by Jesus. [Source: ESV Study Bible note]

Herodians. A Jewish party who favored the Herodian dynasty, the party of “peace at any price” and appeasement of Rome. [Ryrie Study Bible note]

A Jewish political party who sympathized with (Mark 3:6; 12:13; Matthew, 22:16; Luke 20:20) the Herodian rulers in their general policy of government, and in the social customs which they introduced from Rome. They were at one with the Sadducees in holding the duty of submission to Rome, and of supporting the Herods on the throne. (Comp. Mark 8:15; Matthew 16:6.)

[Source: Easton’s Bible Dictionary]

They were in usually opposed by the nationalistic Pharisees.

The Herodians held political power, and most scholars believe that they were a political party that supported King Herod Antipas, the Roman Empire's ruler over much of the land of the Jews from 4 B.C. to A.D. 39. The Herodians favored submitting to the Herods, and therefore to Rome, for political expediency. This support of Herod compromised Jewish independence in the minds of the Pharisees, making it difficult for the Herodians and Pharisees to unite and agree on anything. But one thing did unite them—opposing Jesus. Herod himself wanted Jesus dead (Luke 13:31), and the Pharisees had already hatched plots against Him (John 11:53), so they joined efforts to achieve their common goal.

The first appearance of the Herodians in Scripture is Mark 3:6, "Then the Pharisees went out and began to plot with the Herodians how they might kill Jesus." Jesus had been doing miracles, which caused some of the people to believe in Him for salvation, and that threatened the power and position of the Pharisees, the Sadducees, and the Herodians. The Herodians again joined with the Pharisees to challenge Jesus, to see if they could trap Jesus in His words by a trick question, to either discredit Him or to get Him to stop preaching (Matthew 22:16).

Jesus regarded the two groups as in unity against Him and warned His followers against them. "'Be careful,' Jesus warned them. 'Watch out for the yeast of the Pharisees and that of Herod'" (Mark 8:15). Yeast in this context is false teaching, the rejection of Jesus as the Messiah, and hypocrisy. Many scholars believe that the Herodians looked to Herod as a messiah, a savior of sorts who would put the Jewish land in favor with the Roman Empire and bring blessings to them. Jesus’ presentation of Himself as the Messiah was a threat to the Herodians' attempt to make Herod the influential political power in the land.

A party twice mentioned in the Gospels (Matthew 22:16 parallel Mark 12:13; Mark 3:6) as acting with the Pharisees in opposition to Jesus. They were not a religious sect, but, as the name implies, a court or political party, supporters of the dynasty of Herod. Nothing is known of them beyond what the Gospels state. Whatever their political aims, they early perceived that Christ's pure and spiritual teaching on the kingdom of God was irreconcilable with these, and that Christ's influence with the people was antagonistic to their interests. Hence, in Galilee, on the occasion of the healing of the man with the withered hand, they readily joined with the more powerful party of the Pharisees in plots to crush Jesus (Mark 3:6); and again, in Jerusalem, in the last week of Christ's life, they renewed this alliance in the attempt to entrap Jesus on the question of the tribute money (Matthew 22:16). The warning of Jesus to His disciples to "beware of the leaven of Herod" (Mark 8:15) may have had reference to the insidious spirit of this party. [Source: ISBE]

Palatial Mansion (Palace of Annas the High Priest)

This is a perspective reconstruction drawing of the 6,500 sq. feet (600m2) residence dating from the Second Temple period found in the Jewish Quarter excavations in Jerusalem. Known as the Palatial Mansion because of its unusually large size, it is now part of the restored Herodian Quarter. Its overall plan, centred round a paved courtyard, makes it clear that it was one living unit and not divided into smaller residences. The fact that this major structure, which from the sumptuousness of its fittings makes it worthy of the term "palace", contains four ritual baths, one evidently built to serve a number of people with one door for entry and one for exit, is notable. This, coupled with the traces of a great conflagration found in the Palatial Mansion, point to a possible identification of this residence with the palace of Annas, the High Priest. In War 2.426, Josephus records Annas' Palace as having been burnt in 70 A.D.

phylacteries (tefillin) -- the tefillin (translated phylacteries) consist of two small black boxes, containing small scrolls of parchment upon which are written four Biblical passages [Exodus 13:1-10; 13:11-16; Deut. 6:4-9; and 11:13-21]. These four passages from the Torah [five books of Moses] all include the commandment to don tefillin as a sign, as a symbol of Jewish faith and devotion. Each of the black boxes comes with leather straps (Hebrew: retzuot) so designed as to enable one to be bound upon the left forearm and hand, and for the other to be worn above the forehead. (Exodus 13:1-10; 13:11-16; Deuteronomy 6:4-9; 11:13-21). tassels. See note on Nu 15:38 .

tassels / borders / fringes (tzitzit) -- tassels with a blue cord that were attached to the four corners of a man's garment.
The commandment in [Numbers 15:37-40 (see also Deuteronomy 22:12)] calls for the attachment of fringes (tzitzit) to four-cornered garments as a reminder of all the commandments of the Lord... Garments not possessing four or more corners are not required to have the special fringes. .... Although in ancient times four-cornered garments or robes were common, the development of clothing not having four corners would have rendered this mitzvah [Heb. for commandment] totally obsolete, with the full sanction of the law. To prevent the total disappearance of a mitzvah that possessed such great symbolic significance (since it serves as a reminder to observe all the commandments), the Sages encouraged the wearing of a specially-made four-cornered garments so as to provide the opportunity to observe and implement this commandment. Says Maimonides: "Although one is not obligated to buy a garment and wrap himself in it just so as to provide it with fringes, it is not proper for a devout or pious person to exempt himself from observing this precept. He should strive to wear a garment that requires fringes so as to perform this precept. And during times of prayer, one should take special care to do so" (Hil. Tzitzit 3:11)

The tallit, a four-cornered robe with the required tzitzit, has thus become the garment traditionally worn by men during morning prayer services. In English, it is commonly called a "prayer shawl." (pp. 155-6)

Today: The Torah commands the wearing of tzitzit (fringes) at the corners of garments as a reminder of the mitzvot, kind of like the old technique of tying a string around your finger to remember something. The passage also instructs that the fringe should have a thread of "techeilet," believed to be a blue or turquoise dye, but the source of that dye is no longer known, so tzitzit are today are all white. There is a complex procedure for tying the knots of the tzitzit, filled with religious and numerological significance.

The mitzvah to wear tzitzit applies only to four-cornered garments, which were common in biblical times but are not common anymore. To fulfill this mitzvah, adult men wear a four-cornered shawl called a tallit (pictured above) during morning services, along with the tefillin. In some Orthodox congregations, only married men wear a tallit; in others, both married and unmarried men wear one. In Conservative, Reform and Reconstructionist synagogues, both men and women may wear a tallit, but men are somewhat more likely than women to do so. A blessing is recited when you put on the tallit.

The following is from the ESV Study Bible:

Jewish Groups at the Time of the New Testament

When Jesus began to proclaim the gospel, the Sadducees, Essenes, and Pharisees were also laying claim to Israel's heritage. Josephus (Jewish Antiquities 13.171) mentions the groups for the first time during the high priesthood of Jonathan (152-142 B.C.) after the demise of the Zadokite priesthood, which had dominated the religious life of Judea for centuries. The Essenes eventually dropped out of public life and became a network of close-knit communities. It is probably for this reason that the NT does not mention them. The Sadducees and Pharisees continued to compete for control of the temple and Sanhedrin. By the first century, the Sadducees were dominant (cf. Acts 5:17). However, the Pharisees remained an influential minority in Jerusalem, and had mounted a successful campaign to win the hearts of the people.

The Sadducees

The Sadducees, including the high priest Caiaphas (A.D. 18-36), were primarily of wealthy, priestly families in Jerusalem. Josephus claims they were unfriendly — even to one another — and were unpopular (Jewish War 2.166; Jewish Antiquities 13.298). They could be cruel judges (Josephus, Jewish Antiquities 20.199; Mishnah, Sanhedrin 7.2; Makkot 1.6). When Jesus disrupted their financial interests in the temple, he was arrested and condemned (Mark 11:15-19, 14:53-65). James, the brother of the Lord, was later killed by a Sadducean high priest (Josephus, Jewish Antiquities 20.200).

The Sadducees rejected the extrabiblical traditions of the Pharisees, perhaps embracing only the Pentateuch as canonical (Josephus, Jewish Antiquities 13.297; 18.16). This narrow canon may explain why they did not believe in the general resurrection of the dead (Mark 12:18; Acts 4:1-2, 23:6-8), since it is not explicitly mentioned in the Pentateuch. Perhaps for the same reason, they embraced human responsibility, which is emphasized in the Law of Moses (e.g., Genesis 4:7; Deuteronomy 30:19-20), in contrast to the determinism of the Essenes (Josephus, Jewish War 2.164; Jewish Antiquities 13.173). Jesus, when arguing for the resurrection (Mark 12:18-27), meets the Sadducees on their own ground by showing the implications of Exodus 3:6 instead of appealing to a more straightforward passage (e.g., Daniel 12:2).

The Essenes

The Essenes lived communally in villages and cities throughout Palestine and Syria (Josephus, Jewish War 2.124; 11.1; Philo, Hypothetica 11.1). According to Pliny the Elder, an Essene community resided near the Dead Sea (Natural History 5.15.73). Some of the Dead Sea Scrolls, which were discovered in caves at Qumran, probably reflect the ideology of this community.

The Essene communities shared all things in common, including food and clothing (Josephus, Jewish War 2.122, 127; Philo, Good Person 86). Wages were given to a steward, who would purchase and distribute goods to those in need (Josephus, Jewish War 2.123; Philo, Hypothetica 11.10). They cared for their elderly and sick (Philo, Good Person 87). The Jerusalem church adopted a similar way of life (Acts 2:44-45, 4:34-35; James 1:27), except that giving was voluntary (Acts 5:4).

Many of the Essenes did not marry (Josephus, Jewish War 2.120; Philo, Hypothetica 11.14; Pliny, Natural History 5.15.73; but see Jewish War 2.160). The group survived by attracting converts. Pliny claims they drew large crowds (Natural History 5.15.73). A convert would follow their way of life for a year (Josephus, Jewish War 2.137). He could then be baptized, but was not allowed to live with them for another two years (Jewish War 2.138). Followers of Jesus were similarly baptized into the church, but without a probationary period (cf. Acts 2:37-47, 8:37-38).

The Essenes believed God was the cause of all things (Josephus, Jewish Antiquities 13.172; 18.18; Philo, Good Person 84). Consequently, they viewed all government as divinely ordained (Josephus, Jewish War 2.140). However, the Dead Sea Scrolls assume belief in two spirits — one divine, the other satanic — that will be in conflict until the end of the age (e.g., 1QS Col. 3.17-19; Col. 4.16-17). Paul similarly ties spiritual warfare with God's ultimate sovereignty over all things, including government (Romans 13:1-7; Ephesians 2:1-3).

The Essenes were especially scrupulous about maintaining purity. They dressed only in white linen (Josephus, Jewish War 2.123). They no longer participated in the sacrifices of the temple, because, in their view, the priests were defiling the sanctuary (Dead Sea Scrolls, Damascus Document 5.6-7, 14-15). Josephus claims they offered their own sacrifices (Jewish Antiquities 18.19), while Philo assumes they abstained from animal sacrifice altogether (Good Person 75). The Dead Sea Scrolls claim prayer is an acceptable sacrifice (Dead Sea Scrolls, Damascus Document 11.21; 1QS Col. 9.3-5). They also strictly observed the Sabbath. Whereas Jesus assumes most Jews would pull an ox out of a well on the Sabbath (Luke 14:5), the Dead Sea Scrolls forbid it (Damascus Document 11.13).

The Pharisees

The Pharisees resided primarily in Jerusalem (but see Luke 5:17) and were divided into at least three schools: the disciples of Shammai, Hillel, and Gamaliel. These schools were especially concerned about the proper administration of the temple.

The disciples of Shammai, who represented the more conservative wing of the group, were dominant before the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70 (Mishnah, Shabbat 1.4). But Hillel, representing a more liberal interpretation of the Jewish Scriptures, had moved from Babylon to Jerusalem about a generation before Jesus, and gained wide influence as well.

Gamaliel, the son (or grandson) of Hillel, was a renowned teacher of the law in Jerusalem. The apostle Paul had been a disciple of Gamaliel (Acts 22:3). Gamaliel is remembered for his wisdom (Acts 5:34) and careful management of the Jewish calendar. Most Jews followed a lunisolar calendar, which consisted of 12 lunar months, totaling 354 days. Every three years or so a thirteenth month had to be added, in order to bring the average total days of the year up to the 365.25 days of the solar year. Otherwise, the seasons would not have matched the festivals and sacrifices in the temple. Gamaliel determined when to add the thirteenth month (Mishnah, Rosh Hashshanah 2.8; Sanhedrin 2.6). Ironically, if the Galatian Christians had adopted the calendar of Jewish religious holidays advocated by Paul's opponents (Galatians 4:10), they would have found themselves under the authority of his old teacher!

These three schools attempted to shape the religious life of the ordinary Jew through the dissemination of their traditions (Matthew 23:15; Mark 7:1-13; Josephus, Jewish Antiquities 13.297). Galilee was also a part of their mission. The Jerusalem Talmud (Shabbat 15d) claims that Johanan ben Zakkai, a disciple of Hillel, spent 18 years—probably from A.D. 20 to about 40—teaching in the Galilean town of Araba (or Gabara). So Johanan and Jesus were teaching in Galilee at the same time.

The Pharisees also had considerable influence over local scribes, who would preach in the synagogue according to their interpretations (Matthew 7:29, 23:1-2; Mark 2:16). When the Pharisees in Jerusalem were alerted by some scribes that Jesus was preaching a new teaching with authority, they sent a delegation, which, after observing some alarming behaviors, attributed his miraculous power to Beelzebul (Mark 3:22, 7:1). Since the Pharisees were highly respected by the people, the accusation may have had devastating consequences for Jesus' mission (cf. Matt 11:20-24).

The Pharisaic tradition was pragmatic and relevant to the needs of the time. For instance, the Law of Moses requires all loans to be forgiven in the sabbatical (seventh) year (Deuteronomy 15:2). The intention was to provide relief for borrowers, but the reality was that lenders refused to give loans near the seventh year. Hillel addressed the problem by establishing the prosbol, a contract that requires a borrower to pay back a lender even in the seventh year (Mishnah, Shabbat 7.1). His school was also highly pragmatic (at least for husbands wanting a divorce) when it came to rules for divorce, interpreting the ambiguous phrase in Deuteronomy 24:1 — “some indecency in her” — as allowing a husband to divorce his wife for almost any reason, including burning his dinner (Mishnah, Gittin 9.10). However, the school of Shammai interpreted the law more narrowly, allowing divorce only in the case of adultery.

The Dead Sea Scrolls accuse the Pharisees of being “Seekers of Smooth Things,” that is, passing on easy interpretations to the people (e.g., 4Q169 Fragment 1; cf. Isaiah 30:10). While Jesus too was vulnerable to this criticism in some areas of his teaching, especially his indifference to matters of ritual purity and Sabbath observance, he is even more stringent than Moses when it comes to justice. Instead of recommending the prosbol, he flatly commands his disciples, “do not refuse the one who would borrow from you” (Matthew 5:42). Concerning divorce, he adopts a similar position to the school of Shammai, but also notes that divorce was not God's original plan and is not required (Matthew 5:31-32, 19:9).

The difference in stringency can be further illustrated by the summations of the law provided by Hillel and Jesus. Hillel says, “What is hateful to you, do not to your neighbor: that is the whole Torah, while the rest is commentary thereof; go and learn it” (Babylonian Talmud, Shabbat 31a). Jesus says, “So whatever you wish that others would do to you, do also to them, for this is the Law and the Prophets” (Matthew 7:12). We find the negative wording of Hillel's teaching in earlier Jewish writings (Tobit 4:15; Philo, Hypothetica 7.6-8). Jesus' summation is more challenging, requiring nothing less than a universal love for all people, including one's enemies (Matthew 5:44).

However, despite the curious quality of some of their tradition, the Pharisees were especially scrupulous to maintain a righteous status before God. Many were probably like Paul, who claimed that as a Pharisee he was “blameless” as to the Law of Moses (Philippians 3:6). While many Jews tithed, Pharisees even tithed their garden herbs (Matthew 23:23). While others fasted periodically, they fasted twice a week (Mark 2:18; Luke 18:12). They also maintained purity at their meals to the point of “straining out a gnat” from a cup (Matthew 23:24; cf. Mark 7:4), and they avoided sharing a table with “sinners,” those like tax collectors who habitually broke the law (Mark 2:16; Luke 7:39).

All three expressions of piety come together in the parable of the Pharisee and the tax collector (Luke 18:9-14). Jesus depicts the Pharisee as distinguishing himself from the tax collector because he fasted and tithed in order to retain a righteous status before God. Elsewhere, Jesus affirms tithing but claims the Pharisees neglect the “weightier matters of the law” —justice, mercy, and faithfulness (Matt 23:23).

The Pharisees took their personal relationship with God seriously, in part because they believed that the resurrection of the dead was a reward for living a righteous life (Josephus, Jewish War 2.163; Jewish Antiquities 18.14; Acts 23:8; Aboth of Rabbi Nathan 5A). But Jesus says, “For I tell you, unless your righteousness exceeds that of the scribes and Pharisees, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven” (Matthew 5:20). On another occasion, he tells the Pharisaic teacher Nicodemus that he needs to be “born again,” or “born from above” (anōthen , John 3:3). Despite the blameless way of life many Pharisees pursued, such effort, in Jesus' view, was not enough: like all people, they needed to repent and believe in the gospel. From this perspective, Paul could anticipate being found by God, at the resurrection, “not having a righteousness of my own that comes from the law, but that which comes through faith in Christ” (Phil 3:9).

The Following is from the NIV '08 Study Bible:

Jewish Sects

Pharisees

Their roots can be traced to the second century B.C. —to the Hasidim.

1. Along with the Torah, they accepted as equally inspired and authoritative all the prescriptions set forth in the oral traditions preserved by the rabbis.

2. On free will and determination, they held to a mediating view that did not allow either human free will or the sovereignty of God to cancel out the other.

3. They accepted a rather developed hierarchy of angels and demons.

4. They believed in the immortality of the soul and in reward retribution after death.

5. They taught that there was a future for the dead.

6. They were champions of human equality.

7. The main emphasis of their teaching was ethical rather than theological.

Sadducees

They probably had their beginning during the Hasmonean period (166-63 B.C.). Their demise occurred c. A.D. 70 with the fall of Jerusalem.

1. They considered only the books of Moses to be canonical Scripture, denying that the oral law was authoritative and binding.

2. They interpreted Mosaic law more literally than did the Pharisees.

3. They were very exacting in Levitical purity.

4. They attributed all to free will.

5. They argued there is neither resurrection of the dead nor a future life.

6. They rejected the idea of a spiritual world.

7. They rejected a belief in angels and demons.

Essenes

They probably originated among the Hasidim, along with the Pharisees, from whom they later separated (1 Maccabees 2:42 ; 7:13). They were a group of very strict and zealous Jews who took part with the Maccabeans in a revolt against the Syrians, c. 165-155 B.C. , and may have been the group who moved to Qumran c.

150 B.C. , where they copied and/or wrote most of the Dead Sea Scrolls and deposited them in nearby caves

1. They followed a strict observance of the purity laws of the Torah.

2. They were notable for their communal ownership of property.

3. They had a strong sense of mutual responsibility.

4. Daily worship was an important feature along with a daily study of their sacred scriptures.

5. Solemn oaths of piety and obedience had to be taken.

6. Sacrifices were offered on holy days and during their sacred seasons, but not at the temple.

7. Marriage was avoided but was not condemned in principle.

8. They attributed to fate everything that happened.

Zealots

They originated during the reign of Herod the Great c. 6 B.C. and ceased to exist in A.D. 73 at Masada.

1. They opposed payment of taxes to a pagan emperor, saying that allegiance was due only to God.

2. They were fiercely loyal to Jewish tradition.

3. They endorsed the use of violence as long as it accomplished a good end.

4. They were opposed to the use of the Greek language in the Holy Land.

High Priest, Chief Priests, Priests, and Levites - members of the tribe of Levi who were responsible for the temple and its sacrifices, and thus were the religious and social leaders of the Jewish people.

- Priests and Levites in ancient Israel had to be men from the tribe of Levi; any Jews from the eleven other tribes could not be priests.
- Levites (members of the tribe of Levi who were not priests) assisted in the practical operation of the temple as guards, musicians, etc. (Luke 10:32; John 1:19; Acts 4:36; cf. Num 3, 8; etc.).
- Priests offered the sacrifices and took care of other cultic/ritual concerns in the temple (Mark 1:44; Matt 12:4-5; Luke 1:5-23; etc.).
- The same Greek word is translated "High Priest" (sg.) and "Chief Priests" (pl.) in most English Bibles; they were in charge of the Temple in Jerusalem and thus were the most important religious leaders in ancient Israel, at least prior to the destruction of the Temple in 70 CE.
- The High Priest was appointed annually, but members of the family of Annas and Caiaphas were often reappointed in the first century (Matt 26:3, 57; Luke 3:2; John 11:49; 18:12-28; Acts 4:6).
- The Gospels portray the chief priests (often with the scribes and elders) as members of the ruling authorities who opposed Jesus, long sought to arrest and kill him, and eventually condemned him to death (in cooperation with the Roman governor).

Scribes - men specially trained in writing, and thus influential as interpreters and teachers of the Law, and agents of the rulers.

- "Scribes" did not form their own party, but could belong to other groups (e.g. "the scribes of the Pharisees" in Mark 2:16; Acts 23:9).
- Most of their duties involved writing, e.g. producing legal documents, recording deeds, copying scriptures, teaching people, etc.
- Since they specialized in the interpretation of the Jewish Law (Torah), "scribes" are sometimes translated and regarded as "lawyers".
- But only Luke uses the technical term for "lawyer" (nomikos; 7:30; 10:25; etc.) in some passages where Mark and Matthew have "scribe" (grammateus).
- The Gospels usually portray scribes (along with chief priests, elders, and/or Pharisees) as opponents of Jesus who actively sought his death (Mark 11:27).
- The Acts of the Apostles also portrays them as opponents of the early Christians (Acts 4:5; 6:12).
- But there are a few exceptions: some scribes are neutral (Matt 13:52), or even praised by Jesus (Mark 12:28-34), or rise to defend Paul (Acts 23:9).

Elders - the "older men" of a community who formed the ruling elite and were often members of official "councils".

- The Greek word "presbyter" simply refers to older men, but was mainly used for men respected by others as leaders and role models.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

- The Gospels usually portray the elders (often with scribes and/or priests) as opponents of Jesus who conspired to have him killed.
- The NT Letters and Epistles also mention "elders" as leaders of the early Christian communities (1 Tim 5:17-20; 1 Peter 5:1-5).
- The Book of Revelation gives a prominent role to "twenty-four elders" who surround God's throne (Rev 4:4-11).

Pharisees - a group of influential Jews active in Palestine from 2nd century BCE through 1st century CE; they advocated and adhered to strict observance of the Sabbath rest, purity rituals, tithing, and food restrictions based on the Hebrew Scriptures and on later traditions.

- "Pharisees" probably means "separated ones" in Hebrew, referring to their strict observance of laws and traditions (Luke 18:10-12).
- Long-time political and religious rivals of the Sadducees, vying for influence among the rulers and the people.
- Mostly laymen, but possibly also some priests (from the tribe of Levi) or even members of the Sanhedrin (Acts 5:34).
- Followed not only the laws of the Hebrew Bible, but also the "traditions of the elders" (Mark 7:1-13; Matt 15:1-20).
- Leaders were called "rabbis" or "teachers", such as Nicodemus (John 3:1-10; 7:50; 19:39) and Gamaliel (Acts 5:34; 22:3).
- Also had trained "scribes" (Mark 2:16; Acts 23:9) and "disciples" (Mark 2:18; Matt 22:16; Luke 5:33).
- NT Gospels portray them mainly as opponents of Jesus (Mark 8:11; 10:2), who conspire with the Herodians to kill Jesus (Mark 3:6).
- Some of Jesus' harshest polemics are directed against the "hypocrisy" and "blindness" of the Pharisees (Matt 23; John 9).
- In contrast to Sadducees (Mark 12:18-27), Pharisees believed in the resurrection of the dead (Acts 23:1-8).
- Paul himself was a Pharisee (Phil 3:5; Acts 23:6; 26:5), as were some other early Christians (Acts 15:5).

Sadducees - another prominent group of Jews in Palestine from 2nd century BCE through 1st century CE; they were probably smaller "elite" group, but even more influential than the Pharisees; they followed the laws of the Hebrew Bible (the Torah), but rejected newer traditions.

- "Sadducees" comes from the Hebrew tsaddiqim ("righteous ones"), which may refer to the way they wished to live their lives.
- The name may also derive from Zadok, the high priest under King David (1 Kings 1:26), since many Sadducees were priests.
- Long-time political and religious rivals of the Pharisees, although their influence was more with the wealthy ruling elites.
- Probably also rivals of the Herodians, since they had supported the Hasmonean Jewish rulers against King Herod.
- Closely associated with the Jerusalem Temple and with the ruling council ("Sanhedrin") of the Jews (Acts 4:1; 5:17; 23:6).
- Did not believe in life after death (Mark 12:18-27; Luke 20:27) or in angels or spirits (Acts 23:8).

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

- NT Gospels portray them (often together with the Pharisees) mainly as opponents of Jesus (Matt 16:1-12; Mark 18:12-27).
- But they also rejected the teachings of the Pharisees, esp. their oral traditions and newer innovations.

Essenes - a smaller group or "sect" that lived a communal "monastic" lifestyle at Qumram (near the Dead Sea) from 2nd century BCE through 1st century CE; the "Dead Sea Scrolls" found in this location in 1947 are usually associated with them.

- Originally a group of priests, founded and/or led by a "Teacher of Righteousness" during the early Maccabean/Hasmonean era.
- They regarded the Jerusalem priests as illegitimate, since those were not Zadokites (from the family of the high priest Zadok).
- They rejected the validity of the Temple worship, and thus refused to attend the festivals or support the Jerusalem Temple.
- They expected God to send a great prophet and two different "Messiahs" (anointed leaders), one kingly and one priestly.
- They live a communitarian life with strict membership requirements, rules, and rituals; they probably also practiced celibacy.
- Mentioned by Josephus, but not in the NT (although some scholars think the "Herodians" in the NT refer to Essenes).
- Some scholars think John the Baptist (also Jesus?) was closely associated with the Essenes, but a direct connection is unlikely.
- Monastery destroyed by the Roman Army ca. 68 AD, during the Jewish War against Rome, which Essenes probably considered the final battle between the forces of good (the true Israelites) and evil (the Romans and their collaborators).
- Dozens of complete scrolls and thousands of written fragments were discovered from 1947 to mid-1950's in caves near Qumran.
- The Scrolls contain copies of almost the entire Hebrew Bible, some older non-canonical texts, and dozens of the Essenes own writings.

Herodians - probably a faction that supported the policies and government of the Herodian family, especially during the time of Herod Antipas, ruler over Galilee and Perea during the lifetimes of John the Baptist and of Jesus.

- Mentioned only twice in Mark and once in Matthew, but never in Luke, John, or the rest of the NT.
- In Mark 3:6 they conspire with the Pharisees to kill Jesus, still fairly early during Jesus' ministry in Galilee.
- In Mark 12:13-17 and Matt 22:16 they join some Pharisees in trying to trap Jesus with a question about paying taxes to Caesar.
- See also the possibly related references to the friends and court officials of Herod (Mark 6:21, 26; Matt 14:1-12; Luke 23:7-12).

Zealots - one of several different "revolutionary" groups in the 1st century CE who opposed the Roman occupation of Israel.

- "Zealots" were probably not an organized group at first, but any Jews "zealous" for God's law (Num 25:13; 1 Kings 19:10; Acts 22:3; Gal 1:14).

- Just before and during the First Jewish War against Rome, "Zealots" were a nationalistic revolutionary party opposed to the Romans.
- One of Jesus' apostles (not the same as Simon Peter) is called "Simon the Zealot" in Luke 6:15 and Acts 1:13 (but "Simon the Cananaean" in Mark 3:18& Matt 10:4).
- He may have belonged to a revolutionary group before joining Jesus, but more likely was "zealous" in the older sense.

CAIAPHAS

Caiaphas. High priest c. A.D. 18–36. He was the son-in-law of Annas, who had been deposed from the high priesthood by the Romans in A.D. 15. Caiaphas managed to retain control of the high priesthood for nearly 18 years (c. A.D. 18-36) — longer than anyone else in the first century (cf. Josephus, Jewish Antiquities 18.35, 95). He was certainly the high priest during Jesus' ministry, although he also consulted frequently with his father-in-law Annas (John 18:13; cf. Luke 3:2).
He was appointed High Priest of the Jews by the Roman procurator Valerius Gratus in about A.D. 18, according to Josephus, a first century Jewish historian (Ant., XVIII, ii, 2). Gratus was the predecessor of Pontius Pilate. [Source: AboutBibleProphecy.com]

Jewish Encyclopedia.com: CAIAPHAS or CAIPHAS, JOSEPH
(καϊάφας, a Greek word; in the Hebrew original, probably not כיפא, but קיף; compare Mishnah Parah iii. 5; Derenbourg, "Essai sur l'Histoire de la Palestine," p. 215, note 2; Schürer, "Gesch." 3d ed., ii. 218; Josephus, "Antiquities of the Jews," xviii. 2, § 2): Son-in-law of the high priest Ananas or Annas, mentioned in John xviii. 13; held that office himself through appointment of Valerius Gratus, about 18-36, hence for a longer period than several of his predecessors and successors. Luke iii. 2 speaks of two high priests, Annas and Caiaphas. The mention of the two at one and the same time has been a great stumbling-block to the commentators. John made a curious error (xi. 49, xviii. 13) in speaking of Caiaphas as the high priest "in that year," as if he interchanged every year with Annas. It appears that even while Caiaphas performed the duties of the office, the power of high priest lay in the hands of Annas.

Caiaphas' historic importance lies in the fact that he is expressly mentioned by Matt. xxvi. 3, 57, and John xi. 49, xviii. 13, 24, 28, in connection with the crucifixion of Jesus, though not by Mark and Luke. After his arrest, however, Jesus was taken not to Caiaphas but to Annas (John xviii. 13 et seq.), who questioned him only privately. The actual trial took place on the next day, the eve of the Passover, before the twenty-three members of the Sanhedrin over whom Caiaphas presided (Matt. xxvi. 57). Caiaphas is reported to have said on that occasion that it was expedient that one man should die for the people (John xviii. 14), a saying found also among the Rabbis (Gen. R. xciv. 9). The fact that Jesus was taken not to Caiaphas but to Annas is explained on the ground that the latter's palace was nearer the place of arrest than that of the former. Through the travels of Theodosius Archidiaconus, 530, it is known that there were 100 paces between the house of Caiaphas and the hall of judgment ("Nuovo Bull. di Arch. Crist." vi. 184, Rome, 1900). Peter and other disciples, however, being ignorant of the state of affairs, went to Caiaphas' house in the night.

After Pontius' recall Caiaphas was removed by the new governor, Vitellius (Josephus, "Ant." xviii. 4, § 3), and was succeeded by Jonathan, who was the son of Anan (36) and perhaps a brother-in-law of Caiaphas. It was probably at this time that the meeting with the apostles took place, at which Caiaphas is mentioned as belonging to the high-priestly family (Acts iv. 6). It was said later in the Syrian Church that he had been converted to Christianity, and was identical with the historian Josephus Flavius (Assemani, "Bibl. Orient." ii. 156, iii. 522; Solomon of Bassora, "The Book of the Bee," ed. Budge, tr. p. 94). His house outside Jerusalem is still (1902) shown.

[LY NOTE: The above is included so you can see how he is dealt with from Jewish perspective. It's interesting to see their critique of Bible passages "errors" that does not comprehend the Bible writers truly understanding, for example the Annas was the real religious power behind the Roman appointed Caiaphas (which COULD change annually / at whims of Roman government) and Gospel writers were acknowledging the real situation.]

Joseph Caiaphas, High Priest (18 C.E.-36 C.E)

Jesus Before Caiaphas

Ossuary of Caiaphas, found in 1990

Joseph Caiaphas was the high priest of Jerusalem who, according to Biblical accounts, sent Jesus to Pilate for his execution.

As high priest and chief religious authority in the land, Caiaphas had many important responsibilities, including controlling the Temple treasury, managing the Temple police and other personnel, performing religious rituals, and--central to the passion story--serving as president of the Sanhedrin, the Jewish council and court that reportedly considered the case of Jesus.

The high priest had another, more controversial function in first-century Jerusalem: serving as a sort of liaison between Roman authority and the Jewish population. High priests, drawn from the Sadducean aristocracy, received their appointment from Rome since the time of Herod the Great, and Rome looked to high priests to keep the Jewish populace in line. We know from other cases (such as one incident in 66 C.E.) that Roman prefects might demand that high priests arrest and turn over Jews seen as agitators.

Caiaphas was the son-in-law of Annas, high priest from 6 to 15 C.E. and head of a family that would control the high priesthood for most of the first century. Annas is also mentioned in Biblical accounts. It is possible that he, as a high priest emeritus, might have served at the side of Caiaphas in the Sanhedrin called to resolve the fate of Jesus.

Although little is known of Caiaphas, historians infer from his long tenure as high priest, from 18 to 36 C.E., that he must have worked well with Roman authority. For ten years, Caiaphas served with Roman prefect Pontius Pilate. The two presumably had a close relationship. It is likely that Caiaphas and Pilate had standing arrangements for how to deal with subversive persons such as Jesus.

Caiaphas's motives in turning Jesus over to Pilate are a subject of speculation. Some historians suggest that he had little choice. Others argue that Caiaphas saw Jesus as a threat to the existing religious order. He might have believed that if Jesus wasn't restrained or even executed that the Romans might end their relative tolerance of Jewish institutions.

High priests, including Caiaphas, were both respected and despised by the Jewish population. As the highest religious authority, they were seen as playing a critical role in religious life and the Sanhedrin. At the same time, however, many Jews resented the close relationship that high priest maintained with Roman authorities and suspected them of taking bribes or practicing other forms of corruption.

In the year 36 C.E., both Caiaphas and Pilate were dismissed from office by Syrian governor, Vitellius, according to Jewish historian Josephus. It seems likely that the cause of their dismissal was growing public unhappiness with their close cooperation. Rome might have perceived the need for a conciliatory gesture to Jews whose sensibilities had been offended by the two leaders. Josephus described the high priests of the family of Annas as "heartless when they sit in judgment."

Unlike other Temple priests, Caiaphas, as a high priest, lived in Jerusalem's Upper City, a wealthy section inhabited by the city's powers-that-be. His home almost certainly was constructed around a large courtyard.

Archaeologists discovered in 1990 in a family tomb in Abu Tor, two miles south of Jerusalem, an ossuary, or bone box, containing on its side the name of Joseph Caiaphas, written in Aramaic. The ossuary is assumed to be genuine.

Archaeological Note: Caiaphas Ossuary. During the days of Jesus, in what is called the Second Temple Period, the Jews of Jerusalem and environs often buried their dead in long niches carved into bedrock. Although there are many variations, in a typical tomb there was a central room carved into the rock. In one wall were the steps that led down into it, and in each of the other three walls were long niches, called kokhim, into each of which a body could be placed. After decomposition had taken place, perhaps a year later, the bones were removed and placed into small rectangular boxes called ossuaries. The niche could then be reused for another burial.

Hundreds of ossuaries from this period have been found in the Jerusalem area. In 1990 an Israeli archaeologist, Zvi Greenhut, excavated a Second Temple tomb on a hill to the south of Jerusalem. The tomb contained 12 ossuaries, and on two of them the name "Caiaphas" was scratched. On another the name "Joseph, son of Caiaphas" was scratched, who, according to the Jewish historian Josephus, was the very person who presided at Jesus' trial. The name Caiaphas (high priest from A.D. 18-36) appears some nine times in the Gospels and Acts.

The Influence of the Pharisees

The Pharisees maintained an incredible influence among the people for many generations, so that even Herod the Great, Rome's puppet, was careful not to offend them. He had no regard for their religious teachings but was well aware of the power they had with the people and the threat they posed to the stability of his kingdom if he were to attack them.

Josephus recorded that there were "above six thousand" (6,000) strict Pharisees (Josephus, Antiq. XVII. ii. 4) and some believe that nearly 5% of all of the total population could be counted among the Pharisees. They also held an important place in the Sanhedrin through the Maccabean period on into New Testament times. They most likely did not control the Sanhedrin as the Talmud suggests.

In the New Testament, the Pharisees seem to be the main enemies of Jesus, probably because He had won a deeper influence among the people which they formerly possessed. It was the Pharisees who were known as the "experts" in the Law and so they took it upon themselves to scrutinize and ultimately condemn the very words of Jesus, and attributed his miracles to Beelzebub, the ruler of the demons.

More than once the Pharisees, Sadducees and Herodians had joined themselves together to attempt to destroy Jesus (see Matt 22:15f.; Mark 3:6; 12 :13). These passages reveal just how politically powerful the Pharisees really were and the position that they held in the governing body of the Sanhedrin. More than once the politically powerful Sadducees yielded to the opinion of the Pharisees.

According to Josephus, the Sadducees had to repeatedly submit to the dictates of the Pharisees "since otherwise the masses would not tolerate them" (Josephus, Antiq. XVIII. i. 4; remember the Sanhedrin's acceptance of Gamaliel's recommendation in Acts 5: 34ff.).

The Mishnah, compiled by the Patriarch Judah (200 A.D.), which is the final work of Pharisaic rabbis, began a final work in the history of Jewish scholarship. It is a monument of Pharisaic scholarship and a testimony to the final triumph of Pharisaism, which now is compiled into the Talmud which has become synonymous with Judaism.

Several Pharisees are named in the New Testament; Gamaliel, Nicodemus, and Joseph of Arimathea being three. The most famous Pharisee is the Apostle Paul. He says that he is a Pharisee and the son of Pharisees (Acts 23:6) and was taught by Gamaliel himself (Acts 22:3). In Acts 23, Paul stands before the council and causes a fight between the Pharisees and Sadducees based on their differences in doctrine.

Synagogue Services During the Time of Jesus and Paul

See also: [Order of a Synagogue Service during the time of Paul and Barnabas]

He Went To The Synagogue

The New Testament records more than 10 occasions on which the ministry of Jesus took place in the synagogue. The Gospels record that "Jesus went throughout Galilee, teaching in their synagogues." Yet the Christian reader rarely ponders the significance of such an apparently common structure so central in Jesus' ministry.The synagogue provided a ready platform for the teaching of Jesus and later the apostle Paul. In that way, it proved to be a significant part of God's preparing exactly the right cultural practices for his Son's ministry. But more than that, Jesus, his disciples, and Paul (as well as most early Jewish followers of Jesus) went to the synagogue to worship. The synagogue was not simply a place to share God's Word, but also an important part of the Jewish people's relationship to God. It might surprise modern Christians to discover that many church practices are based on synagogue customs that Jesus followed. Understanding the synagogue and its place in Jesus' life and teaching is an important step in hearing his message in the cultural context in which God placed it.

THE ORIGIN

There are many theories of the origin of a gathering place called synagogue. The Greek word means "assembly" and is used in place of the Hebrew word meaning "congregation" or "community of Israel." Originally, it probably referred to the gathered people and over time came to refer to the place of assembly as well. It is never used to refer to the Temple, which was God's dwelling place and not primarily a place of assembly for the community. No one but Levites and priests could enter the Temple. All members of a Jewish community could participate in the community life of the synagogue.

Some Jewish traditions hold that there were places of assembly for the study of Torah during the time of the Temple of Solomon. At the most, the Old Testament indicates that the practice of prayer, with or without sacrifice, which was to be so central to the synagogue, had already begun (Ps. 116:17; Isa. 1:11,15; 1 Sam. 1:10ff).

The beginning of the assembly of people for the purpose of study and prayer (the Jewish way of describing worship) appears to be the Babylonian exile after the destruction of the first Temple. Jewish scholars believe Ezekiel's reassuring promise that God would provide a "sanctuary" (11:16) for his people is a reference to the small groups that gathered in their homes during the exile to recall God's covenant, his law, and especially the redemptive promises of the prophets. It is likely that these godly people, having learned a hard lesson about the importance of obedience to God, assembled regularly to study his Torah to prevent the sins of their ancestors from being repeated. A group of experts in the law and its interpretation taught and studied in small associations at humble locations called "houses of study." These places of study, and the reflection on the need to be obedient, are the roots of the synagogue, a sanctuary to inspire obedience to God.

In spite of the later emphasis on prayer and study in the place of assembly, it is likely the main focus of the early gatherings of Jewish people was simply the need to maintain their identity as a people living in a foreign and pagan country. That the synagogue began as the center of the Jewish social life is confirmed by the fact that it was the community center in the first century as well. The synagogue was school, meeting place, courtroom, and place of prayer. In some towns, the synagogue may even have provided lodging for travelers. It was the place where small groups of Jewish students assembled for Scripture reading and discussion of the Torah and oral tradition. This meant that worship and study, friendship and community celebration, and even the governing of the community were all done by the same people in the same place.

It appears that the early church patterned itself after the synagogue and continued the same practice of living and worshiping together as a community, often in private homes (Acts 2:42?47). The modern "assembly" of Jesus' followers would do well to remember that the roots of the church are in a community living and worshiping together. Worship (prayer) was a natural extension of the life of the community.

SYNAGOGUES OF JESUS' TIME

By the first century, a synagogue was found in most of the towns and villages of Galilee. The Gospels specifically mention those of Nazareth (Matt.13:54) and Capernaum (Mark 1:21). Archaeological evidence is scant for those early synagogues, though later ones left much more substantial remains. Typically, they were built on the highest point in town or on a raised platform. As long as the Temple stood in Jerusalem, synagogues apparently did not face Jerusalem.

In some cases, the front facade had three doors. Inside there were benches on three sides of the room. There was a small platform where the speakers or readers would stand, and it is possible that a small menorah (a seven-branched candlestick), like the one in the Temple, stood on that platform. The floor was usually dirt or flagstones, and common people probably sat on mats on the floor, while the important people sat on the stone benches (Matt. 23:6). In later synagogues, elaborate mosaics with a variety of designs covered the floor (none exist from Jesus' time).

There was a seat for the reader of the Torah called the Moses Seat (or the Seat of Honor), because the Torah recorded the words of Moses so the reader was taking Moses place (Matt. 23:2). The Torah scrolls and the writings of the prophets were either kept in a portable chest and brought to the synagogue for worship or were kept in the Synagogue itself in a permanent Torah cabinet (called the holy ark). Outside was a Mikveh (ritual bath) for the symbolic cleansing required for entrance into the synagogue.

Local elders governed the synagogue, a kind of democracy. While all adult members of the community could belong to the synagogue, only adult males age 13 or older could be elders. A local caretaker (unfortunately sometimes called "ruler" in the English Bible), called the hazzan, was responsible for maintaining the building and organizing the prayer services (Mark 5:22, 35?36, 38; Luke 8:41-49, 13:14). The hazzan was sometimes the teacher of the synagogue school, especially in smaller villages. He would announce the coming Sabbath with blasts on the shofar (ram's horn). Although the hazzan was in charge of worship services, the prayer leader, readers, and even the one who delivered the short sermon could be any adult member of the community. All were recognized as being able to share the meaning of God's Word as God had taught them in their daily walk with him. In this way, the community encouraged even its youngest members to be active participants in its religious life. (Jesus' encounter with the wise teachers in the Temple courts was unusual not so much because of his age, but because of the wise questions he asked, see Luke 2:41-47.) The hazzan also cared for the Torah scrolls and other sacred writings and brought them out at the appropriate times (Luke 4:1-20). Priests and Levites were welcome to participate in synagogue life, including worship, but they had no special role except that only priests could offer the blessing of Aaron from the Torah (Num. 6:24?27) at the end of the service.

SYNAGOGUE AND SABBATH

While the synagogue building functioned as a community center, school, court, and place of study during the week, on the Sabbath it served as the place where the assembly met for prayer (1). When the first three stars could be seen on Friday evening, the hazzan blew the shofar to announce that the Sabbath had begun. The people gathered at twilight to eat the Sabbath meal in their homes. All the food was already prepared because no work was permitted during this time in most traditions.

The following morning, the community gathered in the synagogue building. The service began with several blessings offered to God. The congregation recited the Shema: "Hear, 0 Israel: The LORD our God, the Lord is one"(Deut. 6:4). The Torah scrolls would be brought out by the hazzan and would be read in several portions, sometimes as many as seven. Different people were scheduled to read a portion each week. The readings were determined according to a set schedule, so the reader would have no choice of the passage read.

Following the Torah portion, a section from the prophets (called the Haphtarah) would be read by the same or another reader. After all readings, a short sermon would be offered, often by the reader of the Torah or Haftarah. Any adult member of the community was eligible to speak the sermon called the derashah. The sermon was frequently quite short (Jesus spoke only a few words, Luke 4:21). The service ended with a benediction using the Aaronic blessing found in the Torah (Num. 6:24-26), if a priest was present to offer it.

Jesus spent much time in synagogues (Matt. 4:23). He taught in them (Matt. 13:54), healed in them (Luke 4:33-35; Mark 3:1-5), and debated the interpretation of Torah in them (John 6:28-59). Clearly, he belonged to the community of the synagogue, because when he visited Nazareth, he was scheduled to read the Haphtarah (Luke 4:16-30) and may have read the Torah as well as he concludes with a provocative derashah. This is a remarkable example of God's preparation, as the passage Jesus read was exactly the passage that he used to explain his ministry.

The early Christians continued to attend synagogues, though with a new interpretation of the Torah, now that Jesus had been revealed as Messiah (Acts 13:14).

The new community of Jesus was born out of the synagogue. Believers were to become assemblies, not single individuals seeking God alone. We address God as "our Father" because we are his assembly. We are one body because we are made that way through Jesus (1 Cor. 12:12-13). In our fractured, broken world, with all its self-preoccupation, the model of the synagogue, the picture of the community of God, presents an alluring message. We would do well to understand the synagogue of Galilee.

THE SYNAGOGUE SCHOOL

Boys and girls went to school in Galilee though boys continued till they were 15 if they displayed unusual ability while the girls were married by that time. Students probably attended school in the synagogue and were taught by the hazzan or a local Torah Teacher. Study began at age five or six in elementary school, called bet sefer. The subject was the Torah and the method was memorization. Since the learning of the community was passed orally, memorization of tradition and God's Word were essential.

At first students studied only the Torah. Later they began to study the more complicated oral interpretations of the Torah. Question-and-answer sessions between teacher and student were added to the memorization drills. The more gifted students might continue after age 12 or 13 in beth midrash (meaning "house of study," or secondary school). Here began the more intense process of understanding and applying the Torah and oral tradition to specific situations. The truly gifted would leave home to study with a famous rabbi to "become like him" as a talmid (disciple). Although their discussion and study might be held in the synagogue, these disciples would travel with their rabbi, learning the wisdom of Torah and oral tradition applied to the daily situations they faced.

By the time a person was an adult, he knew most of the Scriptures by heart. If someone recited a passage, the audience would know whether it was quoted accurately or not. Jesus, in keeping with his culture, would simply begin with "It is written ..." knowing his audience would recognize an accurate quote.

The Mishnah (the written record of the oral traditions of Jesus' time and after) recorded that the gifted student began study of the written Torah at age five, studied oral traditions at age 12, became a religious adult at 13, studied the application of Torah and tradition at 15, learned a trade at 20, and entered his full ability at 30. Although this was written after Jesus, it represents the practice of his time. It is significant that he came to Jerusalem at age 12, already wise; then he learned a trade from

His father until his ministry began at age 30. His life seemed to follow the education practices of his people quite closely. He surely attended the local school of Nazareth and learned from great rabbis as well. Being addressed as "Rabbi" certainly indicated someone who had learned from a rabbi. He certainly selected a group of students who followed him, learning as they went. And everywhere his audience had the knowledge of the Bible on which Jesus so often based his teaching.

Notes

(1) Christians describe the church activity of formal interaction with God as "worship." Jews describe the same activity in synagogues (or, in Bible times, in the Temple) as "prayer." In Jesus' parable, the tax collector and Pharisee go to the Temple to pray (Luke 18:10). Their activity certainly included prayer, for going to the Temple to pray meant going at the time of worship and sacrifice. The Temple is called the House of Prayer (Isa. 56:7; Luke 19:46), meaning "the place of worship."

Order of a Synagogue Service during the time of Paul and Barnabas:

IN A SYNAGOGUE SERVICE:

1. First the "Shema" would be recited (this is Deuteronomy 6:4, which Jews would repeat several times daily). "Hear, O Israel! The Lord is Our God. The Lord is one!" (NASB)

2. Then certain prayers would be spoken.
3. Then a reading from *the Law (Genesis through Deuteronomy).
4. Then a reading from the *Prophets (intended to illustrate the law).
5. Then a sermon. The synagogue rulers would decide who was to lead the service and give the sermon. A different person would be chosen to lead each week.
6. Since it was customary for the synagogue leader to invite visiting rabbis to speak, Paul and Barnabas usually would have an open door when they went go to a synagogue. But as soon as they spoke about Jesus as Messiah, the door would often slam shut. Usually they would not be invited back by the religious leaders, and sometimes they would be thrown out of town!

The invitation from the synagogue rulers was to speak a message of encouragement. What an open invitation for the gospel! There can be no more encouraging word than the fact that God has come to earth and opened a door to heaven, providing an atonement for sin and offering new life in Jesus Christ! Such an invitation was all Paul needed.

Pharisees: What Were They Really Like? Did Jesus Condemn Their Traditions?

"In fact, when it comes to teaching people to obey the real meaning of God's law, Jesus was stricter than that Pharisees. What He did sometimes condemn them for was being too loose and not following God's word."

"…So again, Jesus did not condemn the Pharisees for strictly following God's law. What He condemned them for was binding man-made laws different from God's law. They both bound what God had not bound and released men from what God had bound, all on the basis of man-made rules."

Matthew 15:3. - He answered. Christ does not formally defend his disciples, nor condemn the Pharisees for their ceremonial ablutions, but he turns to a matter of more importance, even a plain breach or evasion of a plain commandment. Ye also. If my disciples transgress a tradition of the ancients, ye too transgress, and that the commandment of God - an error of far graver character. His non-observance of these minutiae showed their unimportance, and called attention to the inward purity which they typified, and which could be maintained without these external ceremonies. At the same time, Jesus does not condemn such symbolical acts, even as he himself washed the disciples' feet before the last Supper. The evil in rabbinical teachings was that it superseded the spiritual view, and placed outward cleansing on a higher level than inward holiness. By (διὰ with accusative); on account of, in order to maintain. Your tradition. Tradition which is emphatically yours and not God's, a human gloss, not a revealed command. Jesus does not accept the assertion that these traditions are derived from the ancients; he gives them a more modern origin.

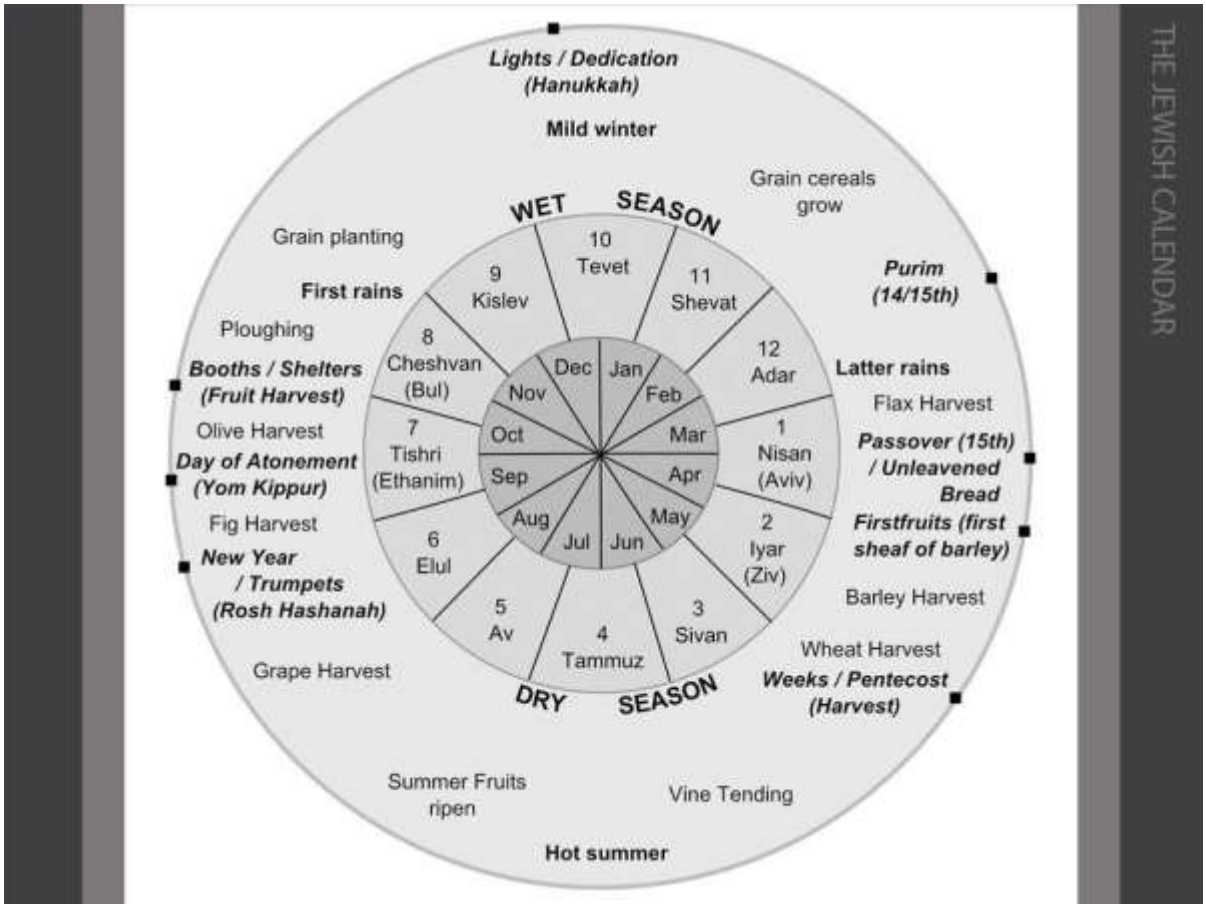
A Luni-Solar Seasonal Calendar

The Jewish calendar might best be described as "luni-solar." Since every lunar cycle runs roughly 29.5 days, the Jewish year has 354 days compared to 365 days of the solar calendar. To ensure that the festivals would occur in their proper seasons (e.g. Passover in springtime, Sukkot in the fall, etc.), an extra month (Adar II) is added every two or three years to offset the 11 day lag per solar year. In this way the lunar calendar is synchronized with the solar cycle of the agricultural seasons.



Source: http://www.hebrew4christians.com/Holidays/Calendar/calendar.html

The Hebrew lunar year is about eleven days shorter than the solar cycle and uses the 19-year Metonic cycle to bring it into line with the solar cycle, with the addition of an intercalary month every two or three years, for a total of seven times per 19 years. Even with this intercalation, the average Hebrew calendar year is longer by about 6 minutes and 40 seconds than the current mean solar year, so that every 217 years the Hebrew calendar will fall a day behind the current mean solar year; and about every 231 years it will fall a day behind the Gregorian calendar year. What does a Jewish year look like?

An ordinary (non-leap) year has 353, 354, or 355 days. A leap year has 383, 384, or 385 days. The three lengths of the years are termed, "deficient," "regular," and "complete," respectively.

An ordinary year has 12 months, a leap year has 13 months.

Every month starts (approximately) on the day of a new moon.

The months and their lengths are:

Name	Length in a deficient year	Length in a regular year	Length in a complete year
Tishri	30	30	30
Heshvan	29	29	30
Kislev	29	30	30
Tevet	29	29	29
Shevat	30	30	30
Adar I	30	30	30
Adar II	29	29	29
Nisan	30	30	30
Iyar	29	29	29
Sivan	30	30	30
Tammuz	29	29	29
Av	30	30	30
Elul	29	29	29
Total:	353 or 383	354 or 384	355 or 385

The month Adar I is only present in leap years. In non-leap years Adar II is simply called "Adar."

Note that in a regular year the numbers 30 and 29 alternate; a complete year is created by adding a day to Heshvan, whereas a deficient year is created by removing a day from Kislev.

The alteration of 30 and 29 ensures that when the year starts with a new moon, so does each month.

What years are leap years?

A year is a leap year if the number year mod 19 is one of the following: 0, 3, 6, 8, 11, 14, or 17.

The value for year in this formula is the ‘Anno Mundi’ described in [see http://www.webexhibits.org/calendars/calendar-jewish.html].

What years are deficient, regular, and complete?

That is the wrong question to ask. The correct question to ask is: When does a Jewish year begin? Once you have answered that question (see [see http://www.webexhibits.org/calendars/calendar-jewish.html]), the length of the year is the number of days between 1 Tishri in one year and 1 Tishri in the following year.

When is New Year's day?

That depends. Jews have several different days to choose from. The most important are:

1 Tishri: Rosh HaShanah. This day is a celebration of the creation of the world and marks the start of a new calendar year. This will be the day we shall base our calculations on in the following sections.

1 Nisan: New Year for Kings. This is also the start of the religious year. Nisan is considered the first month, although it occurs 6 or 7 months after the start of the calendar year.

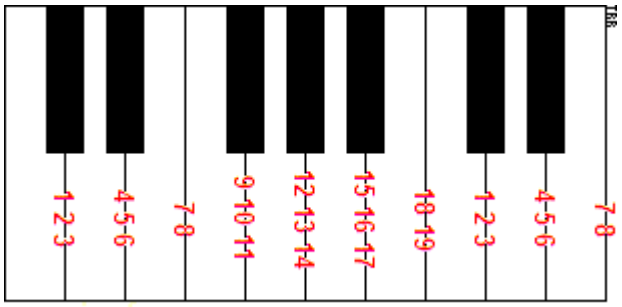
The Jewish calendar is based on three astronomical phenomena: the rotation of the Earth about its axis (a day); the revolution of the moon about the Earth (a month); and the revolution of the Earth about the sun (a year). These three phenomena are independent of each other, so there is no direct correlation between them. On average, the moon revolves around the Earth in about 29½ days. The Earth revolves around the sun in about 365¼ days, that is, about 12.4 lunar months.

The civil calendar used by most of the world has abandoned any correlation between the moon cycles and the month, arbitrarily setting the length of months to 28, 30 or 31 days.

The Jewish calendar, however, coordinates all three of these astronomical phenomena. Months are either 29 or 30 days, corresponding to the 29½-day lunar cycle. Years are either 12 or 13 months, corresponding to the 12.4 month solar cycle.

The lunar month on the Jewish calendar begins when the first sliver of moon becomes visible after the dark of the moon. In ancient times, the new months used to be determined by observation. When people observed the new moon, they would notify the Sanhedrin. When the Sanhedrin heard testimony from two independent, reliable eyewitnesses that the new moon occurred on a certain date, they would declare the rosh chodesh (first of the month) and send out messengers to tell people when the month began.



The problem with strictly lunar calendars is that there are approximately 12.4 lunar months in every solar year, so a 12-month lunar calendar is about 11 days shorter than a solar year and a 13-month lunar is about 19 longer than a solar year. The months drift around the seasons on such a calendar: on a 12-month lunar calendar, the month of Nissan, which is supposed to occur in the Spring, would occur 11 days earlier in the season each year, eventually occurring in the Winter, the Fall, the Summer, and then the Spring again. On a 13-month lunar calendar, the same thing would happen in the other direction, and faster.

To compensate for this drift, the Jewish calendar uses a 12-month lunar calendar with an extra month occasionally added. The month of Nissan occurs 11 days earlier each year for two or three years, and then jumps forward 30 days, balancing out the drift. In ancient times, this month was added by observation: the Sanhedrin observed the conditions of the weather, the crops and the livestock, and if these were not sufficiently advanced to be considered "spring," then the Sanhedrin inserted an additional month into the calendar to make sure that Pesach (Passover) would occur in the spring (it is, after all, referred to in the Torah as Chag he-Aviv, the Festival of Spring!).

A year with 13 months is referred to in Hebrew as Shanah Me'uberet (pronounced shah-NAH meh-oo-BEH-reht), literally: a pregnant year. In English, we commonly call it a leap year. The additional month is known as Adar I, Adar Rishon (first Adar) or Adar Alef (the Hebrew letter Alef being the numeral "1" in Hebrew). The extra month is inserted before the regular month of Adar (known in such years as Adar II, Adar Sheini or Adar Beit). Note that Adar II is the "real" Adar, the one in which Purim is celebrated, the one in which yahrzeits for Adar are observed, the one in which a 13-year-old born in Adar becomes a Bar Mitzvah. Adar I is the "extra" Adar.

In the fourth century, Hillel II established a fixed calendar based on mathematical and astronomical calculations. This calendar, still in use, standardized the length of months and the addition of months over the course of a 19 year cycle, so that the lunar calendar realigns with the solar years. Adar I is added in the 3rd, 6th, 8th, 11th, 14th, 17th and 19th years of the cycle. The current cycle began in Jewish year 5758 (the year that began October 2, 1997). If you are musically inclined, you may find it helpful to remember this pattern of leap years by reference to the major scale: for each whole step there are two regular years and a leap year; for each half-step there is one regular year and a leap year. This is easier to understand when you examine the keyboard illustration below and see how it relates to the leap years above.

In addition, Yom Kippur should not fall adjacent to Shabbat, because this would cause difficulties in coordinating the fast with Shabbat, and Hoshanah Rabbah should not fall on Saturday because it would interfere with the holiday's observances. A day is added to the month of Cheshvan or subtracted from the month of Kislev of the previous year to prevent these things from happening. This process is sometimes referred to as "fixing" Rosh Hashanah. If you are interested in the details of how these calculations are performed, see The Jewish Calendar: A Closer Look.

Ancient commentators propose that the world may be simultaneously young and old.

So the only data I use as far as Biblical commentary goes is ancient commentary. That means the text of the Bible itself (3300 years ago), the translation of the Torah into Aramaic by Onkelos (100 CE), the Talmud (redacted about the year 500 CE), and the three major Torah commentators. There are many, many commentators, but at the top of the mountain there are three, accepted by all: Rashi (11th century France), who brings the straight understanding of the text, Maimonides (12th century Egypt), who handles the philosophical concepts, and then Nachmanides (13th century Spain), the earliest of the Kabbalists.

Understanding the Postponement Rules

Determining the Beginning of the Month

The months of the Hebrew Calendar are set by the lunar cycle, which begins with a sliver-thin crescent that has an illumination percentage a few points above zero. It is formed at the point of conjunction when the moon appears to be enveloped in total darkness. At this point, however, a very narrow arc of light is exposed along one edge. This narrow arc of light is the new moon.

Too faint to be visible, the new moon is portrayed on calendars as a black circle. However, its existence as a formed crescent has been scientifically demonstrated. (1)

> (1) Although the new moon is typically depicted as a black circle its actual phase is a very thin crescent, because the moon does not pass directly in front of the sun (except during a solar eclipse). On July 8, 2013, French astrophotographer Thierry Legault successfully photographed the new moon, although the crescent itself was not visible to the unaided eye. (Wikipedia, s.v. "New Moon")

Because the new moon cannot be sighted until it has been waxing for one to three days, it must be determined by calculation. This is the reason for the mathematics of the Hebrew Calendar.

To calculate the time that the new moon will occur, the calendar uses a formula based on the average lunar cycle. The calculated date is called the molad (the Hebrew word molad, or moled, means "renewal"). The term "molad" clearly identifies the new moon with the renewal of the lunar cycle at the time of the conjunction.

Correctly identifying the new moon as the crescent that is formed at the beginning of the lunar cycle is essential for the observance of God's holy days at their appointed times. Counting from the first day of the lunar cycle ensures that the moon will be full on the fifteenth day of the month as ordained by God in Leviticus 23 and Psalm 81:1-3.

Since the full moon occurs midway through the lunar cycle, in an average cycle it will fall at 14.765 days—about five and a half hours before sunset beginning the 15th day. In a cycle that is shorter than average, it may fall from six to twelve hours before the 15th begins. In an average cycle the full moon occurs at 22 minutes past noon on the 14th, but in a shorter cycle it occurs on the morning of the 14th. In either case, it is at or near 100% illumination when it rises on the eve of the 15th.

The calculations of the Hebrew Calendar are designed to provide the best possible illumination for the beginning of the Feast of Unleavened Bread on Nisan 15 and the Feast of Tabernacles on Tishri 15. Relying on the visible crescent to set the beginning of the month will in most years delay the observance of these festivals until the 16th day of the lunar cycle, after the peak period of illumination has passed.

Although the Hebrew Calendar consistently provides the best illumination for Nisan 15 and Tishri 15, it is not possible to achieve 100% illumination in every year due to variations in the length of the lunar cycle. The average length of 29.53 days includes cycles that range from 6 hours shorter to 7 hours longer. In some years the peak period of illumination does not coincide perfectly with the 15th day. Despite these variations, the Hebrew Calendar has maintained an average of more than 99% illumination for thousands of years.

The Calculated Hebrew Calendar (CHC)

The Sacred Calendar of God is called the Calculated Hebrew Calendar (CHC). As a Luni/Solar calendar, the CHC bases its years on the sun and utilizes the phases of the moon to determine the beginning of months. Importantly, the CHC retains God's continuous, cyclical count of the seven-day week to which the months and years must conform. The CHC is in harmony with and includes the counting of the days of the week (which are reckoned each day from "sunset to sunset"). In other words, God's reckoning and calculating of the months and years is entirely separate from—but runs parallel to—the weekly cycle.

On the fourth day of creation, God set the positions of the sun and moon (and the stars), which form the basis of the calculations of the CHC in establishing days, months and years. "And God said, 'Let there be lights in the firmament of the heavens to divide between the day and the night [days are first], and let them be for signs, and for appointed seasons [the annual feasts], and for days [the annual holy days] and years [including the seventh-year land Sabbath and Jubilees every fifty years]; and let them be for lights in the firmament of the heavens to give light upon the earth.' And it was so. And God had made two great lights, the greater light to rule the day and the lesser light to rule the night; and God had made the stars also. And God set them [in their exact positions] in the firmament of the heavens to give light upon the earth, and to rule over the day and over the night, and to divide between the light and the darkness. And God saw that it was good. And the evening and the morning were the fourth day" (Gen. 1:14-19).

From Genesis chapters seven and eight, we are able to determine that at the time of the Flood each month of the Hebrew Calendar contained the same number of days as they do to this day. The Flood began "in the second month, on the seventeen day of the month…. And the waters prevailed upon the earth a hundred and fifty days … and at the end of the hundred and fifty days the waters had gone down. And in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, the ark rested upon the mountains of Ararat" (Gen. 7:11, 24; 8:3-4). From these passages we can conclude that from the very moment of creation God's Sacred Calendar was the same as it is today.

Every calendar in the history of man has attempted to measure time by either the solar or the lunar cycle. The calendar we use today is a solar calendar. Because it is a solar calendar, its months are synchronized with the equinoxes and solstices of the solar year.

The 365 days in the solar year are divided into four months with 30 days (30 x 4 = 120), seven months with 31 days (31 x 7 = 217), and one month with 28 days (120 + 217 + 28 = 365 days). Although the calendar year is 365 days, the actual solar year is 365.2425 days. The fraction of a day (approximately ¼ day) is made up by adding one day to February every 4 years.

Because we live in a culture that uses this calendar, it governs our days and months of worship. It governs our work schedules, vacations, graduations, weddings and funerals. It governs our financial system. All businesses, large and small, depend on the calendar to set dates of contracts, interest schedules, tax schedules and billing periods.

The Hebrew Calendar served the same purposes for banking and commerce in ancient times. However, its most important function was, and still is, to set the dates of the annual holy days that God established at the creation of the world.

Genesis 1:14 tells us that God arranged the sun, moon and stars in the heavens "for signs, and for seasons, and for days and years." The word "seasons" is translated from the Hebrew moed, which means "appointed times." Observing God's appointed times helps us to understand His plan of salvation for mankind.

These appointed times are listed in Leviticus 23, where the Hebrew moed is translated "feasts." The first feast, or appointed time, is the weekly Sabbath (v. 3). The annual feasts, which take place during the three harvest seasons in the year, are listed next.

The Passover, the first of the annual feasts of God, is observed at the beginning of the 14th day of the first month (v. 5). The 14th day itself is not a Sabbath but a day of preparation for the Feast of

Unleavened Bread, which begins on the following day, the 15th, and lasts for seven days (v. 6). The first day and the seventh day are Sabbaths of rest (vs. 7-8)…

...All these feasts, or "appointed times," were observed by the servants of God in the Old Testament down to the time of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Before Jacob's death, he and his eleven sons went down to Egypt, where his son Joseph had risen to rulership. After several generations of living among Egyptian sun worshippers who observed pagan festivals, the descendants of Jacob lost all knowledge of God's feast days.

When God sent Moses to lead His people out of Egypt, He began to restore the knowledge of His appointed times. Exodus 12 records His instructions for the feasts of the first month…

…From the destruction of Jerusalem and the First Temple, the Jews were exiled into many of the countries in the Middle East, with the majority of them living in Babylon. After the 70-year exile, some of the Jews returned to Judea to rebuild the city and the temple under the leadership of Zerubbabel, the governor, and Joshua, the high priest. Since they kept the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread after the completion of the Second Temple, it shows that the priests determined these festival dates using the calculations God had given to them before the exile.

The Calendar from Ezra to Hillel II

Some years later, before the city of Jerusalem was completely rebuilt, these calculations were preserved by Ezra the priest. In order to return the Jewish people to the true worship of God, Ezra established the Great Assembly of 120 priests. It was Ezra, with the help of these priests, who was responsible for the canonization of the Old Testament into the form we have today. At the same time, Ezra also formed what later became known as the "Calendar Court," which was responsible for properly calculating and proclaiming the festivals and holy days in their seasons as God had commanded in Leviticus 23. From that time until the destruction of the temple in 70 AD, the priests of the Calendar Court faithfully calculated the Sacred Calendar and proclaimed the "feasts of the Lord in their seasons."

During the time of Christ, the High Priest and president of the Sanhedrin was called Nasi, and was in charge of the calculations for the CHC. The Nasi had a lineage going back to Ezra, who traces his line back to Hilkiah, the High Priest who was the father of Jeremiah the prophet. They had all inherited a full knowledge of the CHC, with all of its God-given rules for the proper calculation of the high days.

The Nasi's, still of priestly lineage, continued to calculate and set the annual holy days beyond Jerusalem from just after the time of Christ up to Hillel II in the 300s AD. Thus, we have a central calendar authority invested in a single family of the Aaronic line, going from the middle 300s AD back to Ezra, and then back to Hilkiah.

Anyone who says Hillel II invented the CHC with its various rules of calculation is going directly against the records of history, both in the Bible and those histories that have been accurately maintained by the priests and Levites within the Jewish community. Hillel II, as the last of the great sages, used his office of Nasi to absolutely guarantee that the knowledge of the CHC and its methods of calculation would not be lost. He made sure this priestly knowledge—withheld from the general populace until his day — was imparted worldwide to all the Jews, and hence to the world as well. This knowledge has been preserved within the Jewish community and is known as the Calculated Hebrew Calendar. Why? He was worried that continued Roman persecution might do away with the observance of the Holy Days at the proper times as commanded by God.

The Jewish people and the early New Testament Christians were scattered far and wide throughout many nations—from the Middle East to the Atlantic and the British Islands in the west; to Europe, Scythia and Parthia in the north; from Babylon and Persia to India in the east; and from Egypt and North Africa to Ethiopia in the south.

However, the calculations God gave to the priests and Levites to accurately reckon the festivals made it possible for the holy days to be observed at the same time worldwide. Furthermore, with the CHC, the high days could be precisely determined years in advance. The discussion of the ancient rabbis in the tractate Rosh Hashanah offers historical evidence that the Sacred Calendar at the time of Christ and the apostle Paul was calculated, with all the necessary rules to keep festival observance accurate throughout time. In fact, the calculations of the CHC can be used to determine festival dates for any year into the future, as well as to accurately calculate such dates back in time to the time of Noah and beyond.

Today, even with the advent of "modern astronomy" and its super-telescopes coupled to high-speed supercomputers, no one has been able to improve on the CHC. Indeed, the CHC that God has given to the Aaronic priesthood (which has been preserved for us today) is more accurate in calculating the festivals and holy days of God than any modern method. And it should be, because God ordained it.

…Regardless of their unfaithfulness, God has preserved the Hebrew Calendar through His people. Although they have changed their observance of the Passover and the Feast of Pentecost, they have retained all the calculations of the Hebrew Calendar. Paul's letter to the Romans confirms this truth:

What advantage then hath the Jew? ... Much every way, chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God. For what if some did not believe? Shall their unbelief make the faith [faithfulness] of God without effect? (Rom. 3:1-3.)

The Hebrew Calendar is the same today as it was in the days of Noah, Abraham, Moses and all the prophets of the Old Testament. It is the calendar that Jesus and His apostles followed. It stands as a testimony to the faithfulness of God in our time, and it will remain in effect during the coming reign of Christ (Isa. 66:23, Zech. 14:6) (by Carl D. Franklin, July 31, 2014).

God's Calendar vs. Roman-Jewish Calendar

GOD'S CALENDAR VS ROMAN-JEWISH CALENDAR

Does it really matter when we celebrate God's holy days? Do the rabbis have the authority to change the calendar and manipulate when the days of the month fall, or has God already done this and shown us in the Bible how and when we are to worship Him? What are the oracles of God? The question we all have to ask ourselves before reading this booklet is, do we really want to know the truth? If the answer is no, don't read any further! Just put this down and go back to what you were doing, because if you can't say YES, if you can't say you want to know the truth and that you'll obey God and God alone no matter what the cost, then it really doesn't matter. Don't waste your time, go back to your own little world and let the god of this age have his way with you.

These may seem like harsh words, but the truth is that unless we are willing to obey God and remain faithful to Him we are wasting our time. I don't know any other way to say it. If you are not willing to accept truth when you find it, don't read this! If you are not willing to obey God, you may as well throw your Bible in the garbage and go to work next Sabbath. If you refuse to obey God, it won't matter what you do, your fate will be the same.

There are many different tools Satan uses to divide the Church; doctrine, greed, lust for power and worship of a man just to name a few. Most people look at this and say it is men "playing Church" or

"games". Well it isn't, it's Lucifer attacking us with his divide and conquer tactics. The men involved are only his puppets, not the instigators.

One of the most effective attacks Satan has launched upon the world is to deceive us on the holy days. He has accomplished this in different ways. Some of the most dedicated Christians are deceived into thinking the 4th commandment doesn't have to be kept so they go to Church on Sunday. Others think that Sunday is the Sabbath. Satan has counterfeited God's holy days with his own; Easter, Halloween, Christmas, etc. Perhaps the most tragic deception of all is that most of the people who do keep the Sabbath and observe God's annual holy days, keep the holy days at the wrong time!

I make that statement with mixed emotions because it is an effective wedge Satan has used to drive between the Sabbath-keeping Churches. I know this because, up until the spring of 1989, I followed the so-called "Jewish" calendar with my "church friends". I now understand I was wrong and was breaking God's law by not observing the annual holy days at the correct time. I was following a corrupted calendar because I listened to men and not God.

These are not just my statements or conclusions, there is irrefutable proof that the "Jewish" calendar in use today is NOT the calendar God gave Moses. It is NOT the calendar of the Bible that all the patriarchs, prophets, Jesus, the disciples and the early Church observed. The Encyclopedia Judaica says the current calendar was forced upon the Jew's in the third century by the Roman Government right about the time that they forced Sunday on the Christians. That's right, I said the Romans instituted it not the Jew's. Hillel II went along with it to save his own neck, it wasn't his idea, but more about this later.

Let's examine the true calendar given to us in the Bible free from man's rules and corruption. This is the calendar that Jesus kept as our example, the calendar that the disciples taught to the converts. Let's look at its origin, how it works and its purpose. God appointed certain times of the year as holy. He made an appointment for us to observe these holy convocations. He made a covenant with man and said these set times were a sign to the world that whoever belonged to Him would observe these days (Exo 13:3-9, 31:12-17). If we are going to observe them we must do it on the right day or we're covenant breakers, not keepers.

PURPOSE OF THE CALENDAR

The first thing we have to understand is the purpose of the calendar that God gave us and how it works. The best source for that is the Bible. Gen 1:14, "Then God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heavens to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs and seasons, and for days and years." Did everyone catch that? God made the lights in the heavens (the sun and the moon) for days and years. There is another verse we need to read. Psa 104:19, "He appointed the moon for seasons; the sun knows it's going down."

God made the sun and the moon to determine when the seasons are. Are you beginning to understand? He intended us to have a calendar that was governed by the sun and the moon so we could tell the day, the season and the year. The reason we need to know this is so that we can determine when to celebrate God's commanded holy days. A quick look at Leviticus the 23rd chapter shows us that God commands us to worship Him on certain days of specific months. In order to do this He has given us a visible sign (the sun and the moon) so we know when these times occur.

Why do we have to know these things? Don't the rabbis take care of this because it's part of their duty? Let's look at one of the most effective smoke screens ever devised by Satan on this subject. It kept me from learning the truth for over a year from the first time I heard the argument.

The first time I was told we were supposed to determine the months by the sighting of a new moon I asked a few questions and was informed that the Jew's control this because they were given the "Oracles of God" and was cited Romans 3:2. I looked it up and sure enough there it was. I didn't know what the oracles were but it sounded pretty important with God's name beside it.

Unfortunately, most of the people who cite this verse don't know what it means either. It's a deceptive tactic used by a minority of men who want to manipulate us into doing what they say, not God. I believe they know better. Let's examine this verse and see what it says and more importantly what it means. Rom 3:1-2, "What advantage then has the Jew, or what is the profit of circumcision? Much in every way! Chiefly because to them were committed the oracles of God." What does the word oracles mean? It is Strong's number 3051 (log'-ee-on) an utterance (of God). Does everyone understand that? It is an utterance of God. What does this mean? The NIV version translates it correctly. Rom 3:2, "Much in every way! First of all, they have been entrusted with the very words of God."

What are the oracles of God? It's so simple! It is the preservation of the scriptures, God's words or utterances. This has absolutely NOTHING to do with the calendar! Now, do you see why I call it a smoke screen? The Jew's were to preserve God's words for the world and they did that. They did not have the authority to change or alter them, they could only preserve them.

ROME FORCES CALENDAR CHANGE

Prior to 1990, I thought that it was the rabbi's idea to change the calendar in 358 A.D. I said that no man could change God's laws; not the Pope nor even a Jewish rabbi named Hillel II. God gave us a visible calendar to observe and He told us how and when to observe it in the Bible. It's not confusing or complicated like some people want to believe. It's a little different, but so is everything else associated with God, from keeping the Sabbath and the holy days, to tithing. God tells us to "come out of Babylon" to be different.

Little did I realize that the calendar I was attacking was pagan to the core and directly from Babylon. Let's look and see how the Romans forced a corrupt calendar on the Jews. After the temple was destroyed in 70 A.D., the high priest was without a sanctuary. He was like a minister without a Church. The position he held could no longer be carried out without the temple. Instead of a high priest as their spiritual leader, the Jew's had a NASI, pronounced (naw-see). He was the head rabbi or chief leader, like the Pope is the leader of the Catholic Church.

In 351-352 A.D. the Jew's revolted against the Roman emperor Gallus & his commander Ursicinus and lost. After this, the Romans limited the power of the NASI and forced him to give up the authority to proclaim the new moon and the fixing of the festivals. Hillel II agreed with this to save his neck and sold out God's law. A calculated calendar was instituted and published with its rules in 358 A.D. (Encyclopedia Judaica, Hillel II).

HOW THAT CALENDAR WORKS

According to Rosh Hashanah 1:3-8, during the time when Jesus was on earth, the high priest would hold court in the Temple to determine when the new moon was. It was based on the testimony of three credible witnesses who had seen the crescent of the new moon. Once a new moon had been declared fires would be lit on the Mount of Olives to notify those who were not in Jerusalem. According to the Mishna, six witnesses were dispatched with a hand-delivered message that the new moon was sighted over Jerusalem.

This was done because God designed a calendar for Israel to keep and it was their duty to follow and observe it properly. The high priest had no authority to hear testimony that the crescent of the new moon was sighted and then declare the month would begin one or two days later! That would have been a sin. That is in essence what happens today with the Hebrew calendar and that is why once we realize this, it can NEVER be followed!

One of Hillel's rules is that no two Sabbath's fall consecutively. Therefore the calendar is manipulated so that Rosh Hashanah (Trumpets) never falls on a Sunday, Wednesday or a Friday. This keeps the Day of Atonement from falling on a Friday or a Sunday, which would make two Sabbath's in a row. There is no biblical authority for this. In fact, the Mishna contains rules for an altered service when this happens. This proves that the calendar Jesus observed was not altered like it is today!

In order to keep two consecutive Sabbaths from occurring, Hillel inserted and deleted days which God has not commanded. The normal year which God commands us to follow has 354 days with a leap-year-month added seven times every nineteen years. The present Hebrew calendar has 353, 354, 355, 383, 384 and 385 days! SIX DIFFERENT TYPES OF YEARS! Hillel took out or added days to different months in the year to change which day of the week all of the feasts fall on.

In 1979, the 1st day of Nisan on the Hebrew calendar was March 29, one day before the new moon over Jerusalem. On March 25, 1982, the 1st of Nisan was two days before the new moon. In 1984 and 1985, the 1st of Nisan fell on the same day as the new moon both years. The other months are no better. Tishri 1 (Trumpets) fell on the new moon in 1984, but in 1986 it was two days before the new moon. This is proof that the Hebrew calendar is not accurate and does not coincide with God's commands of beginning the month with a new moon over Jerusalem.

Do you see the problem with Hillel's calendar? It doesn't always begin a month with a new moon. God intended the month to begin with the sighting of the new moon crescent over Jerusalem. Why Jerusalem you might ask? Because that's the place He chose as His headquarters. The temples were built there and when Jesus returns His kingdom will be there. It is the city of our appointed feasts (Isa 33:20). That is why the calendar is determined from the new moon crescent over Jerusalem! We can't set it from Texas, Pennsylvania, or anywhere else.

Some people want to pretend that calculating the new moon calendar is a complex and difficult thing. This couldn't be further from the truth. God designed a system that a child could understand. If Israel ever lost track of time, all they had to do was look up in the sky and when they saw a small crescent of the moon that just appeared, they knew it was the first day of the month. If you wanted to know what month it was, look at the fields. Was the barley green and ready for harvest? The month was Nisan. Were the fall crops ready for harvest? It was Tishri, the seventh month.

It's not impossible to have a calculated calendar that accurately predicts when the new moon will be over Jerusalem. The lunar cycle is 29 days, 12 hours, 44 minutes, and 2.8 seconds. New moon calendars exist today and are available to anyone who requests them. Computer programs also exist that can determine when the new moon crescent will be visible over Jerusalem. These programs are accurate to within two minutes over a period of 4,000 years forward or backwards in time.

So why don't the rabbis who realize this correct this situation? They are no different than any other men. Just like the SUNday keepers make arguments for a SUNday worship, or Christmas observers make feeble arguments for a pagan celebration, the rabbis say it really doesn't matter and that it is too much of an inconvenience to have two Sabbaths in a row. SINCE WHEN IS THE SABBATH A BURDEN? The truth is that this is now their tradition and the Jewish people follow this tradition even though it is not Scriptural.

What do you think God says about that? He tells us to use the sun and the moon to calculate dates and to let Him worry when they fall in the week. We can't tell Him we don't want the year to start on a Sunday, a Wednesday or a Friday for convenience sake because its easier to worship Him on days we choose rather than when He chooses!

Most of the Church of God theorizes that Christ will return on the Feast of Trumpets, a commanded assembly, a holy convocation. If this is accurate don't you want to be in Church when He returns? Or would you want to be at work because you celebrated your holiday two days earlier with the rabbis because it was more convenient? You will answer for that when you stand before God on the judgment day! Doing this in ignorance is one thing, but now you know better. You can no longer reject God's calendar and worship Him on the wrong day.

Another hard saying you might ask? Num 9:13, "But the man who is clean and is not on a journey, and ceases to keep the Passover, that same person shall be cut off from among his people, because he did not bring the offering of the LORD at its appointed time; that man shall bear his sin." Please don't let this happen to you.

MEN BLOWING MORE SMOKE

If you ask most Church of God organizations who sets the holy days they will give you a couple of false answers. Let me clearly state at the onset that God almighty and Him alone determines the calendar. These men, however, will tell you that the Church has this authority, (and of course since they run the Church this means them and not God). THIS IS A LIE! It is the same lie that the Catholics use to argue that the Pope's authority is equal to Christ's when they substituted SUNday for God's Sabbath. The Church can only TEACH others about God's holy days, they have absolutely no authority to sanctify one day or the other.

The other answer they will most likely give you is the "oracles of God" lie, but as I previously pointed out that only means the preservation of the Scriptures. The bottom line is that they don't really have a reason for not obeying God other than ignorance, stubbornness or tradition.

I stated earlier that I didn't think the leaders of the organizations believe their own statements on the calendar. Let me now explain why I say this. First, they have all been provided a copy of this booklet and research documents. Second, if they really believed that the rabbis set the holy days they would follow them. The truth is that they don't observe all the holy day's at the same time as the Jew's.

For those of you who were in the Worldwide Church of God, do you remember when you used to observe Pentecost on Monday? What happened to the oracles of God then? Later, when Herbert Armstrong realized his mistake, the WCG reverted back to Sunday. Almost every other Church of God correctly observes Pentecost today on a Sunday. Do you realize that this is NOT when the Jew's observe it!

That's right. They always observe it on Sivan 6 no matter what day of the week it falls on! As far as they're concerned it could be a Wednesday!!! Listen carefully because these Church leaders are talking out of both sides of their mouths! They can't have their cake and eat it too! If the rabbis set the holy days, they set them ALL, not just a few of them! The next time they tell you the Jew's determine the calendar, ask them why they refuse to follow it and observe Pentecost with them?

Do you realize that when Jesus returns we will observe the New Moons with Him? Isaiah 66:23, "And it shall come to pass that from one New Moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, all flesh shall come to worship before Me, says the LORD." Do you think that we will worship Jesus two days before the new moon or will it be on the day of the new moon? After all, we will be in Jerusalem and we will see the crescent.

The Jew's today celebrate the new moon every month at the Synagogue but not always on the correct date because sometimes Hillel's calendar is off by more than two days from the crescent over Jerusalem.

I asked a rabbi from a Reform Synagogue about this in 1989 and his answer to me was very interesting. I was in his office with my wife and the conversation went like this: "Rabbi, because in the Hebrew calendar days are inserted or deleted so no two Sabbaths fall consecutively, Rosh Hashanah (Trumpets) might not fall on the day of a crescent. Does a man, even a well intentioned Jewish rabbi have the authority to change the day a Sabbath falls on?"

Answer: "I don't know, I think so. But that's why we celebrate them for two days in a row, just in case". That's right. The Jewish people celebrate the annual holy days and the new moon for two days in a row. Look at any Jewish calendar that is sold in a Synagogue and you will see that the annual holy days, Trumpets, New Moons, etc., are observed for two days. In all fairness, this is not the real reason it is done. This is a practice that dates back to the dispersion. The bad part is that it allows people to rationalize the change in their minds.

THREE EXCUSES NOT TO OBEY

There are basically three reasons Church leaders give for following the present day adulterated Jewish calendar:

(1) Romans 3:2, the oracles of God. We have already proven this does not include the calendar.

(2) Matthew 23:2-3, The scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses' seat.

Let's look at the 2nd reason and what seat Moses sat in. Mat 23:1-3: "Then Jesus spoke to the multitudes and to His disciples, saying: `The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat. Therefore whatever they tell you to observe, that observe and do"'.

Does this mean we should obey and follow whatever the rabbi's do today? In John 9:13-16, Jesus was accused of violating the Sabbath for healing a blind man. He obviously rejected the Pharisees interpretation on how to observe the 4th commandment. In Matthew 15:1-3, the scribes and Pharisees said the disciples broke their tradition of washing their hands before they ate. Jesus told them they broke the commandment of God for the sake of their traditions. In verse 6, Jesus said the scribes and Pharisees violated the commandment of God with their traditions. They do this today with changing the calendar.

So what did Jesus mean in Mat 23:3 when He said, "Therefore whatever they tell you to observe, that observe and do..." Is this a contradiction? Jesus taught His disciples to disobey the traditions of the elders when it contradicted the Bible. He said some of their traditions conflicted with the law of God. The scribes and Pharisees do not have the authority to change God's laws.

What is Moses' seat? Moses had a different function than Aaron in ancient Israel. The Levitical priesthood were descendants of Aaron, not Moses. Moses was in charge of the civil government (Ex 18; Num 11:11-17; 12:8; Deu 1:9-18). Moses was not a priest, his brother Aaron was. (John 1:17; Ex 4:14-17; Heb 7:11). Moses' seat means the civil governmental authority, the scribes and Pharisees were in charge of the civil government. Jesus referred to the authority of civil government in Mat 23:1-3, not the law of God. Most Pharisees were not priests, they were not the descendants of Aaron.

Jesus compared everything they said with the Bible, and when it disagreed with the Bible, He rejected it. When they added extra rules to Sabbath keeping, He rejected them too. This is what we have to do with their rules and traditions on changing God's calendar. Some people think Jesus taught that we should follow the Pharisees; well the Pharisees rejected Jesus as the messiah, does that mean we should too? I think everyone understands that argument is without merit. Paul said that everything he learned as a Pharisee he counted as dung (Phil 3:8).

Let's look at the 3rd reason, in Matthew 18:18 Jesus said what the Church bound on earth would be bound in heaven. Does this mean that Jesus gave the Church leaders the authority to rewrite God's law? NO! Only a complete novice would believe that. So what was Jesus talking about then? He was giving the Church authority to make decisions settling grievances and problems with the membership. Read the verses before this. Matthew 18:15-17 talks about going to a brother with a grievance. Verse 18 is talking about disfellowshipping, NOT the binding of an adulterated calendar that changes God's holy convocations!

Jesus gave the Church authority to settle grievances in accordance with 1 Corinthians 6. He gave the Church authority to decide things such as meeting in the morning or the afternoon, to rent a building or buy one, etc. Jesus never intended for us to use His statements to violate the law by observing a corrupted calendar.

The Church does not bind the calendar, nor do the rabbis. God determines when we will worship Him. He did this when He created the sun and the moon to govern the seasons. For those who won't accept this, do you refuse to drive your car on Sabbath like the orthodox Jew's in Jerusalem? Do you observe Pentecost on Sivan 6? Do you worship God in a Synagogue and not in a Church? Do you observe the holy days in the Synagogue? Do you SEND YOUR TITHES TO A SYNAGOGUE!!! (Lets see how long they continue this tune.) If not then you don't believe your own teachings. If the Pharisees are in charge of the calendar, they are in charge of everything else, too! You can't pick and choose selected teachings, if you are going to follow the Pharisees then follow them on everything. Join a Synagogue, that is where they are today!

The leaders who knowingly observe an erroneous system for determining God's holy days are guilty of the same sin that Jeroboam committed in 1 Kings 12:32. He ordained a counterfeit feast on the fifteenth day of the eighth month at Bethel. Because of this sin, Israel was destroyed and taken into captivity.

THE JEWS WILL OBSERVE GOD'S CALENDAR AGAIN

In the Fall of 1994, I asked an important Orthodox rabbi from Jerusalem who is involved in the rebuilding of the temple, if the Jews would ever revert back to the new moon calendar that God gave Moses. His answer, "YES, when the temple is rebuilt, the Sanhedrin will be reestablished and they will once again hold court each month and take testimony from witnesses who have seen the new moon and declare the beginning of the month."

These rabbis are not stupid men. They realize that when God says the high priest is to enter the holy of holies on the tenth day of the seventh month; he better enter on the real tenth day. They might not want to change today because of tradition, but they have already decided to abandon Hillel's calendar when the temple is rebuilt.

What about you? Are you going to follow men and their tradition, or are you going to follow Jesus, His disciples, the prophets and Moses, and obey God? You can't have it both ways; YOU MUST CHOOSE WHOM YOU WILL OBEY!

Jewish Month

The duration of a Hebrew month (chodesh) is measured by the amount of time it takes for the moon to go through a lunar cycle, about 29.5 days:

Rosh Chodesh
The appearance of the new moon is called Rosh Chodesh ("head of the month"). Twelve chodeshim make a Shanah, or year. The new moon is observed in synagogues with additional prayers.

Lunar Leap Years
Since the solar year is 365 days long but a moon year is only 354 days (29.5 x 12), an extra month is added to the Hebrew calendar every two or three years. The formula is a bit esoteric, but every 19 years there are seven leap years (the third, sixth, eighth, eleventh, fourteenth, seventeenth and nineteenth years). In a leap year a 13th month is added called Adar Sheni (Adar II).

In the Tanakh, the first month of the calendar is Nisan (when Passover occurs - see Exod. 12:12); however, Rosh Hashanah ("head of the year") is in Tishri, the seventh month, and that is when the year number is increased.

Jewish Calendar

It is hard to imagine a people with lives more closely bound to and regulated by the calendar than the people of ancient Israel. The Jewish calendar is dated from what is supposed to have been the Creation: 3,760 years and three months before the Christian era. Accordingly, to find the current year in the Jewish calendar, one must add 3,759 to the date in the Gregorian calendar. The system, however, will not work to the exact month, since the Jewish year (running on the civil calendar) begins in autumn rather than in midwinter.

Months

Most of the 12 months of the postexilic calendar have names adapted from the Babylonians. The months do not correspond to but overlap the months of the Roman calendar.

The names of over half the months are mentioned in the OT: Kislev (Nehemiah 1:1; Zechariah 7:1; RSV “Chislev”), Tebeth (Esther 2:16), Shebat (Zechariah 1:7), Adar (Ester 3:7; 8:12), Nisan (Nehemiah 2:1; Ester 3:7), Sivan (Ester 8:9), and Elul (Nehemiah 6:15).

Since the Jewish month invariably began with the new moon, at intervals of approximately 29 days, the Jewish year ran 354 days. No exact information is available to explain how the Jews originally adjusted their inaccurate lunar calendar to synchronize with the actual solar year. Late in Israel's history an extra month was inserted between Adar and Nisan. That month, sometimes called Veader (“second Adar”), was added seven times within a 19-year cycle (at which time Adar received an extra half day).

The names for the Jewish months as now known come from the period following the return from Babylonia to Palestine. Before the Babylonian exile at least four other names were in use: Abib (Exodus 13:4), Ziv (1Kings 6:1,37), Ethanim (1Kings 8:2), and Bul (1Kings 6:38). After the Captivity, they were renamed Nisan, Iyyar, Tishri, and Heshvan (originally Marcheshvan), respectively. The preexilic names carried agricultural connotations. For example, Abib signified the month in which the heads of the grain became ripe; Ziv was the month for desert flowers to bloom. An agricultural orientation is apparent in what is evidently the oldest Hebrew calendar, found at Gezer (southeast of Tel Aviv) in 1908 and dating from the 10th century BC. Probably the work of a Jewish schoolboy, the calendar breaks down the year by agricultural activities such as sowing, reaping, pruning, and storage.

Primarily, however, the months were religiously significant to the Jews and enabled them to commemorate the important events of their history. Each month's beginning was considered holy. To ancient Israel, the moon became a spiritual symbol of the nation itself; the sun eventually became symbolic of the Messiah (Malachi 4:2). Since the moon produces no light of its own, the symbolism is especially appropriate: Israel was supposed to reflect the Messiah's light to the world.

The Jewish calendar remained unchanged during the period between the OT and NT (approximately 400 years) despite an attempt by Hellenistic rulers to introduce a modified lunar month system, presumably of Macedonian origin. According to that calendar, five days were added to the final month of the year, with each of the 12 months containing 30 days. Even then, it only approximated the solar year.

Reckoning of Dates

We know of no era in which the ancient Hebrews recorded dates by citing a month and day. Rather, dates were computed by reference to some significant event such as the accession year of the reigning king. In NT times the Jews continued the OT method of dating events by synchronizing them with events either in their religious calendar or within the secular sphere of the Roman world. Writers of the NT followed the same principle (Luke 1:5; John 12:1; Acts 18:12). Only as the calendar reforms of Julius Caesar became embedded in the culture did people change from that long-standing method to a more standardized system.

Day and hours (Rabbinic Jewish Calendar)

The Jewish day is of no fixed length. The Jewish day is modeled on the reference to "...there was evening and there was morning..." in the Creation account in the first chapter of Genesis. Based on the classic Rabbinic interpretation of this text, a day in the Rabbinic Hebrew calendar runs from sunset (start of "the evening") to the next sunset. The time between sunset and the time when three stars are visible (known as 'tzait ha'kochavim') is known as 'bein hashmashot' and for some uses it is debated as what day it is. One complicating factor is that there is no clear cut sunrise or sunset time at the extreme latitudes during certain seasons. At higher latitudes in summer, when the sun does not sink below the horizon, a day is counted from midday to midday, and in the winter, when the sun does not rise above the horizon, from midnight to midnight.

There is no clock in the Jewish scheme, so that a civil clock is used. Though the civil clock, including the one in use in Israel, incorporates local adoptions of various conventions such as time zones, standard times and daylight saving, these have no place in the Jewish scheme. The civil clock is used only as a reference point – in expressions such as: "Shabbat starts at ...". The steady progression of sunset around the world and seasonal changes results in gradual civil time changes from one day to the next based on observable astronomical phenomena (the sunset) and not on man-made laws and conventions.

In Judaism, an hour is defined as 1/12 of the time from sunrise to sunset, so during the winter, an hour can be much less than 60 minutes, and during the summer, it can be much more than 60 minutes. A Judaic hour is known as a 'sha'ah z'manit' which means a timely hour.

Instead of the International Date Line convention, there are varying opinions as to where the day changes. One opinion uses the antimeridian of Jerusalem. (Jerusalem is 35°13’ east of the prime meridian, so the antimeridian is at 144°47' W, passing through eastern Alaska.) Other opinions exist as well.

Every hour is divided into 1080 halakim (singular: helek) or parts. A part is 3⅓ seconds or 1/18 minute. The ultimate ancestor of the helek was a small Babylonian time period called a barleycorn, itself equal to 1/72 of a Babylonian time degree (1° of celestial rotation).[6] Actually, the barleycorn or she was the name applied to the smallest units of all Babylonian measurements, whether of length, area, volume, weight, angle, or time.

The weekdays start with Sunday (day 1, or Yom Rishon) and proceed to Saturday (day 7), Shabbat. Since some calculations use division, a remainder of 0 signifies Saturday.

While calculations of days, months and years are based on fixed hours equal to 1/24 of a day, the beginning of each halachic day is based on the local time of sunset. The end of the Shabbat and other Jewish holidays is based on nightfall (Tzeth haKochabim) which occurs some amount of time, typically 42 to 72 minutes, after sunset. According to Maimonides, nightfall occurs when three medium-sized stars become visible after sunset. By the 17th century this had become three second-magnitude stars. The modern definition is when the center of the sun is 7° below the geometric (airless) horizon, somewhat later than civil twilight at 6°. The beginning of the daytime portion of each day is determined both by dawn and sunrise. Most halachic times are based on some combination of these four times and vary from day to day throughout the year and also vary significantly depending on location. The daytime hours are often divided into Sha`oth Zemaniyoth or "Halachic hours" by taking the time between sunrise and sunset or between dawn and nightfall and dividing it into 12 equal hours. The nighttime hours are similarly divided into 12 equal portions, albeit a different amount of time than the "hours" of the daytime. The earliest and latest times for Jewish services, the latest time to eat Chametz on the day before Passover and many other rules are based on Sha`oth Zemaniyoth. For convenience, the modern day using Sha`oth Zemaniyoth is often discussed as if sunset were at 6:00pm, sunrise at 6:00am and each hour were equal to a fixed hour. For example, halachic noon may be after 1:00pm in some areas during daylight saving time. Within the Mishnah, however, the numbering of the hours starts with the "first" hour after the start of the day.

The Jewish Calendar
http://www.jewfaq.org/calendar.htm

Note that the number of days between Nissan and Tishri is always the same. Because of this, the time from the first major festival (Passover in Nissan) to the last major festival (Sukkot in Tishri) is always the same.

Moses Told by God to Change Calendar - Just before the 1st Passover (and Before the Exodus): Yahweh told Moses in Genesis 12:2, "This month (Abib) shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you." Abib is the Hebrew name for this month, and it means "green ears" of grain. It is the month in which green ears of grain appear. But which grain? Turn to Exodus 9, where we read of one of the plagues Yahweh visited upon Pharaoh.

"And Moses stretched forth his rod toward heaven: and Yahweh sent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground; and Yahweh rained hail upon the land of Egypt. ... And the hail smote throughout all the land of Egypt all that was in the field, both man and beast; and the hail smote every herb of the field, and brake every tree of the field...And the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was bolled. But the wheat and the rie were not smitten: for they were not grown up" (vv. 23, 25, 31-32).

The grain that Abib refers to is barley, the one crop already "in the ear," and the month in which the first Passover took place is Abib, the green ears of barley month. The month of Abib and the state of barley are tied closely together. If barley is not in the proper stage at that month, that month cannot be Abib.

Turn to Leviticus 23. Here Yahweh explains the concept of firstfruits to the Israelites, and tells us what shape barley must be in during the month of Abib: "And you shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the selfsame day that ye have brought an offering unto your Elohim: it shall be a statute forever throughout your generations in all your dwellings" (Lev. 23:14). The Israelites were not permitted to harvest their crops of barley until the firstfruit sheaf was waved before Yahweh by the priest.

Barley is planted in November and takes about four months to mature. It must be in the green ear stage during the first month, and at least some of it ready for harvest by the time of the wave sheaf offering that occurs during the Feast of Unleavened Bread. We know it occurs during the Feast of Unleavened Bread because these verses explain how to count forward from the wave sheaf to the Feast of Weeks. Yahweh keeps the seasons aligned with the months by having us observe the maturing barley.

An interesting find in Israel called the "Gezer" calendar shows that the Israelites were an agrarian society that based its months from agriculture.

Some interesting facts about the Hebrew calendar:

- The years of the Jewish calendar are calculated from creation till now. By Jewish reckoning, Adam was created about 5700 years ago. The Chinese calendar has a similar approximation.

- The Hebrew day begins at sunset of the previous day and concludes on sunset of the day in question.

- The Gregorian New Year is January 1st, whereas the Jewish calendar follows two patterns:

    - The religious calendar begins in the month of Abib (also called Nisan) which corresponds to March/April. This calendar was initiated in 1446 BC, the year of the Exodus (Exod 12:1-2).

    - The civil New Year begins on Tishri 1, corresponding to Sept/Oct. The origins of the civil calendar are not completely known, but the ancient Babylonians used a similar calendar.

- Each new month on a Jewish calendar begins on a new moon, and the middle of the month (14th or 15th) is always a full moon. Since the orbit of the moon is 29.5 days, each month in the Jewish calendar alternates between 29 and 30 days. The 12-month year is 354 days, except in leap years, where an extra month is added.

- Gregorian calendars have one leap year every 4 years where an additional day is added in February. By contrast, the ancient Hebrew calendar's leap year adds an additional month every 2-3 years. The timing of the leap year is determined by the Feast of Firstfruits: if a Firstfruit cannot be found on the 14th of the first month, the month is considered to be Adar II instead of Abib, and therefore a leap-year month. This pattern of leap years forms a curious 19-year repeating pattern that has an unusual musical correlation: when compared to a 19-note octave (common in Eastern music and some classical music in the 15th century), the 7 leap years match the 7 major notes of the 19-note octave. Although there are several other luni-solar calendars known in history, this is the only calendar that has this curious musical correlation.

- As with many Jewish customs, the Jewish calendar has been revised over the centuries. Mathematically-based formulas have been implemented to give better accuracy, and to prevent certain feasts from falling on or near Sabbath days.

Interesting Calendar Facts about Noah and the Ark

From Genesis chapters seven and eight, we are able to determine that at the time of the Flood each month of the Hebrew Calendar contained the same number of days as they do to this day. The Flood began "in the second month, on the seventeen day of the month…. And the waters prevailed upon the earth a hundred and fifty days … and at the end of the hundred and fifty days the waters had gone down. And in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, the ark rested upon the mountains of Ararat" (Gen. 7:11, 24; 8:3-4).

…The account records that Noah remained in the Ark until the earth reached this second stage of dryness. There was good reason for waiting to leave the Ark until the soil had dried. If Noah had released the animals before the ground was dry, the elephants and other large animals might have gotten bogged down and entrapped in mud.

After the withdrawal of the Flood waters and drying of the ground, the earth was prepared to receive the survivors of the Flood. They had entered the Ark on the seventeenth day of the second month in the six hundredth year of Noah's life. Below is a computation of the number of days that passed in the year of the Flood.

- Gen. 7:11 Flood begins on 17th day of 2nd month
  (30 days in the 1st month plus 16 days in the 2nd) -------- 46 days
- Gen. 7:12 Rain for 40 days and 40 nights---------- 40 days
- Gen. 7:24 Waters prevail---------- 150 days
- Gen. 8:3 Waters abate---------- 150 days

Total: 386 days

- Gen. 8:13 Water dried on first day of the next year------ -1 day

The chronological facts that are recorded in the account in the book of Genesis clearly establish a period of 385 days in the year of the Noachian Flood. This year length is significant because it is the exact number of days required for an excessive leap year in the Hebrew Calendar. This remarkable account of the Flood, which God inspired to be recorded in his Word, is indisputable evidence that the Hebrew Calendar bears His stamp of approval. There can be no doubt that the calculations of the Hebrew Calendar have been the basis of God's true calendar from the beginning (by Don Roth, August 26, 2008)

After the Flood of Noah, dated 2369/2368 BC, to the final exile of the Jews to Babylon in 585 BC, a total of 1782 years, there were various astronomical events by which God temporally altered the arrangement of the heavenly bodies within the solar system—including the sun, moon and earth. Nevertheless, the mathematical formula comprising the present Calculated Hebrew Calendar has remained the same from creation!

Calendar comparisons: Gregorian (Western), Jewish, Islamic and Chinese

What is the Difference Between the Western, Islamic, and Jewish Calendars?

https://www.wisegeek.com/what-is-the-difference-between-the-western-islamic-and-jewish-calendars.htm

There are three main calendars based on different ways of marking time — the Western calendar, also called the Christian calendar or the Gregorian calendar; the Islamic or Hijri calendar; and the Jewish or Hebrew calendar. Among the difference between these calendars is the core events that they are based on, the lengths of the months and years, and when the day begins.

Jewish and Chinese Calendars Are More Similar Than You Think

https://www.algemeiner.com/2014/01/28/jewish-and-chinese-calendars-are-more-similar-than-you-think/

The Gregorian calendar – the most commonly used calendar on earth today – is solar. It is based on the time it takes the earth to go around the sun, which is a tiny bit less than 365 ¼ days. The months are arbitrary. They are called “months”• because they are a reflection of the lunar cycle – the time it takes for the moon to circle the earth. A lunar month is 29 days, 12 hours, 44 minutes, and 3 seconds long. On lunar calendars, months typically are either 29 or 30 days long.

The Islamic calendar is lunar. Since 12 lunar months don’t add up to 365 ¼ days, the Islamic months occur a bit earlier every solar year. The month of Ramadan will begin on June 29 in 2014. Since Muslims are required to fast during the day and eat only at night, the fast will be extremely long at northern latitudes. Twenty years ago, in 1994, Ramadan began on February 12. When a calendar is lunar, the holidays move around the year, and so the fast in the northern hemisphere was noticeably shorter in 1994 than it will be in 2014

The Jewish and Chinese calendars are solar-lunar. A month is a real month – the time it takes for the moon to circle the earth. A year is a real year – the time it takes for the earth to circle the sun. Since the lunar months don’t quite add up to a year, an extra month is added in leap years. In both calendars, leap years occur seven times every 19 years.

Sometimes a Chinese year begins on the first day of Shvat, the month before Adar, rather than the first day of Adar. That’s because Chinese and Jewish leap years don’t always coincide. Even though both calendars add a month 7 times every 19 years, the leap years don’t have to take place the same year…

The Islamic Jewish Calendar

http://www.eretzyisroel.org/~jkatz/The%20Islamic%20Jewish%20Calendar.pdf [PDF]

The Islamic or Hijra calendar is made up of 12 lunar months. Traces of Jewish holidays like Rosh Hashanah, Yom Kippur, Pesach (Passover) and Shavout (Pentacost) are still evident in this calendar. However, because of structural changes in the Islamic calendar, the Jewish and Islamic “celebration” of those holidays coincides only once in about 33 years. It is known that the Jews of Arabia felt that they were the “true mourners of Zion” and carried customs of mourning for the destruction of the Temple to extremes not matched by Jews elsewhere. And we can assume that the mourning for the Temple influenced pre-Islamic culture to some extent. But even so, it is surprising to find one of the most holy days of the Islamic calendar -- the 9 th of Dhu al Hijja, the Day of Arafat, the height of the Hajj pilgrimage – corresponding to the the Jewish fast day of the 9 th of Av (which commemorates the destruction of the Temple in 70 CE). And the fast of Ramadan to be based on the Jewish Sefirat haOmer 5 which among other things is a time of mourning for the hundreds of thousands killed after Bar Kochba’s failed revolt in 135 CE.

Sabbath (Shabbat)

The Sabbath (Shabbat) officially begins at sunset, not when it gets dark, so no amount of clouds can bring in Shabbat earlier. That being said, Jewish communities actually do have the custom of lighting Shabbat candles 18 minutes before sunset (shkiah). These 18 minutes provide a grace period for watches and clocks set to slightly different times, ensuring that no one begins Shabbat any later than the actual sunset.

At about 2PM or 3PM on Friday afternoon, observant Jews leave the office to begin Shabbat preparations. The mood is much like preparing for the arrival of a special, beloved guest: the house is cleaned, the family bathes and dresses up, the best dishes and tableware are set, a festive meal is prepared. In addition, everything that cannot be done during Shabbat must be set up in advance: lights and appliances must be set (or timers placed on them, if the household does so), the light bulb in the refrigerator must be removed, so it does not turn on when you open it, and preparations for the remaining Shabbat meals must be made.

The Shabbat, like all Jewish days, begins at sunset, because in the story of creation in Genesis Ch. 1, you will notice that it says, "And there was evening, and there was morning, one day." From this, we infer that a day begins with evening, that is, sunset. Shabbat candles are lit and a blessing is recited no later than eighteen minutes before sunset. This ritual, performed by the woman of the house, officially marks the beginning of the Shabbat. Two candles are lit, representing the two commandments: zachor and shamor.

The family then attends a brief evening service (45 minutes - that's brief by Jewish standards - see Jewish Liturgy).

After services, the family comes home for a festive, leisurely dinner. Before dinner, it is customary for parents to bless their children. Then the man of the house recites Kiddush, a prayer over wine sanctifying the Shabbat. The usual prayer for eating bread is recited over two loaves of challah, a sweet, eggy bread shaped in a braid. The family then eats dinner. Although there are no specific requirements or customs regarding what to eat, meals are generally stewed or slow cooked items, because of the prohibition against cooking during the Shabbat. (Things that are mostly cooked before Shabbat and then reheated or kept warm are OK).

After dinner, the birkat ha-mazon (grace after meals) is recited. Although this is done every day, on the Shabbat, it is done in a leisurely manner with many upbeat tunes.
By the time all of this is completed, it may be 9PM or later. The family has an hour or two to talk or study Torah, and then go to sleep.

The next morning Shabbat services begin around 9AM and continue until about noon. After services, the family says kiddush again and has another leisurely, festive meal. A typical afternoon meal is cholent, a very slowly cooked stew. By the time birkat ha-mazon is done, it is about 2PM. The family studies Torah for a while, talks, takes an afternoon walk, plays some checkers, or engages in other leisure activities. A short afternoon nap is not uncommon. It is traditional to have a third meal before Shabbat is over. This is usually a light meal in the late afternoon.

Shabbat ends at nightfall, when three stars are visible, approximately 40 minutes after sunset. At the conclusion of Shabbat, the family performs a concluding ritual called Havdalah (separation, division). Blessings are recited over wine, spices and candles. Then a blessing is recited regarding the division between the sacred and the secular, between Shabbat and the working days, etc.

In Jewish time, the day begins with the onset of night (the appearance of the stars) followed by the morning (which technically begins with the appearance of the North Star). According to some Jewish teachers, night and morning begin with sunset and sunrise respectively. For that is how the Torah describes it: “And there was evening and there was morning, the first day.”

For this reason, the Sabbath begins on Friday night and ends with the appearance of the stars on Saturday night. The same is true for the major holidays such as Passover, Sukkot, Shavuot, Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, the fast day of Tisha B’Av, and Hanukkah and Purim.

Beginning the day with the night is, in a sense, a metaphor of life itself. Life begins in the darkness of the womb, then bursts into the brightness of the light and eventually settles into the darkness of the grave, which, in turn, is followed by a new dawn in the world-to-come.

[Source: http://www.simpletoremember.com/articles/a/jewish-time/]

> “One star-it is day. Two-twilight. Three-night. Rabbi Yose said, "Not large stars that we see in the day, nor small stars that we only see at night, rather medium stars . . . "
> Rava said to his beadle, "You all, who do not have a grasp on Rabbinic measurement [of time], should light the [Shabbat] lamp while the sun is at the treetops."

When does Shabbat begin? When does it end? What separates the mundane time of the week from the transcendent time of Shabbat? The simple answer is that Shabbat is the seventh day of the week. Since Genesis 1 places the night before the morning ("And there was evening, and there was morning . . . "), Shabbat begins at nightfall on Friday. But how do we define nightfall? When the sun sets? When it gets dark? When the stars come out? The first part of our source states that it is only certainly night when three medium-size stars can be seen in the sky. Shabbat, therefore, ends only when the first day of the week has certainly begun, on Saturday night after the appearance of these stars. Twilight, however, is an odd time. It may be day, it may be night, and our Sages were unsure which it was. Thus Rava instructs his beadle to light the lamp inaugurating Shabbat before twilight on Friday, as is our practice today, just prior to sunset. This period of indeterminate time, from just before sunset until just after the appearance of three medium-size stars, varies in the mid-Atlantic region from approximately forty-five to seventy-five minutes over the course of the year. The result is that Shabbat is usually a twenty-five-hour affair, rather than a twenty-four-hour one.

The Month of the Aviv (Abib)

The biblical year begins at the sighting of the first new moon after the barley in the land of Israel reaches the stage in its development that the Bible calls aviv.

Only by checking the state of the barley crop can we fulfill the biblical commandment to “Keep the month of the aviv” (Deuteronomy 16:1). Only by fixing the calendar in harmony with the barley crop can we fulfill the commandment to celebrate Hag HaMatzot (the Feast of Unleavened Bread) “at the time of the month of the aviv, because in the month of the aviv you went out of Egypt” (Exodus 34:18).

A commitment of Jewish Karaites throughout the generations has been to observe the biblical precept to “keep the month of the aviv.” To this very day, every Karaite takes an oath at the time of his marriage “to keep the Holy Days of YHWH according to the observation of the aviv in the Holy Land of Israel.” Throughout the Middle Ages, a great effort was made to send messengers to Israel to check on the state of the barley crop. It was not uncommon for Karaitic Jews to celebrate the Holy Days one month after the Rabbinic Jews. As late as 1641, we learn from a Crimean Karaite pilgrim that the Karaites of the Middle East still followed the biblical calendar, and in 1641 they celebrated all the Holy Days one month after the “Rabbinites.”

The “nineteen year cycle” has been adopted by the majority of Jewish people instead of fixing the first month according to the barley crop. This cycle was invented at a time when reliable reports of the barley crop in the land of Israel were difficult to obtain. It added the occasionally necessary thirteenth month (seven times every nineteen years), which keeps Passover in the spring of the year in a logical, yet biblically unauthorized pattern. The Rabbinites recognize that the state of the barley crop determines the date of Passover (Sanhedrin 11a); however, since our return to the land, observation of the barley crop has proven that the rabbinic cycle is often in error and now obsolete. Over the past decade, several Israelites have investigated the state of the barley crop at the time that the modern Jewish calendar declared the month of Aviv (Nissan) and discovered that the barley was not yet aviv. It is a common occurrence for Rabbinic, Messianic, and even Karaitic Jews to celebrate the biblical Holy Days one month too early!

http://www.karaite-korner.org/abib_faq.shtml#name_abib

Q: What is the Biblical name for the First Month (Nissan)?

The Torah calls this month: "The First Month" (Hodesh HaRishon) and also refers to it as "Month of the Abib" (Hodesh Ha'Abib). It should be noted that it is not called Month of Abib, but rather Month of THE Abib. Abib is not the name of the month, but rather describes the character of the month [since names in Biblical Hebrew can not get the definite article]. The name Nissan is a Babylonian month name, which was learned by Israel during the Babylonian exile.

Q: Does Abib mean "Green Ears" or "Green, tender ears"?

No. Abib does not mean "green ears", despite the incorrect translation in the King James Bible. The precise meaning of Abib must be reconstructed by going into the fields and studying the barley and cross-referencing this with the Biblical evidence. The Bible often speaks of "Abib parched in fire". This refers to grain which is developed enough to be eaten after it has been parched. In contrast, "Green Ears" is such a broad term that it can refer to grain which when parched will shrivel up leaving no edible material. This has been confirmed by experiments. In order to be Abib, the barley must be more developed than Green, tender ears.

Biblical evidence also shows that Abib is a brittle state as can be seen from the description of the crops destroyed by the Plague of Hail:

"And the flax and the barley were smitten, because the barley was Abib and the flax was Giv'ol. And the wheat and the spelt were not smitten because they were dark (Afilot)." (Ex 9,31-32)

The full meaning of this passage and its ramifications for understanding the agricultural term Abib is discussed at: http://www.karaite-korner.org/abib.shtml

Determining God's Appointed Times Scripturally
http://www.truthontheweb.org/biblecal.htm
(Determining the head of the year and head of the month, length, etc. according to the Bible)

Rosh Chodesh is the New Moon, which is the start of each month. Biblically, Rosh Chodesh was determined by witnesses observing the first thin crescent of the moon. In days before modern communication the new moon could not be notified to all dispersed communities so Rosh Chodesh is celebrated on two consecutive days outside Israel.

In Genesis 1:14 GOD said, “Let there be lights in the expanse of the sky ..... to serve to mark the seasons and days of years." See also Rosh Chodesh to understand the importance of observation of the New Moon, as opposed to calculation. The same is true of the start of the year - The Month of the Aviv - The biblical year begins when the first new moon after the barley in the land of Israel reaches the state in its development that the Bible calls Aviv. Only by checking the state of the barley crop can we fulfill the Biblical commandment to "Keep the Month of the Aviv” (Deuteronomy 16:1). This obviously determines when the other feasts should be celebrated, for example, the Feast of Unleavened Bread; (“at the time of the month of the Aviv, because in the month of the Aviv you went out of Egypt." - Exodus 34:18) (The 19 year cycle is an un-Biblical substitute for this observational method.)

In Leviticus 23, Moses instructed the people that Nisan (or Aviv or Abib) was to be the first month. This is the religious calendar, as opposed to the civil calendar which starts at Rosh Hashanna.

Incidentally, the Jewish calendar is calculated from Creation and therefore needs no BC or AD. Jewish reference to the Western, Gregorian, calendar are CE or BCE; CE standing for Common Era and Before Common Era.

Is the search for Abib barley scriptural?
http://www.setapartpeople.com/search-abib-barley-scriptural

This barley is mostly at the stage of Aviv; some of the barley is fully ripe.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

The biblical year does not have a set number of months. Rather, the new Jewish year starts with the first new moon after the barley in the Land of Israel reaches a certain stage of ripeness. (See Exodus 12:2, 13:4 and 23:15.) This stage of ripeness is called “Aviv” (or “Abib”). The barley has reached the stage of Aviv when, inter alia, the barley turns from dark green (when it is rather flexible) to a lighter color (when it is brittle). Barley at the stage of Aviv is not yet fully ripe. The Karaite Korner has an informative article on the Aviv.

The “catch” is that in some years the barley is Aviv by the end of the 12th lunar month. And in other years the barley is Aviv by the end of the 13th lunar month. If the barley is not ripe at the end of the 12th month, an extra month (the thirteenth month) is added to the Jewish calendar. This extra month is referred to as a leap month.

The only way to make sure that one year is ending and the next one is beginning is to check to see whether the barley has reached the stage of Aviv. This is not controversial and the practice is even described (with some additions) in the Talmud. (Babylonian Talmud, Sanhedrin 11b.)

In the 4th Century [A.D.], however, Rabbinic Judaism replaced direct observation of the Aviv with a precalculated calendar that disperses 7 leap months over each 19 year period.

Karaites have historically objected to this practice and have insisted on observing the Aviv and adding leap months only when necessary. In truth, though, most Karaites of recent generations have failed to maintain this biblical precept strictly.

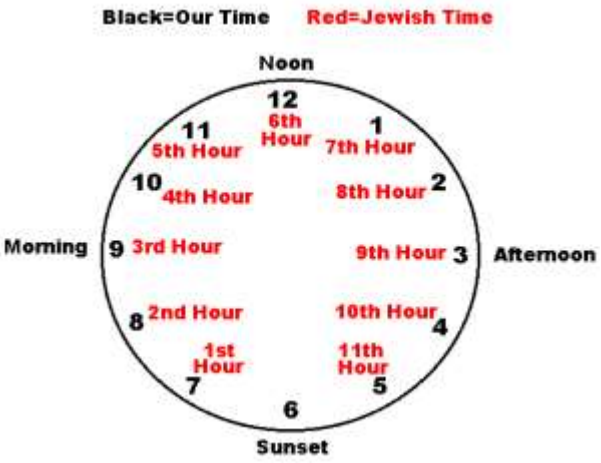
The Jewish Day, Telling Time and Divisions of Time

Twelve-Hour Daylight Division

Jesus replied, 'Are there not 12 hours in a day?'
John 11:9



The Jewish daytime hours began with dawn and ended with sundown, which began the next day. The hours are seasonal, so the length of the daylight hours varied with the season of the year. The Romans began their day at midnight and counted 12 hours to high 12 noon and then 12 more hours from noon to the next midnight. We keep Roman time.

The Jewish Day

From Answers.com:

A. Think about it--what makes more sense: for a new day to begin when the old day ends, or in the middle of the night? That's basically why the Jewish day begins at sundown--it follows the laws of nature as stated in the Torah (Genesis ch.1). But a fuller understanding of why the Jewish day starts at sundown requires a quick examination of time:

B. When God created the universe, He created time, space and matter simultaneously. At the very beginning of Creation, the clock began ticking at 00:00 at the precise moment which space and matter burst into being. Twenty-four hours later, Day One was complete. What does the Torah say? "It was evening and it was morning, one day." That first 24-hour day began with night and ended with day--and it's been that way ever since.

C. Later, on Day Four, God assigned the sun and the moon as day and night markers, setting up the solar system the way it is today. The Jewish day begins with night, because that's how time began.

A person's "day" is usually defined as the period of time during which they are active. Most modern people "start the day" in the morning when they wake up, continue through daylight hours, and rest at around sundown. The ancestors of the Israelites were nomadic. Travelers would rest in the ours of heat and go by night, because it is much cooler than the daytime, they can use the stars for navigation, and use the moon as a lamp. Their active time is night, so their "day" starts at sundown.

Reckoning of the Day: Three Major Views:
http://www.biblicalperspectives.com/books/crucifixion/4.html

From the remotest time to the present the Israelites have computed the day (yôm) from sunset to sunset, or rather from sunset to the appearance of the first three stars which marked the beginning of a new day [Cf. Leviticus 23:32; II Esd. (Nehemiah) 4:21; etc.]. Before the Babylonian Exile the time between sunrise and sunset was divided into "morning", "midday", and "evening" (Psalm 54:18; Hebrew 55:17); but during the stay in Babylon the Hebrews adopted the division into twelve hours (Cf. John 11:9), whose duration varied with the length of the day. On an average, the first hour corresponded to about 6 a.m.; the third hour to 9 a.m.; the end of the sixth to noon; while at the eleventh the day was near its close. Earlier than this division of the day by hours was that of the night into three watches: the first till midnight; the second or middle watch (cock-crow) till 3 a.m.; and the third or morning watch till about 6 a.m.
[Source: http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/03166a.htm]

In Jewish time, the day begins with the onset of night (the appearance of the [three] stars) followed by the morning (which technically begins with the appearance of the North Star). According to some Jewish teachers, night and morning begin with sunset and sunrise respectively. For that is how the Torah describes it: “And there was evening and there was morning, the first day.”

Day - According to the Talmud:

The Bible does not clearly define day and night or their divisions, such as "evening, morning, and noonday" (Ps. 55:18), the watches of the night (Ex. 14:24; Judg. 7:19), midnight or half the night (Ex. 11:4; 12:29), and the notion of "hour" is not mentioned at all. The duration of a "halakhic" day is from dawn until the appearance of the stars, i.e., a full solar day; it is divided into secondary periods, according to three systems:

(a) Every day (and every night) is divided into 12 "variable" ("זמניות") hours, no matter what season it occurs in; the duration of the hour is therefore dependent on the yearly season (Sanh. 38b). Ultra-Orthodox Jews in Israel follow this system to the present day.

(b) The entire day (day and night) is taken as one unit and is divided into 24 standard and fixed hours of 60 minutes each, as in the commonly accepted time system. The division of day and night into fixed hours, with a specific duration, is mentioned for the first time in the literature of the tannaim (see, e.g., Mekh. SbY to 12:29: "He is seated on the sundial [a time device probably introduced into Ereẓ Israel during the Hellenistic period] and shows the hours with an accuracy that is within a hair's breadth"). The notion of an "hour" as an undefined and not standardized lapse of time has, however, been maintained in the Mishnah ("The early pietists waited an hour…."; Ber. 5:1). Though it was only theoretical, there was also more detailed division; an onah ("term") is 1/24 of an hour, an et ("period") is 1/24 of an onah, and a rega ("moment") is 1/24 of an et (Tosef., Ber. 1:3). In this classification the rega is approximately ¼ of a second. The rabbis, therefore, said that "a human being … does not know his ittim [plural of et], rega'im [plural of rega], and hours … but God … entered into it by a hair's breadth" (Gen. R. 10:9). A different, more precise calculation existed in Ereẓ Israel: "How much is a rega – 1/58,888 of an hour" (Ber. 7a). A wide literature, notably the Baraita de-Shemuel, deals with such time calculations within the framework of astrological research. Another division of the hour is into 1,080 parts; this is also very ancient and is based on the lunar month.

(c) The solar day (alone) is divided according to the changes in the brightness of the sunlight. In this system, the day is divided as follows: dawn, the appearance of the first morning twilight, is the starting point when all precepts to be fulfilled during the day become obligatory. Halakhah, however, prefers sunrise to dawn because the commencement of the day presents problems of definition; haneḥ ha-ḥammah ("first appearance of the sun") occurs after dawn and precedes zeriḥah by the period of time it takes to walk a mil ("mile"). At that time, the pious read the Shema. Zeriḥah – full sunrise – is the moment when the entire sun appears over the horizon. Sunset is the moment when the entire sun disappears below the horizon. Evening twilight is the light after sunset and it is doubtful whether this period may be called day or night, and diverse opinions have been given by the tannaim as to its exact nature and time (Shab. 34b). According to Maimonides (Yad, Shabbat 5:4), the evening twilight begins with sunset and lasts until the appearance of three medium-sized stars, and from then on it is night. R. Tam argues that evening twilight begins from the period it takes to walk three and a quarter mil after sunset to the appearance of the stars. Until then, it is still day. In the Shulḥan Arukh (OḤ 261), this second opinion is accepted as binding. According to a third opinion, held by some of the early commentators, night begins immediately with sunset and the evening twilight is a period prior to sunset, lasting the time it takes to walk three and a quarter mil.

The halakhah used systems (a) and (b), while (c), which is the most ancient and is based on the direct observation of the movement of the celestial bodies, is only of secondary importance. All the hours and time concepts associated with the precepts are "variable." According to Mordecai *Jaffe 's Levush and *Elijah ben Solomon of Vilna, the hours of the day are calculated from zeriḥah to sheki'ah (sunset); the majority of opinions, however, maintain that the calculation is from dawn until the appearance of the stars.

The "Hour" in the Gospels: Jewish, Roman or Other Method(s)?

Note: "The Gospels" = the New Testament Books in the Bible of Matthew, Mark and Luke (the three together known as the Synoptic Gospels) and the Book of John (4 Books total).

There are several places in the New Testament when there appears to be a descrepency between the Gospels regarding designated hours when compared with each other. Let's look at some of them… See also*: Tellling Time

For example: John 1:39

The Gospel of John in v. 1:39 talks about the "tenth hour". It is important to determine whether this is 4pm in the afternoon, according to Jewish time; or, 10am according to Roman time.

Whatever you determine it to be will have critical implications for Jesus' timeline during his final week and how you interpret other passages involving 'the hour'.

Below are various arguments, for Jewish time and for Roman time, dealing with this instance and others in the Gospels…

Why did Jesus call Andrew and John at the tenth hour?
https://newtheologicalmovement.blogspot.com/2012/01/why-did-jesus-call-andrew-and-john-at.html

Excerpt:

2nd Sunday in Ordinary Time, John 1:35-42

It was about four in the afternoon.

As St. John tells us of his own calling (for he is surely that unnamed disciple called together with St. Andrew) and of that first conversation he had with our Savior, he specifies the time of day: It was the tenth hour (which is to say, about four in the afternoon).

Why does the Beloved Disciple add this detail? What is the significance of the time? What are we to learn from the hour of the day?

The Jewish hours of the day

Modern man counts time from midnight to midnight, hence at 12am the hours of the day begin anew and continue through to 12pm (which is roughly mid-day) and until 11:45pm (or 23:59). The ancient Jews, however, counted not from mid-night but from sunrise. Thus, the hours of the day began at dawn (which was the first hour, called "Prime") and continued through to the sixth hour (which was about mid-day) and until the twelfth hour (about sunset). The hours of the night were generally calculated according to four “watches”, though there were often only three watches in the summer months (when the night was shorter).

To recognize the relation of the modern method to the ancient we offer the following table:

Modern method	Ancient Jewish method
6am	First hour
9am	Third hour
12pm	Sixth hour
3pm	Ninth hour
6pm	Twelfth hour
9pm	First watch of the night
12am	Second watch of the night
3am	Third watch
Till about 6am	Forth watch

Hence, the tenth hour would be about four in the afternoon.

How long was that first meeting?

St. John specifies that it was late in the afternoon in order to imply both that our Lord was zealous to teach and instruct even at the end of a long day – thus, Theophylus writes “The Evangelist mentions the time of day purposely, as a hint both to teachers and learners, not to let time interfere with their work.” (From the Catena Aurea)

Further, we are to understand that this first meeting did not end abruptly with sunset (so as to last only two or three hours), but rather continued through the whole night. Thus, St. Augustine: “What a blessed day they spent, what a blessed night!” (Tractate vii on John)

How blessed indeed this first night which John and Andrew spent with our Lord, conversing with him, being taught by the Word of God who imparts all knowledge.

The mystery of the tenth hour

While it is true that the tenth hour does correspond to four in the afternoon, it is nevertheless unfortunate that the English lectionary converts the time. Indeed, there is a great mystery related to us in the signification of the number ten.

Consider the interpretation of St. Augustine:

> “Do we think that it did in no wise pertain to the evangelist to tell us what hour it was? Is it possible that he wished us to give heed to nothing in that, to inquire after nothing? It was the tenth hour. That number signifies the law, because the law was given in ten commandments. But the time had come for the law to be fulfilled by love, because it could not be fulfilled by the Jews by fear. Hence the Lord says, I am not come to destroy the law, but to fulfill. [Matthew 5:17]

"Suitably, then, at the tenth hour did these two follow Him, at the testimony of the friend of the Bridegroom, and that He at the tenth hour heard Rabbi (which is interpreted, Master). If at the tenth hour the Lord heard Rabbi, and the tenth number pertains to the law, the master of the law is no other than the giver of the law. Let no one say that one gave the law, and that another teaches the law: for the same teaches it who gave it; He is the Master of His own law, and teaches it. And mercy is in His tongue, therefore mercifully teaches He the law, as it is said regarding wisdom, The law and mercy does she carry in her tongue. [Proverbs 31:26]

"Do not fear that you are not able to fulfill the law, flee to mercy. If you cannot fulfill the law, make use of that covenant, make use of the bond, make use of the prayers which the heavenly One, skilled in the law, has ordained and composed for you." (Tractate vii on John)

Gill's Exposition of the Entire Bible

He saith unto them, come and see,.... He gave them an invitation, to go along with him directly, and see with their own eyes, where he dwelt, and there and then converse with him, and at any other time; to which they had a hearty welcome:

they came and saw where he dwelt; they accepted of the invitation, and went along with him immediately, and saw, and took notice of the place where he had lodgings, that they might know it, and find it another time; which Dr. Lightfoot conjectures was at Capernaum, which is very probable; since that was his own city, where he paid tribute, where he frequently resorted, and was on the banks of Jordan, near the lake of Gennesaret; and these disciples were Galilaeans:

and abode with him that day; the remaining part of the day, which they spent in delightful conversation with him; by which they knew that he was the Messiah; at least they were better instructed in this matter, and more confirmed in it. The Arabic version renders it, "they remained with him that his own day"; and Dr. Lightfoot thinks the next day is meant, and that it was the sabbath day, which they kept with him in private devotion and conference:

for it was about the tenth hour; which, according to the Roman way of reckoning, must be ten o'clock in the morning; so that there was a considerable part of the day before them; but according to the Jewish way of reckoning, who reckon twelve hours to a day, it must be four o'clock in the afternoon, when there were but two hours to night: and this being; about the time when the lamb of the daily sacrifice of the evening was offered up, very seasonably did John point unto them, at this time, Christ the Lamb of God, the antitype of that sacrifice; for the daily evening sacrifice was slain at eight and a half, and was offered at nine and a half (f), or between the ninth and tenth hours of the day. The Ethiopic version renders it, "they remained with him that day unto the tenth hour",

John 1:39 Commentary
Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges

Come and see] The more probable reading gives, Come and ye shall see.

they came] Insert, therefore.

that day] That memorable day.

it was about the tenth hour] John remembers the very hour of this crisis in his life: all the details of the narrative are very lifelike.

It is sometimes contended that John reckons the hours of the day according to the modern method, from midnight to midnight, and not according to the Jewish method, from sunset to sunset, as everywhere else in N.T. and in Josephus. It is antecedently improbable that John should in this point vary from the rest of N.T. writers; and we ought to require strong evidence before accepting this theory, which has been adopted mainly in order to escape from the difficulty of John 19:14, where see notes. Setting aside John 19:14 as the cause of the question, we have four passages in which John mentions the hour of the day, this, John 4:6; John 4:52 and John 11:9. None of them are decisive: but in no single case is the balance of probability strongly in favour of the modern method. See notes in each place. Here either 10 a.m. or 4 p.m. would suit the context: and while the antecedent probability that John reckons time like the rest of the Evangelists will incline us to 4 p.m., the fact that a good deal still remains to be done on this day makes 10 a.m. rather more suitable. Origen knows nothing of John's using the modern method of reckoning.

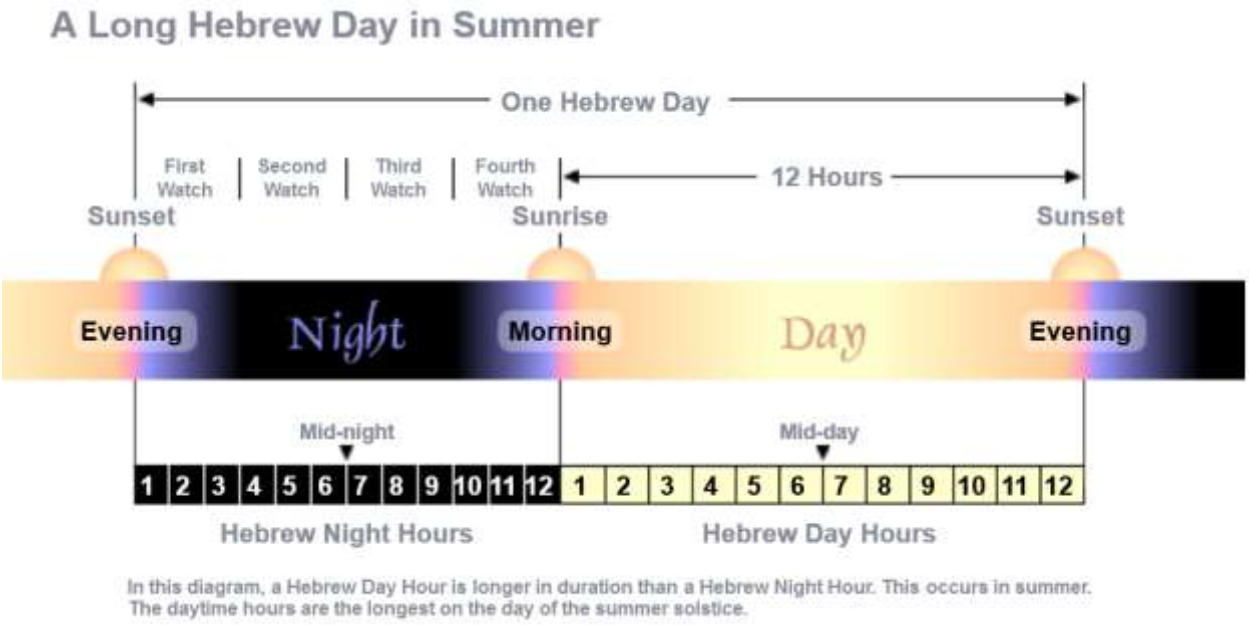
Determining the Hebrew Hour

https://torahcalendar.com/HOUR.asp

The Torah, the Prophets and the Writings do not number specific Hebrew Hours. Only the Messianic Scriptures number specific Hebrew Hours in Matthew, Mark, Luke and Acts. The third hour of the day is referred to in Matthew 20:3-4, Mark 15:25 and Acts 2:15. The third hour of the night is referred to in Acts 23:23-24. The sixth hour of the day is referred to in Matthew 20:5, 27:45, Mark 15:33, Luke 23:44 and Acts 10:9. The ninth hour of the day is referred to in Matthew 20:5, 27:45, 27:46, Mark 15:33, 15:34, Luke 23:44, Acts 3:1, Acts 10:3 and Acts 10:30-31. The eleventh hour of the day is referred to in Matthew 20:6 and Matthew 20:9.

A Hebrew Day consists of 12 Hebrew Night Hours and 12 Hebrew Day Hours. The midpoint of the 12 Hebrew Night Hours is called Mid-night. The moment of Mid-night occurs exactly halfway between sunset and sunrise separating the sixth and seventh Hebrew Night Hours. The midpoint of the 12 Hebrew Day Hours is called Mid-day. The moment of Mid-day occurs exactly halfway between sunrise and sunset separating the sixth and seventh Hebrew Day Hours. An easy way to measure Day Hours is by using an equiangular sundial marked with 12 divisions.



In the Creation Calendar, Hebrew Hours begin at sunrise and sunset. A Hebrew Hour occurring between sunset and sunrise is called a Hebrew Night Hour. A Hebrew Hour occurring between sunrise and sunset is called a Hebrew Day Hour. Sunset occurs and the First Watch begins exactly at the beginning of the first Hebrew Night Hour. The Second Watch begins exactly at the beginning of the fourth Hebrew Night Hour. Mid-night occurs and the Third Watch begins exactly at the beginning of the seventh Hebrew Night Hour. The Fourth Watch begins exactly at the beginning of the tenth Hebrew Night Hour, and ends at sunrise at the end of the twelfth Hebrew Night Hour. Sunrise is always exactly at the beginning of the first Hebrew Day Hour. Mid-day occurs exactly at the end of the sixth Hebrew Day Hour. Sunset occurs exactly at the end of the twelfth Hebrew Day Hour.

The duration of a Hebrew Hour varies with the season. A Hebrew Day Hour is shorter in duration during winter when a Hebrew Night Hour is longer in duration. A Hebrew Day Hour is longer in duration during summer when a Hebrew Night Hour is shorter in duration.

In this diagram, a Hebrew Day Hour is shorter in duration than a Hebrew Night Hour. This occurs in winter. The daytime hours are the shortest on the day of the winter solstice.

In this diagram, a Hebrew Day Hour is longer in duration than a Hebrew Night Hour. This occurs in summer. The daytime hours are the longest on the day of the summer solstice.

In contrast to Matthew, Mark, Luke and Acts, the book of John, as it now exists in the Greek manuscripts, numbers hours from midnight as the Romans did. Pilate questioned יהושע the Messiah at the sixth hour Roman reckoning according to John 19:14 which is the twelfth Hebrew Night Hour. יהושע the Messiah sat at Jacob's well at Sychar at the sixth hour Roman reckoning after a tiresome journey according to John 4:6 which is the twelfth Hebrew Day Hour. A nobleman travelled the better part of a day from Cana to Capernaum and met יהושע the Messiah at the seventh hour Roman reckoning according to in John 4:52 which is the first Hebrew Night Hour. The disciples came to the place יהושע the Messiah was staying at the tenth hour Roman reckoning and stayed with Him for the rest of that day according to John 1:39. The tenth hour Roman reckoning is the fourth Hebrew Day Hour.

Although some have claimed there is no historical proof that the Romans counted the hours from midnight, such proof indeed exists. According to Gaius Plinius Secundus who lived between 23 C.E. and 79 C.E., the Roman authorities counted civil hours from midnight.

Pliny the Elder, Natural History 2:77: "The very day itself men have observed in various manners. The Babylonians count the period between the two sunrises, the Athenians that between two sunsets, the Umbrians from midday to midday, the common people everywhere from dawn to dark, the Roman priests and the authorities who fix the civil day, and also the Egyptians and Hipparchus, the period from midnight to midnight."

Today, the Gregorian Calendar counts civil hours from midnight similar to the way the Romans did.

The Watches of the Night

In the Age of Torah the time between sunset and sunrise was divided into three watches. The evening watch is alluded to by Moses in Psalms 90:4.

Psalms 90:4 For a thousand years in Your sight are as one day when it is past, as a watch in the night [the evening watch*].*

This verse alludes to the fact that one Hebrew Day is past at the moment of sunset when the evening watch begins. It also alludes to the fact that one millennium ends and another millennium begins at sunset when the evening watch begins. The middle watch of the night is mentioned once in Judges 7:19. The morning watch is referred to by Moses in Exodus 14:24 and is also mentioned in 1 Samuel 11:11.

By the time of the Age of the Messiah, the time between sunset and sunrise was divided into four watches. The second watch and third watch are each mentioned once in Luke 12:38. The fourth watch is mentioned once in Matthew 14:25 and once in Mark 6:48 as the time when the Messiah walked on the water.

There are always exactly 24 Hebrew Hours between two sunsets. However, the duration of time between two sunsets measured in civil hours, minutes and seconds changes slightly throughout the year. The curve on the graph below represents the time difference in seconds between 24 civil hours and 24 Hebrew Hours throughout the year at Jerusalem. The blue area represents the period when 24 Hebrew Hours are slightly longer in duration than 24 civil hours. The purple area represents the period when 24 Hebrew Hours are slightly shorter in duration than 24 civil hours. The duration of 24 Hebrew Hours on the Hebrew Day of the spring equinox is 24:00:41 or 41 seconds longer than 24 civil hours. The duration of 24 Hebrew Hours on the Hebrew Day of the fall equinox is 23:58:41 or 79 seconds less than 24 civil hours. Notice there is little correlation between the shape of the time variation curve and the seasonal solstices and equinoxes.

A Hebrew Day always has exactly 24 Hebrew Hours. A civil day consists of 24 civil hours. However, a Hebrew Day does not always equal 24 civil hours. Since a Hebrew Day is the time from one sunset to the next, its duration will differ from 24 civil hours due to the civil time difference between the two sunset times. The curve on this graph represents the time difference in seconds between a Hebrew Day of 24 Hebrew Hours and a civil day of 24 civil hours throughout the year at Jerusalem.

Accuracy of Sunrise and Sunset Times

Calculations for sunrise and sunset times on torahcalendar.com are based upon certain assumptions made in modeling atmospheric refraction. These assumptions include using the latitude, longitude and elevation near the Temple Mount located in Jerusalem, using a yearly average barometric pressure of 1010 millibars, and using a yearly average air temperature of 19.4°C (66.9°F). Therefore, all times displayed relating to sunrise or sunset which are shown with a resolution in seconds, are determined based upon these atmospheric refraction modeling assumptions.

As Jean Meeus states in Astronomical Algorithms:

"A change of temperature from winter to summer can shift the times of sunrise and sunset by about 20 seconds in mid-northern and mid-southern latitudes. Similarly, observing sunrise or sunset over a range of barometric pressures leads to a variation of a dozen seconds in time."
Jean Meeus, Astronomical Algorithms, Second Edition, p.101.

"The effect of [atmospheric] refraction increases when the pressure increases or when the [air] temperature decreases." Jean Meeus, Astronomical Algorithms, Second Edition, p.106.

"Near the horizon unpredictable disturbances of the atmosphere become rather important. According to investigations by Schaefer and Liller, the refraction at the horizon fluctuates by 0.3° around a mean value [34 minutes of arc] normally, and in some cases apparently much more ... it should be mentioned here that giving rising or setting times of a celestial body more accurately than to the nearest minute makes no sense." Jean Meeus, Astronomical Algorithms, Second Edition, p.107.

For these reasons, actual observed sunrise and sunset times at Jerusalem may differ by as much as one minute due to daily variations in temperature and barometric pressure. In winter when the temperature is colder, the actual sunrise may occur earlier than projected times. Also, on a day when the barometric pressure is higher, sunrise may occur earlier. Cold temperature and high barometric pressure combined work cumulatively in causing the sunrise to occur earlier than the projected times. Torahcalendar.com only displays sunrise and sunset times to the nearest second to better illustrate the passage of time while providing a near real-time simulation of these events.

In the Gospels, How Should the Hours of the Day be Understood?

https://hermeneutics.stackexchange.com/questions/8861/in-the-gospels-how-should-the-hours-of-the-day-be-understood

Excerpt:

Does not need to be "the same" time, and is not the same time

Notice that the Mk 15:25 (3rd hour) is stated as "when they crucified him." In the Jn 19:14 passage (6th hour) the reference is to when Pilate sat in his place of judgement for the final condemnation of Christ to the cross.

There are time differences

The easy way to state it is that there are at least two main time reckoning systems that are being referenced. Commentators vary in that some will call one set the "Jewish" reckoning, and the other the "Roman," and others will refer to them in the opposite fashion. For purposes here, all that matters is the fact that the two differing systems existed. I will also refer to one set as "Jewish" and the other "Roman" based off what the majority of commentators I have looked at tend to equate the periods with, and that this Jewish reference supports.

So in parallel with our modern clock times, we have the following (note that this is an approximation for the Jewish reckoning especially, as they actually divided the daylight hours into 12 [cf. Jn 11:9], which may be more/less than a true hour depending upon time of year, etc.):

12 mid - Roman start of day | Jewish 6th hour night
3:00am - Roman 3rd hour | Jewish 9th hour of night
6:00am - Roman 6th hour | Jewish start of day (sunrise)
9:00am - Roman 9th hour | Jewish 3rd hour day
12 noon - Roman 12th hour | Jewish 6th hour day
3:00pm - Roman 3rd hour | Jewish 9th hour day
6:00pm - Roman 6th hour | Jewish 12th hour (sunset)
9:00pm - Roman 9th hour | Jewish 3rd hour of night

It is well attested that Roman's reckoned the day from midnight. What is debated is whether they reckoned the hours of the day from that point or not.[1] There seems to be evidence that both forms of reckoning were used, which is really enough to open the possibility that the two schedules resolve the issues between the gospels.

Jewish or Roman Time?

http://truthmagazine.com/archives/volume15/TM015140.html

1. To show that it is immaterial which time system we use, we only need to show that different New Testament writers used different time reckonings. Since their writing is inspired, then it would thus prove that the Lord recognizes either time that prevails.

2. In John 19:14 we are told that Jesus was before Pilate for trial at the sixth hour. But in Mark 15:25 we are told that it was the third hour when he was crucified. The explanation is simple: John described the events by using the Roman time while Mark, who wrote much earlier, described the same events by using Jewish time. Otherwise there is a contradiction and Jesus was crucified before he was tried. Actually he was before Pilate at about 6: 00 A.M. and crucified at about 9: 00 A.M. If one does not recognize this principle, there is no sensible explanation possible.

Jewish vs Roman Time Divisions In the 1ST Century AD

Excerpt:

The hours are seasonal so the length of the daylight hours varied with the season of the year. The Jewish daytime hours began with dawn and ended with sundown, which began the next day. The Romans began their day with the first hour at midnight and counted 12 hours to high 12 noon and then 12 more hours from noon to the next midnight. We keep Roman time.

JEWISH TIME	ROMAN TIME
FIRST HOUR	DAWN -8AM
SECOND HOUR	8-9AM
THIRD HOUR	9-10AM
FOURTH HOUR	10-11AM
FIFTH HOUR	11-12PM
SIXTH HOUR	NOON -1PM
SEVENTH HOUR	1-2PM
EIGHTH HOUR	2-3PM
NINTH HOUR	3-4PM
TENTH HOUR	4-5PM
ELEVENTH HOUR	5-6PM
TWELVETH HOUR	6PM-SUNDOWN

Notice that according to St. Mark, Jesus went to the cross at the third hour, which in Jewish time corresponds to our 9AM [Mark 15:25], and according to the Gospel accounts He gave up His life at the ninth hour, our 3PM.

The Time of Jesus' Death and Inerrancy: Is Harmonization Plausible?

https://bible.org/article/time-jesus-death-and-inerrancy-harmonization-plausible

Excerpt:

Attempts at harmonization of the gospel accounts have included the following views: 1) a confusion of the numerals 3 and 6 in the manuscript transmission of John, 2) John's use of a Roman time reckoning system of a civil day that started the day at midnight, 3) Mark's reference to crucifixion as a general statement that included some event(s) that led up to the actual lifting of Jesus on the cross and, 4) the times being loose approximations that can be reconciled due to the fact that modern systems of time accuracy did not exist at the time in which the events occurred.

While a harmonization of these two accounts defies a definitive solution at least a few solutions are feasible such that the time of Jesus' crucifixion is not a decisive proof text against inerrancy. While one cannot prove what an actual harmonized solution might be, neither can one prove an actual nonharmonistic view either. Indeed what Ehrman calls "impossible" is in fact possible within any standard evangelical definition of inerrancy including the Chicago Statement on Biblical Inerrancy.[3] And more than possible, this paper suggests that plausible harmonizations can be made consistent with about any inerrancy definition.

Methods of Ancient Time Reckoning and Framework of the Crucifixion Day

In the modern age people reckon time in hours, minutes, and seconds with clocks, watches, or phones. But time reckoning in the ancient world was reckoned with hours of sunlight based on sundials. If a sundial was not available rough times were based on eyeing the sun or one's own shadow or even just the shadow from a stick in the ground.[4] Sundials were introduced into Greece as early as the 6th century BC from the Babylonians according to Herodotus (Hdt 2.109). But it was not until the 3rd century BC that they were commonly used. For night-time hour calculations there were "water clocks." Water clocks used a steady flow drip into a container and they were in use by Roman soldiers to mark watches on the night as early as the 5th century BC. Hours of daylight were divided into twelve equal parts starting at sunrise. The result was that the first hour of the day (i.e., sunrise) would be different in absolute time depending on the location on the globe and time of year. Also, an "hour" was one twelfth of the total amount of daylight time. Since the length of daylight would change depending on location and time of year, an "hour" as one twelfth of the daylight could be anywhere in from the 40's to the 80's in terms of minutes.

Assuming the day of the crucifixion Friday April 3, AD 33 the sunrise in Jerusalem would have been at 5:25 a.m. according to NOAA's (National Oceanic Association and Administration) Solar

Calculator. Solar noon would have been at 11:41 a.m. and sunset would have been at 5:59 p.m. One "hour" on the sundial would have been equal to 62 minutes on that day. The first break of light (astronomical dawn) would have added as much as an hour to an hour and a half of some light before a 5.25 am sunrise. So, the first "hour" of that day on a sundial would have been 5:25-6:27 a.m.

Time references from the Gospels on the day of Jesus' crucifixion are as follows.

Event	Time Indicator	Passages that Support
Peter's denials	Before the Rooster Crows	Matt 26:74-75; Mark 14:72; Luke 22:60-61; John 18:27
Jesus delivered to Pilate the first time	Early in the morning (πρωΐ)	Matt 27:1; Mark 15:1; John 18:28-29
Jesus with Pilate just before the final decision (2nd time)	About the sixth hour	John 19:14
Jesus Crucified	The third hour	Mark 15:25
Darkness falling over the earth	The (about (ὡσεὶ) = Luke) sixth hour to the ninth	Matt 27:45; Mark 15:33; Luke 23:44
Jesus Dies	The (about (περὶ) = Matt) ninth hour	Matt 27:46-50; Mark 15:34-37

With the exception of the issue at hand (John 19:14 and Mark 15:25), what one notices is the consistency among the gospel writers as to the other chronology of events when a time indicator is given. There is agreement that Peter denied Jesus before the rooster crowed in Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. There is agreement between Matthew, Mark and John that Jesus was initially delivered to Pilate very early in the morning. There is agreement between Matthew, Mark and Luke that darkness fell over the earth at or about the sixth hour until the ninth. And there is agreement between Matthew and Mark (Luke implicitly) that Jesus died at or about the ninth hour. These points help set the chronological background needed to start examining the various views of reconciliation between Mark and John.

Conclusion

In summary, inerrancy applies to the original autographs of the Bible, does not require "modern technical precision," and is not negated by differences in parallel passages that have not been resolved. So, while the time of Jesus' death as a case study does not prove the doctrine of inerrancy neither does it disprove it either. One area that could use further research would be to look at ancient Roman court records for hour reckonings to see if they indeed reflect a Roman civil day or if they refer to daylight hours.

Regardless of one's view to a potential solution, exegetes and Bible translators need to be cautious that they do not communicate to English readers times and other measurements that express a greater level of precision than is really there. In regard to times, this is certainly the case. For example if someone sees 9:00 a.m. in a commentary or Bible translation they probably assume it does not mean 8:50 or 9:15. Even when the first hour started and how long an hour lasted in the ancient world lasted was dependent on location and time of year; this convention has great variance with the way modern time is communicated and most Christians are completely unaware of this point. Another point of encouragement would be for Bible translations to put the textual variant of "three" in John 19:14, something to the effect that a few manuscripts have it. This seems warranted due to the possibility of a transcriptional error and testimony of the church fathers. All would agree that the gospel writers place much more emphasis of what Jesus did rather when he did it. The few time indicators that we have though fit their purpose in communicating those critical events the day Jesus died. And for their accounts of this day in history we are eternally grateful.

Mark 15:25 (CF. John 19:14)—Was Jesus Crucified In the Third Hour or the Sixth Hour?

https://defendinginerrancy.com/bible-solutions/Mark_15.25_(cf._John_19.14).php

PROBLEM: Mark's Gospel account says that it was the third hour (9 a.m. Jewish time) when Christ was crucified (15:25). John's Gospel says that it was about the sixth hour (12 noon Jewish time) when Jesus was still on trial (19:14). This would make His crucifixion much later than specified by Mark. Which Gospel is correct?

SOLUTION: Both Gospel writers are correct in their assertions. The difficulty is answered when we realize that each Gospel writer used a different time system. John follows the Roman time system while Mark follows the Jewish time system.

According to Roman time, the day ran from midnight to midnight. The Jewish 24 hour period began in the evening at 6 p.m. and the morning of that day began at 6 a.m. Therefore, when Mark asserts that at the third hour Christ was crucified, this was about 9 a.m. John stated that Christ's trial was about the sixth hour. This would place the trial before the crucifixion and this would not negate any testimony of the Gospel writers. This fits with John's other references to time. For example, he speaks about Jesus being weary from His journey from His trip from Judea to Samaria at the "sixth hour" and asking for water from the woman at the well. Considering the length of His trip, His weariness, and the normal evening time when people come to the well to drink and to water their animals, this fits better with 6 p.m., which is "the sixth hour" of the night by Roman time reckoning. The same is true of John's reference to the tenth hour in John 1:39, which would be 10 a.m., a more likely time to be out preaching than 4 [p].m.

What Does John Mean by the Sixth Hour?

There is a controversial verse in John that commentators have debated; John pictures the Messiah before Pilate at the sixth hour, with a band of chief priests demanding his crucifixion:

> YLT John 19:14 and it was the preparation of the passover, and as it were the sixth hour, and he saith to the Jews, 'Lo, your king!'
> YLT John 19:15 and they cried out, 'Take away, take away, crucify him;' Pilate saith to them, 'Your king shall I crucify?' the chief priests answered, 'We have no king except Caesar.'
> YLT John 19:16 Then, therefore, he delivered him up to them, that he may be crucified, and they took Jesus and led him away,

Some have thought verse 14 was a scribal error, for how could Jesus be here with Pilate about noon (the sixth hour) when the other Gospels say he was on the cross at the third hour (9 AM)? Commentators have pointed to a manuscript error since a few weaker manuscripts have "third hour" in the Greek. However, in his Textual Commentary of the Greek New Testament, Bruce Metzger points out that the manuscripts that change "sixth hour" to "third hour" are "an obvious attempt to harmonize the chronology with that of Mark 15:25." He goes on to say that while some believe the disagreement arose when copyists confused the Greek numerals 3 and 6, the manuscript evidence is "overwhelmingly in support of" the Greek word for "sixth."

Some may jump to the conclusion that the scriptures contradict each other and that we should therefore throw our Bibles away and go home.

I believe, however, that the truth lies in the Jewish idiom for the sixth hour and what this hour meant to John and the other Jews as it relates to the Passover. From the Talmud, the importance of the sixth hour to Jews becomes clear, for the Passover had to be selected by the sixth hour, and from the sixth hour on was the legal time to kill the Passover. The other Greek word John used (ὡς), which Young's properly translates into "as it were" (John 19:14 above), shows its subtle meaning. John used the Jewish natural-to-spiritual idiom to say the "sixth hour" in the natural sense, but he means the sixth hour in the spiritual sense by saying "as it were the sixth hour." John subtly referred to Christ as the Passover in other ways also, one of them below:

> NAS John 19:32 The soldiers therefore came, and broke the legs of the first man, and of the other man who was crucified with Him;
> NAS John 19:33 but coming to Jesus, when they saw that He was already dead, they did not break His legs;
> NAS John 19:36 For these things came to pass, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, "Not a bone of Him shall be broken."

John connects this truth from the scripture (concerning the command for the Passover sacrifice) with something that the Jews would understand from their history and in their idiom:

> NAS Exodus 12:46 "It is to be eaten in a single house; you are not to bring forth any of the flesh outside of the house, nor are you to break any bone of it.

Many have also wondered why there was darkness over the land from the sixth hour (noon) until the ninth hour (3 PM) on the day of the Crucifixion:

> NAS Matthew 27:45 Now from the sixth hour darkness fell upon all the land until the ninth hour.

Some commentators believed it was a solar eclipse, but Edersheim points out that there can be no eclipse at the time of the full moon, when Passover always occurs. Some say it was because God could not bear to look upon His son as he suffered, but if this were the true reason, then why did God not cause the darkness right at the third hour (around 9 AM) when Jesus was nailed to the cross, instead of waiting until the sixth hour?

I believe the truth is found in the fact that the sixth hour was the final time for the Passovers to be designated, and the lawful time after which the Passover sacrifice could be killed (as we saw in the earlier quotes from Philo and the Talmud). God's causing the darkness over the land at noon was His way of saying He would no longer look upon or accept the animal sacrificial system. This darkness at noon also fulfilled the scripture given by the prophet Amos:

> JPS Amos 8:9 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord GOD, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day.
> JPS Amos 8:10 And I will turn your feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation; and I will bring up sackcloth upon all loins, and baldness upon every head; and I will make it as the mourning for an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day.

God had now sent His son as a fulfillment of the sacrificial system, and He would no longer accept the sacrifices in the Temple. Thousands of the Jewish faithful would have been making ready (with their lambs already designated) at noon for the daily continual sacrifice to commence (remember Josephus said the doors for this afternoon Temple service open at noon). They would have had their spotless lambs picked out and ready to be sacrificed in the Temple, where their blood would be poured out at the altar before the great Holy of Holies. Some of these people would have had their Passover lambs in tow as they passed by the commotion where Christ was alongside the road on the cross, not far from the Temple. The Passover was the one time of year when the common Israelite could approach this great altar and sacrifice his Passover lamb; all other sacrifices were commanded by God to be performed by the priests.

Jesus said Peter would deny him three times before the cock crows. In fact that early morning "cock crow" ("cock summons" in Greek) was not a rooster, as many suppose, but the calling out to the priests to make ready for the morning sacrifice. There were three callings (summons) that went forth: early, middle, and late. The Talmud shows that there were twelve cocks (similar to faucets) at the laver in the Temple where the priests would first wash their hands and feet to prepare for the sacrifices. The Jewish Encyclopedia (under Gebini) says this Temple crier's voice (cock crow) could be heard for miles as he called the priests to prepare for the sacrifice.

So while the priests were being summoned to the Temple to make ready for the morning sacrifice, Christ was being led toward the Crucifixion. The reason the chief priests are pictured at the cross at the time of the Crucifixion but not seen at the time of death is that by then they were already back readying for the Passover sacrifice in the Temple (Mark 15:29–33). Those "passing by" (some even reviling the Messiah) were most likely on their way to the Temple, bringing their lamb sacrifice alongside them, all set for the day's proceedings. They thought they were going to offer their Passover sacrifice, all the while missing the fact that Christ—the true Passover—was fulfilling God's plan.

However, starting later this day, these lamb sacrifices in the Temple would no longer be accepted by God for atonement. Only by accepting the sacrifice of His son, Christ our Passover, is there forgiveness of sin. When Christ our Passover loudly cried out, "It is finished," around 3 PM, the darkness fled away. The lamb of God had paid the penalty for our sins, the sacrifice was complete, and the price for our atonement was paid.

God was now going to allow each person to make their own decision as to whether they would accept God's provision for sin, His own beloved son, the true Passover sacrifice. As the light of the sun again showed forth and the events of the day became widely known, many hearts had to wrestle with a decision. Once the sunlight came back out, there must have been pandemonium in the Temple among the priests and the multitudes who were waiting with their lambs as the darkness went away. The people beheld that the veil before the Holy of Holies was now torn in half and that the venerated place of God's presence and glory now lay bare and open before them. Not far away at Golgotha, at the foot of the cross, the Roman centurion spoke out, declaring, "truly this was the son of God" (Matthew 27:54).

So when we think back to John's words about the sixth hour (John 19:14), we must consider that there may be another truth being shown, before we take the position that the scriptures contradict themselves.

God's plan of redemption for humanity was fulfilled. Just as Joseph had comforted his brethren and told them that his being sold into Egypt was all part of God's plan from the beginning to preserve many people alive, so would the Lord speak similar words of comfort to all today.

> NAS Genesis 50:20 "And as for you, you meant evil against me, but God meant it for good in order to bring about this present result, to preserve many people alive. The Nation of Israel, too, will see these things, as given in the following prophecy by Zechariah:
> > NAS Zechariah 12:10 "And I will pour out on the house of David and on the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Spirit of grace and of supplication, so that they will look on Me whom they have pierced; and they will mourn for Him, as one mourns for an only

Night Watches

The Jews, like the Greeks and Romans, divided the night into military watches instead of hours, each watch representing the period for which sentinels or pickets remained on duty.

The proper Jewish reckoning recognized only three such watches: entitled the first or "beginning of the watches," (Lamentations 2:19) the middle watch, (Judges 7:19) and the morning watch. (Exodus 14:24; 1 Samuel 11:11) These would last respectively from sunset to 10 P.M.; from 10 P.M. to 2 A.M.; and from 2 A.M. to sunrise.

After the establishment of the Roman supremacy, the number of watches was increased to four: which were described either according to their numerical order as in the case of the "fourth watch," (Matthew 14:25) or by the terms "even," "midnight," "cock-crowing" and "morning." (Mark 13:35) These terminated respectively at 9 P.M., midnight, 3 A.M. and 6 A.M.

The Jewish day began at sundown. The daytime was divided into 12 seasonal hours, but the day division of hours was focused on the schedule of the Tamid sacrifice.

Ma'ariv or evening prayer began at sundown [hours of prayer see Mishnah Berakhot]. According to the Jewish Book of Why, volume I the Ma'ariv is a later addition, instituted after the destruction of the Temple in AD 70. The Jewish Talmud records the late addition of the Ma'ariv service which is not connected with the sacrificial system. [Jewish Book of Why, volume I, page 148].

The end of each watch was signaled by a trumpet signal as Jesus noted in Mark 13:35:
So stay awake, because you do not know when the master of the house is coming: evening, midnight, cockcrow or dawn.

Cock Crow

The "cockcrow" was a trumpet call at 3 AM that signaled the end of the third night watch and the beginning of the fourth and last watch from 3-6 AM. The "cockcrow" is mentioned frequently in the Mishnah as a trumpet signal and also in the diaries of Christian pilgrims visiting Jerusalem in the 4th century AD. In Jesus time and as long as the Temple stood, it was, for example, the time when the altar in the inner courtyard of the Temple was cleansed (Mishnah: Yoma, 1:8), and it was the signal for the Superintendent of the Temple to call the priests to awake, ritually bathe and dress before presenting themselves for the first drawing of lots for preparing for the morning worship service

(Mishnah: Tamid, 1:2). Later it also became the signal when Christian pilgrims were called to early morning prayers. The 4th century AD Spanish lady Egeria mentioned the signal of the "cockcrow" frequently in her diary and St. Hippolytus wrote that cockcrow prayers were always said in Church in obedience to evangelical counsel.(6)

In Jerusalem there were two different groups of night watchmen. The Levitical guards at the Temple kept the four night watches and signaled the "cockcrow" with a trumpet blast at 3 AM and the Roman soldiers at the Antonia Fortress also kept the four night watches and signaled the "cockcrow" trumpet at 3 AM. In Mark's Gospel Jesus tells Peter: "Amen, I say to you, this very night before the cockcrows twice you will deny me three times" (Mark 14:30; emphasis added), noting the historical double "cockcrow."

With this last exchange, Jesus and the Apostles reach the Mt. of Olives and Jesus' appointment with His destiny.

Twelve "cocks" or faucets were present at the laver in the Temple where the priests washed in preparation before the sacrifices were brought. The cock crow, or cock summons, was a calling out to the priests, either by a loud calling with a man's voice (as described in the Babylonian Talmud, Book 3, Tract Yomah, ch. 1, pp. 27–28, and also The Jewish Encyclopedia under "Gebeni") or with a trumpet. There were early, middle, and late summonses. The cock crow is what Jesus referred to when, shortly before he was led out to the crucifixion, he told Peter that he would deny him three times before the second cock crow (Mark 14:30). Thus, he was not referring to a rooster as many have supposed, but to the second calling of the priests for the sacrifice.

What is a “Cock’s Crow”?

This is a good question because the Mishnah (m.Bava Kamma 7:7) states that:

> אין מגדלין תרנגולים בירושלים.
> We may not raise chickens in Jerusalem.

The reason for this is not the dung directly (dung is not actually ritually unclean). But there is a concern that the chickens may contaminate the sacrifices with the unclean creatures they might drag out of the dungheaps. (Remember, some sacrifices were eaten anywhere in Jerusalem, not just the Temple courts.)

"Cock's crow" is a technical term in Jewish law: kri'at hagever (קריאת הגבר). It is a time of day prior to dawn that marks the end of night.

The Mishnah (m.Yoma 1:8) describes how the removal of the ashes form the altar in the Temple was performed:

> בכל יום תורמין את המזבח בקריאת הגבר או סמוך לו, בין לפניו בין לאחריו.
> Every day they would remove the ashes at kri'at hagever or around that time, before or after.

In the Gemara (b.Yoma 20b) there is a disagreement as to whether the term kri'at hagever literally means "call of the man" or "call of the rooster":

> מאי קריאת הגבר? רב אמר קרא גברא, רבי שילא אמר: קרא תרנגולא.
> What is kri'at hagever? Rav said, "Call of the man." Rabbi Shila said, "Call of the rooster."

The Gemara continues by explaining that they are both right. In the Temple precinct, there was a Temple crier who called out to begin the service. Everywhere else, the time would be determined by an actual rooster crowing.

> גביני כרוז מהו אומר - עמדו כהנים לעבודתכם ולוים לדוכנכם וישראל למעמדכם, והיה קולו נשמע בשלש פרסאות. מעשה באגריפס המלך שהיה בא בדרך ושמע קולו בשלש פרסאות, וכשבא לביתו שיגר לו מתנות.
> Gabbini the Temple crier--what did he say? "Rise up, O priests, to your service, and Levites, to your platform, and Israelites to your posts!" His voice was audible for three parasangs. Once it happened that King Agrippa was going along and heard his voice from three parasangs, and when he got home he sent him gifts.

The following is what Easton's Dictionary comments on the cock crow:
Cock-crowing In our Lord's time the Jews had adopted the Greek and Roman division of the night into four watches, each consisting of three hours, the first beginning at six o'clock in the evening (Luk_12:38; Mat_14:25; Mar_6:48). But the ancient division, known as the first and second cock-crowing, was still retained. The cock usually crows several times soon after midnight (this is the first crowing), and again at the dawn of day (and this is the second crowing). Mark mentions (Mar_14:30) the two cock-crowings. Matthew (Mat_26:34) alludes to that only which was emphatically the cock-crowing, viz, the second.

The fulfillment of the Lord's prophecies about Peter's denials is recorded by all four Gospel authors. The context of the fulfillment in Matthew, Luke, and John is not in reference to the first crow but clearly refers to the second rooster crow, which was the significant crowing of the cock that caused Peter to remember the Lord's prophecy. The two crows were separated by about an hour, so the second crow can rightly be described by the words "the rooster crowed" (Luke 22:60). These accounts are not contradictory; rather, they are complementary.

How Romans Measured Time

The Sundial

In ancient days time was measured by the length of time there was sunlight. The Romans too used the sun's movement. As the earth makes its way around the sun, the number of daylight hours change. They could precisely measure only three times, sunrise, midday, and sunset, but they used the length of shadows to estimate other times of the day. The introduction of the sundial gave the Romans a new tool to better measure time. Travelers from Sicily brought the sundial to Rome in 263 B.C. and set it up in the Forum, where it became a popular place. People came to check the time, to socialize, and "to see and to be seen." Other sundials were set up in public buildings or squares and also became meeting spots. Only the wealthy could afford to have one in their own homes and it quickly became a status symbol.

The sundial enabled the Romans to divide the day into 12 equal parts, or hours. The hours became a way to mark time and meetings. Courts opened at about the third hour, for example, and lunch was at midday, the sixth hour. People would go home to eat a leisurely lunch and take a siesta, returning to work in a few hours. People in Rome today still leave work at 1:00 and return to work from 4:00 to 7:00.

The term 'hora' was given to 1/12 of daylight time. Borrowing Babylonian texagestimal time divisions, each hora was divided into 60 minutae primae. Each pars minuta prima (minute) was divided into 60 partes minutae secundae (seconds). However, one cannot use a minute or second as we do today since these stretched or shrunk according to the amount of light each day. Fortunately Italy is not like Alaska where one can easily experience darkness for 22 hours with daylight for but 2 hours. Using Roman calculations, one would have an hour every ten contemporary minutes.

Waterclock

Sundial

Divisions of the day:

The day was divided into ante meridiem (before midday) and post meridiem (after midday.) These divisions are still used today and abbreviated a.m. and p.m.

- First hour (prima hora)-about 7:00 a.m.
- Sixth hour (sexta hora)-midday
- Twelfth hour (duodecima hora)- hour before sunset (about 6:00 p.m.)
- Night time was divided into 4 watches (vigiliae)
- sunrise-solis ortus
- midday-meridies
- sunset- solis occasus

Before sundials time was measured with waterclocks and sand glasses.

Beginning of the Roman Day (and in relation to New Testament writers):

The Roman civil and religious day began at midnight from a very early time. Unger (1892) and Ramsay (1896) maintain that the hours of the day and the night were always counted from dusk, or dawn, hence that the "sixth hour" represented midnight or midday respectively. Against this Jack Finegan (1964) argues that the "sixth hour" can be counted from midnight. He maintained this position despite not having any evidence at all. As an explanation, he referenced the time in which Jesus was at Pilate (sixth hour) and the time in which he was crucified (third hour). Consequently, he argued that because of such supposed roman time, in texts such as the New Testament it is not always clear whether local time or Roman time is meant. For example the Gospel of John makes reference to Pilate having said "behold your king" to the people of Jerusalem at "the sixth hour". If it was accounted as Hebrew time, it was noon or midnight, but if John used the supposed Roman time, it was six o'clock in the morning, whereas Mark refers to Christ being crucified at the "third hour," darkness from "the sixth hour to the ninth hour," and Christ's last words shortly after the "ninth hour". If John wrote from Ephesus after the year AD 70, then he would not be writing from a Palestinian context, nor to a Palestinian audience, and so the most sensible time reference would not be according to the Jewish rendering which neither he nor his audience would be utilizing, but according to the Roman counting.

Hebrew Feast Calendar

Today, most of the Western world uses the Gregorian calendar, established by Pope Gregory VIII in 1582. It is a calendar based on the solar year, with 365 days and an additional leap year added every 4 years to approximate the 365.25-day solar year. The ancient Jewish calendar, however, is considerably more complicated as it is based on the movements of both the sun and moon. As a result, the Gregorian calendar dates for the Hebrew feasts changes from year to year.

The Hours of Prayer for the Old Covenant Church in the 1st century AD

The first hour of prayer:
9AM is the first hour of prayer [see Acts 2:15] when the Temple gates opened. The Hebrew word for this hour of prayer is "Shacharit"(morning). According to Jewish time this is the 3rd hour (the third hour from sunrise); according to Roman time this is the 9th hour (Roman time for each day began at 12 midnight).
The second hour of prayer:
3PM is the second hour of prayer [Acts 3:1; 10:9]. The Hebrew word for this hour of prayer is "Minchah" (gift-offering). This hour of prayer was known as the "hour of confession." The next day began at sundown, or about 6PM. According to Jewish time this is the 9th hour; according to Roman time this is the 15th hour.

Notice that the Jewish hours of prayer correspond to the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. According to St. Mark, Jesus went to the cross at the third hour, which in Jewish time corresponds to our 9AM [Mark 15:25].

The Hebrew word for the third hour of prayer is "Ma'ariv"
"Ma'ariv" or evening prayer began at sundown [hours of prayer see Mishnah Berakhot]. According to the Jewish Book of Why, volume I the "Ma'ariv" is a later addition, after the destruction of the Temple in 70AD. The Jewish Talmud records the late addition of the Ma'ariv service which is not connected with the sacrificial system.

TAMID (Heb. תָּמִיד), the ninth or tenth tractate of the order Kodashim in the Mishnah and the Babylonian Talmud. Tamid is an abbreviated form for olat tamid ("daily burnt-offering") and refers to the daily (morning and evening) sacrifices as set out in Exodus 29:38–42 and Numbers 28:1–8 (cf. II Kings 16:15; Ezek. 46:13–15; Neh. 10:34, and II Chron. 13:11). This tractate is not actually concerned with these sacrifices; it gives a description of the morning work in the Temple, from the moment the priests set about their work early in the morning until after the tamid sacrifice was organized later in the morning. Little controversy is recorded here in the Mishnah, a sign of an early redaction, probably from just before or soon after the destruction of the Temple. In current editions of the Mishnah and Talmud, Tamid has seven chapters, but originally it seems to have had only six, the present seventh being included in the sixth, and this explains its position after Keritot and Me'ilah, which also have six chapters each.

Chapter 1 discusses the priestly night watches and the preparations for the morning sacrifice, in particular the clearing of the ashes of the previous day's offerings from the altar. Chapter 2 deals mainly with laying a new fire on the altar. Chapter 3 deals with casting lots to determine which priests have to perform the various sacrificial duties. Chapter 4 describes in detail how the lamb was slaughtered and prepared for the sacrifice. Chapter 5 states that the recital of the *Shema prayer in the Temple was preceded by a blessing and was followed by three others, including the biblical priestly benediction. Chapter 6 treats of the offering of incense. Chapter 7 first discusses the high priest's entry, his prostration and the accompanying ceremonials, and the way in which the high priest and common priests administered the priestly benediction. Then follows a long paragraph setting out in detail the special ceremonial, when the high priest himself participated in the sacrificial service. At the end of the chapter is the phrase, "this is the order of the Tamid …," which seems to conclude the tractate. Yet, in current editions, there is an additional passage giving the list of psalms sung by the levites on different days of the week. The Mishnah of Tamid is that of *Simeon of Mizpah as is established by the Talmud (Yoma 14b). The Mishnah of Yoma 2:3–4 derives from that of Tamid, and a comparison between them indicates that the text in Tamid is a later compilation. The Mishnah of Tamid has a distinct Hebrew style containing expressions not found elsewhere in the Mishnah. Tamid was translated into English by M. Simon in the Soncino edition (1948).

Jesus' Sacrifice and the Daily Liturgy of the Tamid Sacrifice in the Temple

The communal sacrifice of the Tamid was the most important ritual sacrifice of the Sinai Covenant. It was a single sacrifice of two yearling lambs, one offered in a morning liturgical worship service and the second in an afternoon liturgical worship service; each lamb offered together with unleavened bread and red wine (Ex 29:38-42; Num 28:3-9).[1] It was the compulsory communal daily sacrifice for the atonement and sanctification of the covenant people. However, Jewish philosopher and theologian Philo of Alexandria (d. 50 AD) wrote that the daily Tamid sacrifice was not only offered for the covenant people but on behalf of all mankind (The Special Laws I, 35 [168]).

The olat ha-Tamid, "whole burnt offering of the standing" ("standing" as in continual/perpetual) was the only compulsory communal sacrifice of the Sinai Covenant before the failure of Israel in making and worshiping the Golden Calf and remained the premier sacrifice when the ritual of animal sacrifice was expanded after the Golden Calf (Ex 29:38-42; 32:1-35). It was so important that no other sacrifice was to take precedence over it. All other sacrifices, including the Passover and Sabbath sacrifices, were offered in addition to the Tamid, a command repeated fifteen times in the Torah of Moses (Num 28:10, 15, 23, 24, 31; 29:6, 11, 16, 19, 22, 25, 28, 31, 34, 38).

When St. John identified Jesus in His perfect humanity and divinity as "the Lamb of God who takes away the sins of the world" to the Jewish crowd on the banks of the Jordan River, he was not identifying Jesus with the annual Passover sacrifice of lambs and kids (Ex 12:5) but instead with the daily offering of the two unblemished male lambs of the Tamid sacrifice. According to rabbinic teaching, this single sacrifice of two lambs was to last so long as the Sinai Covenant endured and when it ended in the coming of the Messianic era only the "Thanksgiving" (Toda in Hebrew; Eucharistia in the Greek) communion sacrifice of peace would continue (Joseph Ratsinger [Pope Benedict XVI], Feast of Faith, page 58; Baruch Levine, JPS Torah Commentary: Leviticus, page 43).

Notice in the chart above that the daily sacrifice of the Tamid corresponds with the Passion of the Christ: Jesus was condemned at about the time the first Tamid lamb was brought out to the altar and given a drink from a golden cup. Jesus was crucified at the third hour Jewish time, (9 AM) as the first Tamid lamb was sacrificed in the Temple. The second lamb was brought to the altar at noon, given a drink and sacrificed at about the ninth hour (3 PM). The "whole land" turned dark from an eclipse of the sun from noon to three in the afternoon (Mt 27:45; Mk 14:33; Lk 23:44), and Jesus gave up His life at the ninth hour/three in the afternoon just as the second Tamid lamb was sacrificed (Mt 27:46; Mk 14:34). The Tamid was one single sacrifice of two lambs and Jesus was one single sacrifice of He who is fully God and fully man.

Passover was crystallized when Jesus died on the cross, exactly on Passover day. The Lamb was sacrificed. This the interesting, at the Jewish temple, they sacrifices 2 perfect lamb, one in the morning offering at 9 AM and the other afternoon offering at 3 PM.

The Jewish day began at sundown. The daytime was divided into 12 seasonal hours, but the day division of hours was focused on the schedule of the Tamid sacrifice. In the first century AD the night was divided into 4 night watches of 3 hours each: from sun down to 9PM; from 9PM to 12 midnight; from 12 midnight to 3AM; and from 3AMto dawn. A trumpet call, known as the "cockcrow" signaled the end of the 3rd and beginning of the 4th watch.

The day was divided into 12 seasonal hours. Dawn and high noon were easily determined by the position of the sun, but the actual sacrifices three hours after dawn at the 3rd hour, or at our 9AM, and the afternoon sacrifice at the 9th hour, or our 3PM, were determined by the use of a sundial or a water-clock.

Feasts and Festivals of Israel

The major festivals of Old Testament Israel were, in calendar order, Passover, Unleavened Bread, Firstfruits, the Feast of Weeks (Pentecost), the Feast of Trumpets, the Day of Atonement, and the Feast of Booths (Tabernacles or Ingathering). After the exile, the Jews added memorial days for the fall of Jerusalem (eventually fixed as the Ninth of Ab), Purim, and the Feast of Dedication (Hanukkah). In addition, the Israelites observed the Sabbath every week and the feast of the New Moon every lunar month.

Israel's festivals were communal and commemorative as well as theological and typological. They were communal in that they drew the nation together for celebration and worship as they recalled the common origin and experience of the people. They were commemorative in that they kept alive the story of what God had done in the exodus and during the sojourn. They were theological in that the observance of the festivals presented the participants with lessons on the reality of sin, judgment, and forgiveness, on the need for thanksgiving to God, and on the importance of trusting God rather than hoarding possessions. They were typological in that they anticipated a greater fulfillment of the symbolism of the feasts. It is not surprising that each of the major feasts is in some way alluded to in the New Testament. On the other hand, the festivals could become meaningless rituals and were subject to the criticism of the prophets (Isaiah 1:13-14).

that people in OT times were wholly occupied with the business of atonement for sins and to regard their worship as a somber and dreary necessity. The Psalms especially testify to the joy of the pilgrims journeying to Jerusalem and the longing of the godly to meet with God and his people in the courts of his temple (* e.g. Psalms 122,42,43,48; 118:19-29). Indeed, praise and thanksgiving belonged to the whole life of God's people.

Feasts, and Fasts

fe ̄sts (מועד, mo ̄ʿe ̄dh, "an appointed day" or "an assembling," חג, hagh, from חגג, ha ̄ghagh, "to dance" or possibly "to make a pilgrimage"; צום, co ̄m, "fast," תענית, taʿa ̆nīth, "a day of affliction"):

The Nature of the Hebrew Festivals

I. Pre-Exilic

2. Significance of the Festivals

II. Post-Exilic

Significance

The Nature of the Hebrew Festivals

The Hebrews had an abundance of holidays, some based, according to their tradition, on agriculture and the natural changes of times and seasons, some on historical events connected with the national or religious life of Israel, and still others simply on immemorial custom. in most instances two or more of these bases coexist, and the emphasis on the natural, the agricultural, the national, or the religious phase will vary with different writers, different context, or different times. Any classification of these feasts and fasts on the basis of original significance must therefore be imperfect.

We should rather classify them as preëxilic and post-exilic, because the period of the Babylonian captivity marks a complete change, not only in the kinds of festivals instituted from time to time, but also in the manner of celebrating the old.

I. Pre-Exilic

The pre-exilic list includes the three pilgrimage festivals, the Passover week, Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles, together with the Eighth Day of Assembly at the conclusion of the last of these feasts, and New Year and Atonement Days, the weekly Sabbath and the New Moon.

1. Observances Common to All

The preëxilic festivals were "holy convocations" (Lev 23; Nu 28). Special sacrifices were offered on them in addition to the daily offerings. These sacrifices, however, varied according to the character of the festival (Nu 28; 29). On all of them trumpets (ha ̆co ̄cᵉro ̄th) were blown while the burnt offerings and the peace-offerings were being sacrificed (Num_10:10). They were all likened to the weekly Sabbath as days of rest, on which there must be complete suspension of all ordinary work (Lev_16:29; Lev_23:7, Lev_23:8, Lev_23:21, Lev_23:24, Lev_23:25, Lev_23:28, Lev_23:35, Lev_23:36).

2. Significance of the Festivals

The three pilgrimage festivals were known by that name because on them the Israelites gathered at Jerusalem to give thanks for their doubly joyful character. They were of agricultural significance as well as commemorative of national events. Thus, the Passover is connected with the barley harvest; at the same time it is the zemaneh ru th, recalling the Exodus from Egypt (Exo_12:6; Lev_23:5, Lev_23:8; Num_28:16-25; Deu_16:1-8).

Pentecost has an agricultural phase as hagh ha-bikkurim, the celebration of the wheat harvest; it has a religious phase as zemaneh mattan Thorah in the Jewish liturgy, based on the rabbinical calculation which makes it the day of the giving of the Law, and this religious side has so completely overshadowed the agricultural that among modern Jews the Pentecost has become “confirmation day” (Exo_34:26; Lev_23:10-14; Num_28:26-31).

The Feast of Tabernacles is at once the general harvest festival, hagh he-'asiph, and the anniversary of the beginnings of the wanderings in the wilderness (Exo_23:16; Lev_23:33; Deu_16:13-15). The Eighth Day of Assembly immediately following the last day of Tabernacles (Lev_23:36; Num_29:35; Joh_7:37) and closing the long cycle of Tishri festivals seems to have been merely a final day of rejoicing before the pilgrims returned to their homes.

New Year (Lev_23:23-25; Num_29:1-6) and the Day of Atonement (Lev_16:1; Lev_23:26-32; Num_29:7-11) marked the turning of the year; primarily, perhaps, in the natural phenomena of Palestine, but also in the inner life of the nation and the individual. Hence, the religious significance of these days as days of judgment, penitence and forgiveness soon overshadowed any other significance they may have had. The temple ritual for these days, which is minutely described in the Old Testament and in the Talmud, was the most elaborate and impressive of the year. At the same time Atonement Day was socially an important day of rejoicing.

In addition to these annual festivals the pre-exilic Hebrews celebrated the Sabbath (Num_28:9, Num_28:10; Lev_23:1-3) and the New Moon (Num_10:10; Num_28:11-15). By analogy to the weekly Sabbath, every seventh year was a Sabbath Year (Exo_23:11; Lev_25:1-7; Deu_15:1), and every cycle of seven Sabbath years was closed with a Jubilee Year (Lev_25:8-18) somewhat after the analogy of the seven weeks counted before Pentecost.

For further details of all of these preëxilic festivals see the separate articles.

II. Post-Exilic

In post-exilic times important historical events were made the basis for the institution of new fasts and feasts. When the first temple was destroyed and the people were carried into captivity, “the sacrifice of the body and one's own fat and blood” were substituted for that of animals (see Talmud, Berakhoth 17*a*). With such a view of their importance, fasts of all sorts were as a matter of course rapidly multiplied. (Note that the Day of Atonement was the only pre-exilic fast.) Of these post-exilic fasts and feasts, the Feast of Dedication (1 Macc 4:52-59; Joh_10:22; Mishna, Ta'anith 2 10; Mo'edh Katon 3 9; Josephus, Ant, XII, vii; Apion, II, xxxix) and the Feast of Purim (Est_3:7; Est_9:24; 2 Macc 15:36); and the fasts of the fourth (Zec_8:19; Jer 39; 52; Mishna, Ta'anith 4 6), the fifth (Zec_7:3, Zec_7:1; Zec_8:19; Ta'anith 4 6), the seventh (Zec_7:5; Zec_8:19; Jer_41:1; 2Ki_25:25; Seder 'Olam Rabba' 26; Meghillath Ta'anith c. 12), the tenth months (Zec_8:19; 2 Ki 25), and the Fast of Esther (Est_4:16 f; Est_9:31) have been preserved by Jewish tradition to this day. (The Feast of Dedication, the Feast of Purim and the Fast of Esther are described in separate articles.)

Significance

The fasts of the fourth, fifth, seventh and tenth months are based on historical incidents connected with one or more national calamities. In several instances the rabbis have by close figuring been able to connect with the dates of the fasts as well as the feasts other important national events than those for which the days were primarily instituted. Not less than four incidents are connected with the fasts of the fourth month (17th of Tammuz): (a) on this day the Israelites made the golden calf; (b) Moses broke the tables of law; (c) The daily sacrifices ceased for want of cattle when the city was closely besieged prior to the destruction of Jerusalem; and (d) on this day Jerusalem was stormed by Nebuchadnezzar. The fast of the fifth month (9th day of 'A ̄bh) receives its significance from the fact that the First Temple was destroyed upon this day by Nebuchadnezzar, and the Second Temple on the same day of the year by Titus. In addition it is said that on this day Yahweh decreed that those who left Egypt should not enter the land of promise; the day is also the anniversary of the capture of the city of Bether by the Emperor Hadrian. The fast of the seventh month (the 3rd day of Tishrī) commemorates the murder of Gedaliah at Mizpah. That of the tenth month (10th day of Tebheth) commemorates the beginning of the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar.

Other fasts and feasts no doubt were instituted on similar occasions and received a local or temporary observance, for example, the Feast of Acra (1 Macc 13:50-52; compare 1:33), to celebrate the recapture of Acra (“the citadel”) on the 23rd of 'I ̄ya ̄r 141 bc, and the Feast of Nicanor, in celebration of the victory over Nicanor on the 13th day of 'A ̆dha ̄r 160 bc (1 Macc 7:49).

Several other festivals are mentioned in the Talmud and other post-Biblical writings which may have been of even greater antiquity. The Feast of Woodcarrying (Midsummer Day: Neh_10:34; Josephus, BJ, II, vii, 6; Meghillath Ta ʿa ̆nīth c.v, p. 32, Mishna, Ta ʿa ̆nīth 4 8a), for example, is referred to as the greatest day of rejoicing of the Hebrews, ranking with Atonement Day. It was principally a picnic day to which a religious touch was given by making it the woodgatherers' festival for the Temple. A New Year for trees is mentioned in the Talmud (Ro ̄'sh ha-Sha ̄na ̄h 1 1). The pious, according both to the Jewish tradition and the New Testament, observed many private or semi-public fasts, such as the Mondays, Thursdays and following Monday after Nīsan and Tishrī (the festival months: Luke 8:12; Matthew 9:14; Matthew 6:16; Mark_2:18; Luke 5:33; Acts 10:30; Meghilla ̄h 31*a*; Ta ʿa ̆ nīth 12*a*; Ba ̄bha ̄ Kama ̄ 8 2). The day before Passover was a fast day for the firstborn (So ̄pherīm 21 3).

In post-Biblical times the Jews outside of Palestine doubled each of the following days: the opening and closing day of Passover and Tabernacles and Pentecost, because of the sa ̄phe ̄k, or doubt as to the proper day to be observed, growing out of the delays in the transmission of the official decree of the sanhedhrīn in each season. Differences in hours of sunrise and sunset between Palestine and other countries may have had something to do at least with the perpetuation of the custom. New Year's Day seems to have been doubled from time immemorial, the forty-eight hours counting as one “long day.”

Many new modes of observance appear in post-exilic times in connection with the old established festivals, especially in the high festival season of Tishrī. Thus the simhath be ̄th ha-sho ̄'e ̄bha ̄h, “water drawing festival,” was celebrated during the week of Tabernacles with popular games and dances in which even the elders took part, and the streets were so brilliantly illuminated with torches that scarcely an eye was closed in Jerusalem during that week (Talmud, Hullīn).

The last day of Tabernacles was known in Talmudic times as yo ̄m hibbut ʿa ̆ra ̄bho ̄th, from the custom of beating willow branches, a custom clearly antedating the various symbolical explanations offered for it. Its festivities were connected with the dismantling of the booth. In later times the day was known as ho ̄sha ʿna ̄' rabba ̄', from the liturgical passages beginning with the word ho ̄sha ʿna ̄ ', recited throughout the feast and “gathered” on that day. The day after Tabernacles has been made simhath To ̄ra ̄h, the Feast of the Law, from the custom of ending on that day the cycle of fifty-two weekly portions read in the synagogues.

In general it may be said that although the actual observance has changed from time to time to meet new conditions, the synagogal calendar of today is made up of the same festivals as those observed in New Testament times.

Jerusalem's Population during Festivals

Meir Ben-Dov has argued that Herod tried to relieve the city of Jerusalem of a “monstrous traffic jam” by building the temple. The masses of pilgrims crowding into Jerusalem during some of the festivals might number as many as 80,000 to 100,000 people. When you add these to a population of some 150,000–200,000, there could be 200,000 or more massed to witness the ceremonies performed in the temple courts. *

Parenthetically, if there were up to 100,000 pilgrims in Jerusalem at Pentecost, the conversion of 3,000 (Acts 2:41) is not as large a percentage as is often assumed. And while Peter's sermon is singled out in Acts 2, the preaching of the other apostles was necessary to reach such masses of people (see v. 7).

The three pilgrimage festivals:

According to the Torah, God commanded the Israelites: “Three times a year shall all your men appear before the Lord your God in the place that God will choose [referring presumably to the Temple in Jerusalem], on the festivals of Pesah (Passover), Shavuot (the Feast of Weeks), and Sukkot (the Festival of Booths). They shall not appear empty handed. Each shall bring his own gift, appropriate to the blessing which the Lord your God has given you” (Deuteronomy 16:16).

Essentially, in this passage, God expresses a desire for all of the male Israelites to travel to Jerusalem (this is why they are called “pilgrimage” festivals) and have the priest offer the animal sacrifice that was incumbent on each of them. It is important to note that the Torah refers only to men in this passage, because in ancient times women were not accorded the same legal or religious status as men. Despite this omission, women did have the same religious and spiritual obligations as men in offering personal sacrifices for thanksgiving and the expiation of sins.

The three pilgrimage festivals are:

(a) Passover, which celebrates the Exodus of the Jewish people from Egypt, as well as the beginning of the new planting season after the winter rains in Israel, since it falls in the early spring.

(b) Shavuot, biblically, is solely an agricultural celebration. Falling exactly seven weeks after Passover, which places it occurs at the time of the late spring harvest. [Shavuot as a celebration of the giving of the Torah is a post-biblical development.]

(c) Sukkot, which celebrates the wandering of the Israelites in the desert for 40 years, when they had to rely only upon God for food and protection. This also celebrates the last harvest festival before the onset of the winter rains in the land of Israel. It falls five days after Yom Kippur, usually in mid-autumn. At the conclusion of Sukkot the holidays of Shemini Atzeret and Simchat Torah are celebrated.

Comments relating "The Treefold Order of the Resurrection of the Righteous" (1 Corinthians 15:20-28) to the Three Jewish Pilgrimage Festivals:

"…the subtle, underlying parallel the Apostle Paul was using in I Corinthians 15 of the three Feasts of Israel being typical of the three "orders" of the resurrection of the righteous.

Basically explained, there are three times in the year God required that all the men of Israel were to appear before Him at the three designated Feasts (Exo. 23:17; 34:23 & Deut. 16:16).

Likewise, the Apostle Paul teaches that the resurrection of the righteous dead, to appear before God, will be in three stages or "order(s)." Paul said "every man in his own order" (15:23). These "orders" fit perfectly the parallel of the three designated Feasts. The signal, as it were, of what Paul was inspired to reveal was his use of the "Firstfruit wave sheaf offering" as a type of the resurrection of Christ which was the first "order" of the resurrection of the saints…

Next Paul makes the statement, "afterward, those who are Christ's." Since Christ was the Firstfruit sample, it follows that "those who are Christ's" must refer to the Harvest of Firstfruits that follows—which is the Church of Jesus Christ. "Then the end…when death is abolished" refers simply to the resurrection of the Old Testament saints, which is represented by the Feast of Ingathering at the end of the year.

Hagigah - Tractate Hagigah (literally "Festival Offering") deals with the Three Pilgrimage Festivals (Passover, Shavuot, Sukkot) and the pilgrimage offering that men were supposed to bring in Jerusalem. At the middle of the second chapter, the Talmud discusses topics of ritual purity.

A Quick Guide to the Jewish Holidays:

http://jewsforjesus.org/publications/newsletter/september-2004/quickguide

JEWISH HOLIDAY	BIBLICAL PURPOSE	HOLIDAY GREETINGS
Rosh Hashanah (rush ha shun nah) Literally, "the head of the year," Rosh Hashanah is considered the Jewish New Year. The Bible uses a different name: Yom Truah (yome true ah), which means "the Feast of Trumpets." (Lev. 23:24,25)	People gathered to hear the sound of the shofar (ram's horn) to reflect on God's judgment and their spiritual condition. Rosh Hashanah begins a ten-day period known as the Days of Awe, during which God's people were to turn to Him and away from sin.	Say "Happy New Year" or in Hebrew, "l'shanah tovah" (luh shun na toe vah) and/or send greeting cards. If you can't find Jewish New Year cards in your local stationery store, you can order a box from us.[2]
Yom Kippur (yome kee poor or yum kip per) The term "High Holidays" refers to Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur together. Literally "the Day of Atonement," Yom Kippur concludes the Days of Awe. It is the holiest and most somber day of the year. (Lev. 23:27-32)	One day of the year, the High Priest entered the Holy of Holies to put the blood of the sacrificed animal on the altar as a sin offering. Through faith, obedience to God's precise instructions resulted in atonement, or covering, for sin.	Yom Kippur is a day of fasting and reflecting upon one's sin, so it is not appropriate to wish someone a "Happy Yom Kippur."
Sukkot or Sukkus (sue coat or sook us) Literally "the Feast of Booths" (or "the Feast of Tabernacles"), this is a seven-day celebration. (Lev. 23:34-36)	This is both a harvest festival and a reminder of how God sustained the children of Israel during their wilderness wanderings. The people were to dwell in temporary booths, and to rejoice over God's provision as well as His presence. Many Jewish people still build booths in their yards or synagogues for this holiday.	You can tell Jewish friends, "Good yontif (yawn tiff)" which means "Good (or happy) holiday."
Hanukkah (ha new kah) Literally "dedication," Hanukkah is known both as the Festival of Dedication and the Festival of Lights. It is not commanded in the Scripture, though it is mentioned one time in the New Testament. (Jn. 10:22)	The holiday commemorates the dedication of the Temple after it was recaptured from the evil tyrant, Antiochus. It is also a time of rejoicing in how God enabled the Jewish people to prevail in battle when we were hopelessly outnumbered.	"Happy Hanukkah," "Good yontif," and/or send a Hanukkah card. Many people exchange gifts during this holiday, perhaps because of its proximity to Christmas.
Purim (poor im) Literally "lots," this holiday is a celebration of God's watchcare over His people as seen in the book of Esther.	Whereas the holiday is not commanded in Scripture, it is a fun day during which practical jokes are common, special holiday treats are enjoyed and the entire book of Esther is read in synagogue. Children frequently dress up as one of the characters in the story of Esther for a "Purim pageant."	"Good yontif."
Pesach (pay sokh) Literally, "Passover," this is also known as the Feast of Redemption. (Lev. 23:5,6)	God commanded His people to celebrate this holiday annually to remember how He delivered them from bondage in Egypt. Passover is actually a one-day holiday, but God also commanded the Jewish people to celebrate a seven-day Feast of Unleavened Bread. The entire eight days are commonly viewed together as Passover. On the first or second night of Passover, we have a ceremonial meal with liturgy known as the seder (say der).	"Happy Pesach," "Happy Passover," "Good yontif," and/or send a Passover card.
Shavuot (shah voo oat) or Shavuos (shah voo ose) Literally "weeks," this holiday comes seven weeks after Passover; it is also referred to as "Pentecost" because it falls 50 days after Passover. (Lev. 23:15-21)	God gave this holiday as a spring harvest celebration, during which the Israelites were to rejoice over the ingathering of the wheat crops. Jewish tradition also says that God gave Moses the Ten Commandments on Shavuot. Some people celebrate by reading from the Torah all night, and eating dairy products.	"Good yontif"

There is much more to say about each of these holidays, and how they point to the Messiah Jesus. For now, we simply wanted to provide you with an overview so you would know when the most commonly celebrated holidays are coming, and how to greet your Jewish friends. [1]We say that the holiday "begins on" because all Jewish holidays begin at sundown, the day before the actual first "day" of the holiday. PASSOVER

The Sacrifice.

The sacrificial animal, which was either a lamb or kid, was necessarily a male, one year old, and without blemish. Each family or society offered one victim together, which did not require the "semikah" (laying on of hands), although it was obligatory to determine who were to take part in the sacrifice that the killing might take place with the proper intentions. Only those who were circumcised and clean before the Law might participate; and they were forbidden to have leavened food in their possession during the act of killing the paschal lamb. The animal was slain on the eve of the Passover, on the afternoon of the 14th of Nisan, after the Tamid sacrifice had been killed, i.e., at three o'clock, or, in case the eve of the Passover fell on Friday, at two. The killing took place in the court of the Temple, and might be performed by a layman, although the blood had to be caught by a priest, and rows of priests with gold or silver cups in their hands stood in line from the Temple court to the altar, where the blood was sprinkled. These cups were rounded on the bottom, so that they could not be set down; for in that case the blood might coagulate. The priest who caught the blood as it dropped from the victim then handed the cup to the priest next to him, receiving from him an empty one, and the full cup was passed along the line until it reached the last priest, who sprinkled its contents on the altar. The lamb was then hung upon special hooks or sticks and skinned; but if the eve of the Passover fell on a Sabbath, the skin was removed down to the breast only. The abdomen was then cut open, and the fatty portions intended for the altar were taken out, placed in a vessel, salted, and offered by the priest on the altar, while the remaining entrails likewise were taken out and cleansed.

On Sabbath Eve.

Even if the eve of the Passover fell on a Sabbath, the paschal lamb was killed in the manner described above, the blood was sprinkled on the altar, the entrails removed and cleansed, and the fat offered on the altar; for these four ceremonies in the case of the paschal lamb, and these alone, were exempt from the prohibition against working on the Sabbath. This regulation, that the Sabbath yielded the precedence to the Passover, was not definitely determined until the time of Hillel, who established it as a law and was in return elevated to the dignity of nasi by the Bene Bathyra (Pes. 68a).

Passover Sacrifice – how it was conducted

Hagigah - Tractate Hagigah (literally "Festival Offering") deals with the Three Pilgrimage Festivals (Passover, Shavuot, Sukkot) and the pilgrimage offering that men were supposed to bring in Jerusalem. At the middle of the second chapter, the Talmud discusses topics of ritual purity.

The Passover Instituted

On this date, four days before the first Passover, the Feast of Passover is instituted.
On this day the lamb would be chosen that would be sacrificed on the fourteenth of Nisan.
On this same date, forty years later, Joshua would lead the nation of Israel across the Jordon River into Canaan.
On this same Monday, Nisan 10 solar date in 30 AD, Jesus would come into Jerusalem on the back of a donkey and be hailed as the Messiah. Four days later in 30 AD, on Friday, April 5−Nisan 14 on a solar calendar, many of these same people would be screaming for Pontius Pilate to “Crucify him”.

Hallel: praise, the name given to the group of Psalms 113-118, which are preeminently psalms of praise.

It is called "The Egyptian Hallel," because it was chanted in the temple whilst the Passover lambs were being slain. It was chanted also on other festival occasions, as at Pentecost, the feast of Tabernacles, and the feast of Dedication. The Levites, standing before the altar, chanted it verse by verse, the people responding by repeating the verses or by intoned hallelujahs. It was also chanted in private families at the feast of Passover.

This was probably the hymn which our Saviour and his disciples sung at the conclusion of the Passover supper kept by them in the upper room at Jerusalem (Matt. 26:30; Mark 14:26).

There is also another group called "The Great Hallel," comprehending Psalms 118-136, which was recited on the first evening at the Passover supper and on occasions of great joy.

Psalm 113-118. The Egyptian Hallel: A Cantata of Salvation:
Anything that relates to the Lord Jesus Christ is of supreme value and attractiveness for the Christian. Consequently, the strong likelihood that this group of psalms formed part of his Passover celebrations enhances their interest and importance. At the last Passover, the first Supper, he and his company would have sung Ps 113-114 before the meal and 115-118 would be the ‘hymn’ they sang at the end (Matthew 26:30). No doubt each psalm in the group had its own literary history but together they are well called ‘the Egyptian Hallel/Act of Praise’, a commentary in song on Exodus 6:6-7.

HALLEL - ha-lal', hal'-el: In the fifth book of the Psalms (107-50) there are several groups of Hallelujah Psalms: 104 through 106; 111 through 113; 115 through 117; 135; 146 through 150. In the worship of the synagogue Psalms 135 through 136 and 146 through 150 were used in the daily morning service. Psalms 113 through 118 were called the "Egyptian Hallel," and were sung at the feasts of the Passover, Pentecost, Tabernacles and Dedication. At the Passover, Psalms 113 and 114 (according to the school of Shammai only Psalms 113) were sung before the feast, and Psalms 115 through 118 after drinking the last cup. The song used by our Lord and the disciples on the night of the betrayal (Matthew 26:30), just before the departure for the Mount of Olives, probably included Psalms 115 through 118.

Bible verses about Chagigah (From Forerunner Commentary)

Deuteronomy 27:7

In their reference work, McClintock and Strong inform us that these offerings (especially those made on the first day of Unleavened Bread) were called hagigah (sometimes also transliterated chagigah), which means "festivity." These offerings were a festivity, something given in order to have a feast, a happy, festive time. If a person wanted to give God a peace offering, it was divided three ways: some to God, some to the priest, and the remainder came back to the offerer. With his portion, he would invite his family and friends, and they would have a fine time, eating a sumptuous meal and fellowshipping together.

These offerings are stipulated in Numbers 10:10. They are shown actually being offered in II Chronicles 30:22, included, in this case, under the name "Passover." But these offerings cannot be the actual Passover, because of the rules regarding the Passover having to be roasted and from a lamb or a kid of the goats. These offerings — the hagigah (or chagigah) — are shown in II Chronicles 30 quite a number of times. This was when Hezekiah had his great Passover and Feast of Unleavened Bread in the second month.

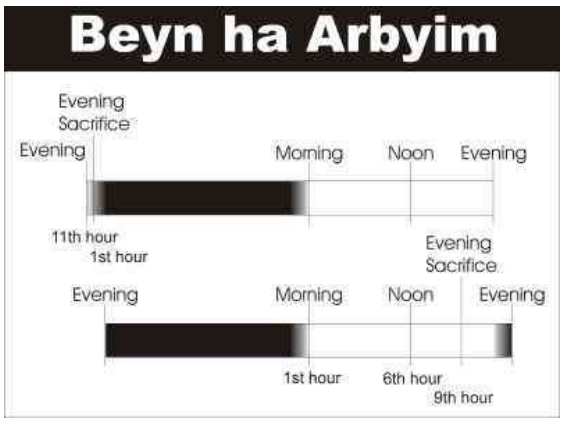
Second Passover (Pesach Sheni)

The 14th day of Iyar was the Second Passover. This day served as a "second chance" for those who were unable to attend the Passover one month earlier because of being unclean or being away on a journey.

The circumstances that led to the Second Passover was recorded in Numbers 9:1-14. There were some men who were unclean through contact with a dead body and were not allowed to participate in the Passover. They came to Moses and Aaron and voiced their concern that when the Passover sacrifice was offered, they were ritually impure and therefore unable to participate in this sacred obligation. It was then God instituted the Second Passover so that they could present their offering one month later.



The significance of the Second Passover reminds us of God's grace. He always gives us a second chance when we sinned (became unclean) or departed away from Him (away on a journey) so that we can always come back to Him and rectify our wrong doings in the past.

Hebrew: between the two evenings, The Jews divided the day into morning and evening. Till the sun passed the meridian, all was morning or forenoon; after that, all was evening or afternoon. Their first evening began just after twelve o'clock, and continued till sunset; their second evening began at sunset, and continued till night, i.e., during the whole time of twilight; between twelve o'clock, therefore, and the termination of twilight, the Passover was to be offered (see parallel passages) (Exodus 16:12; Matthew 27:46-50 Exodus 12:6).

Between the Evenings — The Legal Time to Slay the Passover

Some of the confusion as to whether the Last Supper was the Passover or not comes from the English translations of the original Hebrew words meaning “between the evenings.” The Jewish sources are clear that this period — the time to slay the Passovers — was to be in the afternoon of the 14th day. However many English translators and commentators, believing that Jesus ate the Passover at the Last Supper (and that he also died at the proper time for the Passover sacrifice), portray the period of “between the evenings” as either evening or twilight, which can imply after sunset.

This notion does not fit with Jewish history, which shows the legally allowed time for the Passover sacrifice to be between noon and sunset. Famous Jewish commentator Alfred Edersheim agrees with this, writing:

The period designated as ‘between the two evenings’ when the Paschal lamb was to be slain, was past. There can be no question that, in the time of Christ, it was understood to refer to the interval between the commencement of the sun’s decline and what was reckoned as the hour of his final disappearance (about 6 p.m.).[1]

The Jewish Encyclopedia verifies this same time frame:

> The time “between the two evenings” (“ben ha-’arbayim”) was construed to mean “after noon and until nightfall”[2]

The chart below illustrates the sun ascending (from 6 AM to noon) and descending (from noon to 6 PM, around sunset). If you picture the sun in relation to the vertical line and the horizontal line in the chart below, this line is “even” with the horizon at noon, and is again “even” with the horizon at sunset. Thus, between the even-ings is the time between noon and sunset, as both Edersheim and The Jewish Encyclopedia noted.

Part of the confusion as to whether the Last Supper was the Passover comes from the flexible meaning of the English word “evening,” for which most dictionaries include a definition of the “early part of the night.” Notice how the six English translations below give six variations (in boldface) of what began as the Hebrew phrase meaning “between the evenings”:

> KJV Exodus 12:6 And ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month: and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening.

> NAS Exodus 12:6 'And you shall keep it until the fourteenth day of the same month, then the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel is to kill it at twilight.
> LXE Exodus 12:6 And it shall be kept by you till the fourteenth of this month, and all the multitude of the congregation of the children of Israel shall kill ittoward evening.
> YLT Exodus 12:6 'And it hath become a charge to you, until the fourteenth day of this month, and the whole assembly of the company of Israel have slaughtered it between the evenings;
> NAB Exodus 12:6 You shall keep it until the fourteenth day of this month, and then, with the whole assembly of Israel present, it shall be slaughtered during the evening twilight.
> JPS Exodus 12:6 and ye shall keep it unto the fourteenth day of the same month; and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it at dusk.

We must understand how the Jews understood this Hebrew phrase and how they passed it down to successive generations, while of course giving the strongest weight to the original God-anointed Hebrew and Greek scriptures of the Bible.

Overlaying our English understanding of "evening" with its various shades of meaning onto the Hebrew and Greek scriptures can cause problems. We see this, for instance, on the day of the Crucifixion when the 15th-day high Sabbath is soon coming—the following English verse says that evening had already come (although the body of Jesus was not yet moved to the tomb):

> NAS Mark 15:42 And when evening had already come, because it was the preparation day, that is, the day before the Sabbath,
> GNT Mark 15:42 Καὶ ἤδη ὀψίας γενομένης, ἐπεὶ ἦν παρασκευὴ ὅ ἐστιν προσάββατον,
> NAS Mark 15:43 Joseph of Arimathea came, a prominent member of the Council, who himself was waiting for the kingdom of God; and he gathered up courage and went in before Pilate, and asked for the body of Jesus.

If we think of verse 42 as being correct and interpret "evening" as occurring after sundown, it would mean that prominent Jews like Joseph of Arimathea (a member of the Sanhedrin) publicly broke the Sabbath by carrying the Messiah's body to the tomb after the 15th-day Sabbath had set in. In this particular verse the solution is easy, for the Greek word όψίας, translated as "evening," means "late"; it clearly refers to "late in the Jewish day" (which ended at sunset).

This is just one example of how the time to sacrifice the Passover became confused among commentators since Roman times. When they tried to reconcile the longstanding tradition of Jesus somehow eating the 14th-day Passover at the Last Supper, then fulfilling the 14th-day Passover at the Crucifixion the following day, this idea of sacrificing the Passover in the evening gained acceptance among some. Most Jewish sources correctly state that the Passovers were sacrificed in the afternoon and not after sunset.

The Jewish word for "eve" refers to the part of the day after noon and before sunset, as we saw in the subsection "The 14th-Day True Passover" in the chapter "The Template Challenge." The irrefutable history as detailed below will show that the legal time to slay the Passover was indeed between noon and sunset. We will first consider the historical statements from the Talmud, then look at other Jewish sources (such as Josephus and Philo) to see that the Old Testament evidence perfectly aligns with these other sources. Then we will see that the New Testament scriptural evidence also harmonizes perfectly with these other Jewish writings.

What the Talmud Says

Although as believers in the God-anointed scriptures, we do not get doctrine from the Talmud, it does contain a wealth of accurate information concerning the festivals that the Jewish scholars wanted to preserve and pass down to future generations. Granted, one has to sometimes weed out certain subjects where there was an ax to grind (the Talmud written by the descendants of the Pharisees, who despised the Sadducees and also the Messiah), but there is still much of value regarding the festivals.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

First of all, a reminder that the scriptures show unequivocally that the Passover was on the 14th day, and that the seven-day Festival started as the 15th day began (at sundown of the 14th day) and lasted seven days:

> JPS Numbers 28:16 And in the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, is the LORD'S passover.
> YLT Numbers 28:17 and in the fifteenth day of this month is a festival, seven days unleavened food is eaten;

Now let's turn to the Talmudic discussion concerning the time for the Jews to throw away the leaven, which gives us a major point of demarcation as to the legal time to slay the Passover (since it could not be sacrificed on the 14th day until all leaven was burned in Israel):

> GEMARA: We see thus, that at the commencement of the sixth hour, all agree, Chometz must be burned. Whence do we adduce this? Said Abayi: From two passages, viz. [Exod. xii. 19]: "Seven days no leaven shall be found in your houses," and [ibid. 15]: "But on the first day ye shall have put away leaven out of your houses." According to this, then, on the first day there would still be leaven in the house and this would be contrary to the ordinance of the first passage? Hence we must say, that by "the first day" is meant the day preceding the festival. Then why say the sixth hour? Say that already early in the morning of the day preceding the festival (leaven should be burned). The word "but" with which the passage commences divides the day into two parts, so that in the morning leavened bread may be eaten while in the afternoon it must not.
> The disciples of R. Ishmael taught: The reason that Chometz must be removed on the 14th (of Nissan) (the eve of Passover) is because that day is referred to as the first day (of the festival) in the passage [Exod. xii. 18]: "In the first, on the fourteenth day of the month, at evening shall ye eat unleavened bread," etc.
> Rabha said: "The reason may be inferred from the passage [Exod. xxxiv. 25]: 'Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leaven; neither shall be left unto the morning the sacrifice of the feast of the passover,' which signifies, that the Passover sacrifice must not be offered up as long as there is yet leaven." If that be the case, then it might be said that the leaven should be burned by each man immediately before offering his passover sacrifice;why designate the sixth hour? The passage means to state, that when the time for the Passover sacrifice arrives, there must no longer be any leaven on hand. [3]

There are two particularly important points to take from this passage above. First, these writers understood Exodus 34:25 to mean that leaven (or "Chometz" above, meaning that which is leavened) must be removed by the sixth hour (which commences at 11 AM and ends at noon) since God commanded to not sacrifice the Passover with leaven (meaning while leaven still remained among the people). The legal time to slay the Passover was after noon, so all leaven had to be removed prior to this time.

The second important point these writers make is that the "first day" (in Exodus 12:15) refers to the 14th day on which the Passover is sacrificed. They reason that if no leaven is to be in the land for the whole seven-day Festival (the 15th through the 21st), and if the "first day" of the Festival meant the 15th day of Nisan, then they would have already broken the law by still having leaven to remove during the 15th day.

The Hebrew word can mean either "first" or "previous/preceding," as can the Greek word used here in the Septuagint. They correctly say, therefore, that in this case it means the day preceding the Festival (i.e., the 14th day), and they add that Exodus 12:18 calls the 14th day the "first day" as more proof. This was the common Jewish understanding, which fits perfectly with the Gospels, where in the Greek the 14th day is referred to as the “first of the unleavened” (the original Greek of Matthew 26:17 and Mark 14:12).[4]

Remember, God had said that not bringing the Passover in its appointed time would cause one to be cut off from Israel. God had given the Israelites a set time for a legal Passover sacrifice, and this time never confused them:

> NAS Numbers 9:13 ‘But the man who is clean and is not on a journey, and yet neglects to observe the Passover, that person shall then be cut off from his people, for he did not present the offering of the LORD at its appointed time. That man shall bear his sin.

Would Jesus really have gone against the laws of God and the Temple to somehow sacrifice a Passover outside of its appointed time and thus “bear his sin”?

The following passage from the Talmud goes a step further in defining the time for an acceptable Passover sacrifice, saying that one brought before noon wouldnot be valid:

> MISHNA: If the paschal lamb be slaughtered before noon, it is not valid, because it is written [Exod. xii. 6]: “Toward the evening.”[5]

This passage is interesting because it does not quote the Hebrew “between the evenings” but rather the Greek Septuagint, which reads “toward evening”:

> LXE Exodus 12:6 And it shall be kept by you till the fourteenth of this month, and all the multitude of the congregation of the children of Israel shall kill ittoward evening.
> LXT Exodus 12:6 καὶ ἔσται ὑμῖν διατετηρημένον ἕως τῆς τεσσαρεσκαιδεκάτης τοῦ μηνὸς τούτου καὶ σφάξουσιν αὐτὸ παῦ τὸ πλῆθος συναγωγῆς υἱῶν Ισραηλ πρὸς ἑσπέραν

The two words boldfaced in the Greek above are literally “toward evening.” In marked contrast to the Greek Septuagint, the English King James translation below says “in the evening”:

> KJV Exodus 12:6 And ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month: and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening.

You can see from the Talmudic quotes above that their writers understood this time to sacrifice the Passover differently than the translators of the King James Version, which gives the false impression that the Passover is to be sacrificed “in the evening.” This would not be a problem if “evening” were understood in the first-century Jewish sense—when the sun was moving down in the sky toward even-ing with the horizon—but the English translations usually convey a different sense.

A big difference can exist between “in” and “toward,” for if Daniel (in Babylon) prayed toward Jerusalem, that doesn’t mean the same thing as him praying in Jerusalem. These Jewish Talmudic scholars who quoted from the Septuagint understood “toward the evening” (in Greek) to have the same meaning as “between the evenings” (in Hebrew), beginning after noon “when the sun commences to move towards the west.”

Young’s Literal Translation gives us the meaning of the Hebrew:

> YLT Exodus 12:6 ‘And it hath become a charge to you, until the fourteenth day of this month, and the whole assembly of the company of Israel have slaughtered it between the evenings;

The evidence shows that the Jews saw this Greek term “toward evening” to mean the exact same thing as the after-noon period, a fact that the Talmudic passage below confirms:

> CHAPTER V.
> REGULATIONS CONCERNING THE SACRIFICE OF THE PASCHAL LAMB.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

> MISHNA: The continual (daily) offering was slaughtered half an hour after the eighth hour, and sacrificed half an hour after the ninth hour; but on the day before Passover, whether that day happened to be a week-day or a Sabbath, it was slaughtered half an hour after the seventh hour, and sacrificed half an hour after the eighth hour. When the day before the Passover happened to be a Friday, it was slaughtered half an hour after the sixth hour, sacrificed half an hour after the seventh hour, and the Passover sacrifice celebrated (immediately) afterwards.
> GEMARA: Whence do we know all this? Said Rabha: Because it is written [Numbers xxviii. 4], "toward evening," we know that this religious duty must be discharged when the sun commences to move towards the west (evening). Then again, on all ordinary days, in respect to vow and voluntary offerings, as it is written [Lev. vi. 5]: "And he shall burn thereon the fat of the peace-offering." And the master said that this signifies that all the other offerings must be sacrificed before the daily offering. Hence this latter was slaughtered half an hour after the eighth hour (two and one half hours after noon); but on the day before Passover, when the paschal lamb had to be slaughtered after the daily offering, the latter was slaughtered an hour sooner. If the eve of Passover, however, fell on Friday, when the paschal lamb must be roasted before the Sabbath set in, the literal text of the passage in the Scriptures is abided by, and the daily offering is slaughtered as soon as the sun commences setting towards the west, i.e. , half an hour after noon.[6]

We see several important facts in the above writing:

Numbers 28:4 is explained as "toward evening" (quoted from the Greek Septuagint) and interpreted as the time "the sun commences to move towards the west (evening)." These Talmudic scholars would also have known that in Hebrew, this verse says "between the evenings." Therefore, they knew that "toward evening" conveys the same meaning as "between the evenings."

To be extra careful to stay within the legal time, the Talmudic writers say that when the 14th day fell on a Friday, the daily (even-ing) offering was brought half an hour after noon. God had also commanded the daily evening offering to be brought "between the evenings" (Exodus 29:39), so the Talmudists correctly state that the daily (evening) offering happens during the same time period as the Passovers are brought.

Although the scriptures usually refer to the 14th day as the Passover, the Talmud and other Jewish writings often speak of "Passover" as the 15th-day Sabbath—which commemorates the day God "passed over" and brought the Israelites out of Egypt—and not the 14th day when the Passovers were slain. One reason the 15th day came to be called the Passover is that it was the entrance into the seven-day Festival, which itself was called Passover (Luke 22:1). Another reason for this is that after the Temple was destroyed in AD 70, Passover lambs were no longer sacrificed, so the 14th day was less important. Thus, when Talmudic writers speak of the "day before Passover" in this passage above, they mean the 14th day (which they show is the day the Passover was sacrificed).

Therefore, when the Talmudic writers state that "on the eve of Passover Yeshu was hanged,"[7] they mean that he died as the 14th day was closing. This is much as we use the term "Christmas eve" (the 24th) as the time period before Christmas (the 25th). Such idiomatic changes that occurred over time as well as the use of the term "Passover"—sometimes for different days—have probably greatly contributed to the confusion on the timing of the Passover and the Last Supper.

The Jewish Encyclopedia also concurs with this time to slay the Passover:

> In Temple times the paschal lamb was offered during the afternoon of the eve of Passover [8]

Where did the Talmudic writers get the idea that "between the evenings" (Hebrew) and "toward evening" (Greek Septuagint) indicate the same time as "When the sun commences to move towards the west?" The answer is from Deuteronomy 16:6 from the Greek Septuagint, where the God-commanded time to slay the Passover is on the 14th day "toward west sun" (πρὸς δυσμὰς ἡλίου). Notice the English translation of this scripture says, "in the evening at sunset":

> NAS Deuteronomy 16:6 but at the place where the LORD your God chooses to establish His name, you shall sacrifice the Passover in the evening at sunset, at the time that you came out of Egypt.
> LXT Deuteronomy 16:6 ἀλλ᾽ ἤ εἰς τὸν τόπον ὃν ἐὰν ἐκλέξηται κύριος ὁ θεός σου ἐπικληθῆναι τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ ἐκεῖ θύσεις τὸ πασχα ἑσπέρας πρὸς δυσμὰς ἡλίου ἐν τῷ καιρῷ ᾧ ἐξῆλθες ἐξ Αἰγύπτου

The original Hebrew in the above scripture speaks of the going in of the sun (which begins its descent at noon). The Jewish scholars who translated this verse from Hebrew into Greek used a Greek phrase that says "toward west sun," which is boldfaced on the previous page. The Jewish ArtScroll commentary (Stone Edition, the Chumash), agrees with this timing from Deuteronomy 16:6 of "afternoon" when the sun descends:

> except at the place that Hashem, your God, will choose to rest His Name, there shall you slaughter the pesach-offering in the afternoon, when the sun descends, the appointed time of your departure from Egypt[9]

Jewish history from the time of Christ is unanimous that the proper time to slay the lambs was from noon until sunset. It is at noon when the sun begins its descent toward the western horizon or, as the Talmudists wrote, "when the sun commences to move towards the west." This is also why the Talmudic writers were so certain that all leaven had to be removed and burned prior to noon on the 14th day of Nisan, because from noon until sunset was the time in which the Passovers could legally be sacrificed. We saw that a sacrifice brought before noon would not be a valid sacrifice. This history from the Talmud is crucial, as it sheds light on why Jesus could not have sacrificed an early, invalid Passover while leaven was still on hand in Israel, and also why it would have been fine for him to eat bread at the Last Supper.

What Other Jewish Sources Say

The eminent Jewish scholar and historian Josephus, who was born around 7 years after the Crucifixion (AD 37), gives the time when the Passovers were sacrificed in his day:

> So these High Priests, upon the coming of that feast which is called the Passover, when they slay their sacrifices, from the ninth hour until the eleventh, but so that a company not less than ten belong to every sacrifice, (for it is not lawful for them to feast singly by themselves), and many of us are twenty in a company …[10]

Josephus gives us a time that is after noon for the proper slaying of the Passovers, in clear agreement with the legal time as given in the Talmud. Obviously it was not the Jews who were confused on this issue. As we see from the chart near the beginning of this chapter, "from the ninth hour to the eleventh" would mean from around 2 to 5 PM.

God commanded several Temple duties to take place "between the evenings": Passover, evening offering, incense offering (the time of prayer), and the lighting of the lamps. These were all carried out in the Temple after noon; none of them occurred after sunset.

Let's look more closely at the daily evening sacrifice. Remember that the Jewish day ended at sundown (around 6 PM), and the time translated into English as "evening" actually meant "toward west sun" or "toward evening." The Jewish scholars who translated the Hebrew Old Testament into the Greek Septuagint used the word "afternoon" here in Exodus, but first we see two English translations:

> NIV Exodus 29:39 Offer one in the morning and the other at twilight.
> YLT Exodus 29:39 the one lamb thou dost prepare in the morning, and the second lamb thou dost prepare between the evenings;

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Notice Young's (YLT above) accurately translates this as "between the evenings," which is the exact same Hebrew phrase God used in Exodus 12:6 when He commanded the proper time to slay the Passover lambs.

And here is what the Greek Septuagint has:

> LXT Exodus 29:39 τὸν ἀμνὸν τὸν ἕνα ποιήσεις τὸ πρωὶ καὶ τὸν ἀμνὸν τὸν δεύτερον ποιήσεις τὸ δειλινόν

The Greek adjective δειλινόν, means "in the afternoon," as defined by Friberg Greek Lexicon and BDAG Lexicon (as an adverb it means "toward evening"). In the verse from the Septuagint (LXT), the Jewish scholars knew what they were doing when they translated this phrase into Greek as "after-noon." Notice how the English (NIV above) usually translates it with words such as "twilight," which is sometimes considered as the time after sunset. The English translations never sayafternoon, which was the meaning of the Greek word the Septuagint translators used, as well as the meaning of the Hebrew phrase "between the evenings," which also harmonizes with all of Jewish history.

Sacrificing a Passover "after sunset" of the 13th day would be invalid, because it was brought before noon of the 14th day, and because leaven would still be present in Israel. Sacrificing the Passover "after sunset" of the 14th day would be the next Jewish day (i.e., the 15th) and therefore would also be an invalid Passover.

Josephus, in regard to this daily evening sacrifice, wrote of the priests coming to the Temple at noon to begin this sacrificial duty:

> ... but for the most sacred place, none went in but the high priests, clothed in their special garments. Now there is so great caution used about these offices of religion, that the priests are appointed to go into the temple but at certain hours: for, in the morning, at the opening of the inner temple, those that are to officiate receive the sacrifices, as they do again at noon, till the doors are shut.[11]

He also wrote about the Temple morning and evening daily offerings:

> And any one may thus learn how very great piety we exercise towards God, and the observance of his laws, since the priests were not at all hindered from their sacred ministrations by their fear during this siege, but did still twice a day, in the morning and about the ninth hour, offer their sacrifices on the altar;[12]

Thus Josephus shows that this "evening" offering was sacrificed at "about the ninth hour" (around 2 to 3 PM), which was "between the evenings" (as per the Hebrew) and "in the afternoon" (as per the Greek Septuagint). In other words, it was right between the evenings. Josephus does not contradict himself—as some have thought—when he says elsewhere that the incense was offered at "sun-setting":

> ... but incense was to be offered twice a-day, both before sun-rising and at sun-setting.[13]

Remember that those who translate Josephus into English often have a set theological viewpoint as to when to slay the Passover (because they are sure that the Last Supper was the Passover, and that Jesus was also somehow crucified as the 14th-day Passover). Again we must return to the original Greek to see what Josephus said. His actual words (translated above as "sun-setting") are πρός (toward) and δυσμαίς (west). So Josephus actually said that incense was offered twice each day: before "sun-rising" (probably meaning before the sun had fully risen) and toward west. This is essentially the same rendering of Deuteronomy 16:6 from the Septuagint, which speaks of the time to slay the Passover as πρός δυσμάς ἡλίου (toward west sun). These sources all agree with the timing mentioned in the Talmud.

Another famous Jewish writer and biblical philosopher from this time was Philo, who plainly stated that the Jews were to slay their Passovers "beginning at noonday" and "continuing till evening":

> Special laws, II:
> THE FOURTH FESTIVAL
> XXVII. (145) And after the feast of the new moon comes the fourth festival, that of the passover, which the Hebrews call pascha, on which the whole people offer sacrifice, beginning at noonday and continuing till evening.[14]

Philo also writes:

> Why is the Passover sacrificed πρὸς ἑσπέραν?[15] Perhaps because good things were about to befall at night. It was not the custom to offer a sacrifice in darkness, and for those who were about to experience good things at night it was not proper to prepare it before the ninth hour. Therefore it was not at random but knowingly that the prophet set a time between the turning πρὸς ἑσπέραν.[16]

So Philo completely agrees with the timing we saw earlier in the Talmud, which states "If the Paschal lamb be slaughtered before noon, it is not valid, because it is written [Exodus 12:6]: "Toward the evening."[17] Philo also agrees with the timing of Josephus, who said the Passovers were sacrificed from the ninth to the eleventh hour (Wars 6.9.3), and he agrees with what we saw from the Jewish translation of the Hebrew into the Greek Septuagint.

Part of the confusion over the proper time of "between the evenings" stems from the fact that the Jews added a late evening prayer called "Ma'ariv." Gateway to Judaism (Shulman) describes the time for this late "evening" service as "twenty-five minutes after sundown, when three stars are visible." Many Bible commentators incorrectly refer to this time of evening "when three stars are visible" as the time to sacrifice the Passovers. However, Gateway to Judaism also makes it clear that "actually, there were only two services in the Temple — morning and afternoon. The late evening prayer was added after the destruction of the Second Temple."

So those who take the Hebrew phrase "between the evenings" to mean the time "when three stars are visible" are incorrect, because this "late evening" prayer did not exist in Jesus's day. In fact, this late evening (non-Temple) service did not even come into being until many years after Christ was crucified, and therefore it has no bearing whatsoever.

Corrobation of Ma'ariv:

Ma'ariv or evening prayer began at sundown [hours of prayer see Mishnah Berakhot]. According to the Jewish Book of Why, volume I the Ma'ariv is a later addition, instituted after the destruction of the Temple in AD 70. The Jewish Talmud records the late addition of the Ma'ariv service which is not connected with the sacrificial system. [Jewish Book of Why, volume I, page 148].

What Does "Between the Evenings" Mean? [another perspective]

A lot of disagreement exists in the end-time Church of God regarding the proper time to observe the Passover. Many, if not most, believe that the Passover lambs were originally slain on the 14th of Abib (later called Nisan) right after sunset, with the Passover meal being eaten later on the night of 14 Abib. They base this belief on Exodus 12:6:

> EXODUS 12:6 And ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month: and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening [beyn ha'arbayim]. (KJV)

The Hebrew phrase beyn ha'arbayim (בין הערבים) is translated as "in the evening" above. However, the literal translation of this expression is "between the evenings," as Jay Green's English rendering of the Old Testament, entitled A Literal Translation of the Bible (LTB), shows:

> EXODUS 12:6 And it shall be for you to keep until the fourteenth day of this month. And all the assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it between the evenings [beyn ha'arbayim]. (LTB)

Most modern versions of the Bible render beyn ha'arbayim either as "at twilight" or "at dusk." This phrase occurs 11 times in the Old Testament (Exo. 12:6; 16:12; 29:39; 29:41; 30:8; Lev. 23:5; Num. 9:3, 5, 11; 28:4, 8). The first occurrence, Exodus 12:6, is in reference to the time God commanded the Passover lambs to be slain. Those who believe that the Passover lambs were killed on 14 Abib between sunset and total darkness reckon the first evening as sunset and the second evening as nightfall.

But is this interpretation correct? Does beyn ha'arbayim refer to this brief period of time? Is there any way to clearly define "between the evenings" from the Bible?

In reality, the debate over the timing of the original Passover sacrifice and meal boils down to one very basic question: What is meant by the Hebrew phrase beyn ha'arbayim? What time period does "between the evenings" cover?

Anciently, the Samaritans believed that "between the evenings" was the time from sunset to dark. Because of this belief, they sacrificed the Passover just after sunset, as 14 Abib was starting. They then ate the Passover meal later on the night of the 14th. Allegedly, the Sadducees held the same views on Passover as did the Samaritans.

On the other hand, most Jews have always reckoned "between the evenings" as the afternoon, literally the time between the decline of the sun after noon (the first evening) until the setting of the sun to end the day (the second evening). Therefore, until the destruction of the Second Temple, the vast majority of observant Jews killed the Passover on the afternoon of the 14 Abib, and ate the Passover meal later in the night, at the start of 15 Abib.

There is really no need to debate this issue, for the Bible clearly tells us when "between the evenings" is. In Exodus 29:38-41, God gives Israel instructions regarding the daily sacrifice:

> EXODUS 29:38 And this is what you shall offer on the altar: two lambs daily, sons of a year; 39 the one lamb you shall offer in the morning, and the second [hasheni] lamb you shall offer between the evenings [beyn ha'arbayim]. 40 And a tenth of fine flour anointed with beaten oil, a fourth of a hin, and a drink offering, a fourth of a hin of wine, for the one lamb. 41 And you shall offer the second [hasheni] lamb between the evenings [beyn ha'arbayim]; you shall do it like the morning food offering and its drink offering, for a soothing fragrance, a fire offering to Jehovah. (LTB)

Although many English translations render hasheni as "the other" in verses 39 and 41, any good Hebrew concordance will show you that it literally means "the" (ha) "second" (sheni). Most Church of God members accept that the Eternal reckons days from sunset to sunset (cf. Lev. 23:27, 32). The divine instructions shown above make it clear that the priests were to offer two lambs every day. God told Moses that the first lamb was to be sacrificed in the morning, and the second lamb was to be sacrificed "between the evenings." To be the second offering of the day, the lamb sacrificed "between the evenings" had to be slain before sunset!

If "between the evenings" occurs anytime after sunset, then this command could not have been properly carried out by the Israelites. At sunset, the old day has ended and the new day has begun. So under the Samaritan definition of "between the evenings," the evening sacrifice would be first and the morning sacrifice second!

The Jews, however, correctly understood what God meant by beyn ha'arbayim. According to noted Jewish historian Alfred Edersheim, "Ordinarily it [the evening sacrifice] was slain at 2.30 P.M., and offered at about 3.30" (p. 174, updated ed., The Temple: Its Ministry and Services).

The preceding passage of Scripture alone should define "between the evenings" for us. Yet God also inspired another event to be recorded in the eighteenth chapter of I Kings to help His end-time people correctly understand when "between the evenings" occurs.

To recap the story, the prophet Elijah had King Ahab of Israel assemble the people of Israel on Mount Carmel. He challenged the people, saying, "If the Lord is God, follow Him; but if Baal, then follow him" (I Kings 18:21). Elijah then proposed a test to identify the true God. The prophets of Baal were to sacrifice a bull for a burnt offering and call on their god to consume the offering with fire. Let's pick up the story in I Kings 18:26:

> I KINGS 18:26 So they took the bull which was given them, and they prepared it, and called on the name of Baal from morning even till noon, saying, "O Baal, hear us!" But there was no voice; no one answered. Then they leaped about the altar which they had made. 27 And so it was, at noon, that Elijah mocked them and said, "Cry aloud, for he is a god; either he is meditating, or he is busy, or he is on a journey, or perhaps he is sleeping and must be awakened." 28 So they cried aloud, and cut themselves, as was their custom, with knives and lances, until the blood gushed out on them. 29 And when midday was past, they prophesied until the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice. But there was no voice; no one answered, no one paid attention. (NKJV)

Notice the time element distinctly laid out in the Scriptures above. The prophets of Baal spent from morning until the time of the evening sacrifice trying to get an answer from their god. From Exodus 29:38-41, as well as Numbers 28:1-8, we know that the evening sacrifice was to be offered "between the evenings." So, at a minimum, this passage shows that "between the evenings" is sometime past noon.

Having given the prophets of Baal plenty of time, Elijah took his turn at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice. He repaired God's altar, cut the bull in pieces, and laid it on the altar. He then had the people pour water in a trench around the altar and drench the sacrifice three times. Let's pick the story up again in verse 36:

> I KINGS 18:36 And it came to pass, at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near and said, "LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, let it be known this day that You are God in Israel and I am Your servant, and that I have done all these things at Your word. 37 Hear me, O LORD, hear me, that this people may know that You are the LORD God, and that You have turned their hearts back to You again." 38 Then the fire of the LORD fell and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood and the stones and the dust, and it licked up the water that was in the trench. 39 Now when all the people saw it, they fell on their faces; and they said, "The LORD, He is God! The LORD, He is God!" 40 And Elijah said to them, "Seize the prophets of Baal! Do not let one of them escape!" So they seized them; and Elijah brought them down to the Brook Kishon and executed them there. (NKJV)

The Bible specifies that this mighty miracle occurred "at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice" (i.e., between the evenings). Now let's examine the rest of the story to see if we can determine when this time was:

> I KINGS 18:41 Then Elijah said to Ahab, "Go up, eat and drink; for there is the sound of abundance of rain." 42 So Ahab went up to eat and drink. And Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; then he bowed down on the ground, and put his face between his knees, 43 and said to his servant, "Go up now, look toward the sea." So he went up and looked, and said, "There is nothing." And seven times he said, "Go again." 44 Then it came to pass the seventh time, that he said, "There is a cloud, as small as a man's hand, rising out of the sea!" So he said, "Go up, say to Ahab, 'Prepare your chariot, and go down before the rain stops you.'" 45 Now it happened in the meantime that the sky became black with clouds and wind, and there was a heavy rain. So Ahab rode away and went to Jezreel. 46 Then the hand of the LORD came upon Elijah; and he girded up his loins and ran ahead of Ahab to the entrance of Jezreel. (NKJV)

Generally, there is about 30-45 minutes from the time the sun goes down until total darkness. If the Samaritan definition of beyn ha'arbayim is correct, all the following events detailed in I Kings 18 had to have occurred "between the evenings" at the time of the evening sacrifice, a period of declining visibility:

- The repair of God's altar by Elijah (I Kings 18:30-32).
- The digging of a trench around the altar which would hold approximately 5½ gallons (2 "seahs") of water (I Kings 18:32).
- The piling of wood on the altar (I Kings 18:33).
- The cutting of the sacrificial bull in pieces and the placement of it upon the altar (I Kings 18:33).
- The pouring of four pots full of water on the sacrifice and wood three separate times (I Kings 18:33-35).
- Elijah's prayer to God, resulting in fire which consumed the burnt offering, the wood, the altar, and the water in the trench around the altar (I Kings 18:36-38).
- The capture of the prophets of Baal by the people of Israel (I Kings 18:40).
- The execution of the 450 prophets of Baal by the Brook Kishon (I Kings 18:40).
- Elijah's message to King Ahab to eat and drink because rain was coming (I Kings 18:41).
- Elijah's climb to the top of the 1,600+ ft. Mount Carmel (I Kings 18:42).
- Elijah sending his servant to look toward the sea seven different times (I Kings 18:43).
- The sighting by his servant on the seventh look of "a cloud as small as a man's hand rising out of the sea" (I Kings 18:44).
- The blackening of the sky due to clouds (not night!) as heavy rains began to fall (I Kings 18:45).

Even if we conservatively assume that Elijah made all the preparations for the sacrifice (I Kings 18:30-35) before the time of the evening sacrifice, common sense should tell us that there is no way the remaining events (I Kings 18:36-45) could have taken place between sunset and total darkness. The facts of the above story just don't support the Samaritan interpretation of "between the evenings."

Conclusion

Clearly, the Samaritan definition of beyn ha'arbayim contradicts the Bible and must be rejected. Yeshua told the Samaritan woman at the well that the Samaritans did not know what they worshiped (John 4:22). However, in the same verse, he stated that the Jews did know the God they worshiped. Should we follow the Samaritans in this matter, or should we follow the example of the Jews, who were entrusted with the oracles of God (Rom. 3:2)? The answer should be clear to those humble enough to cast aside their preconceived beliefs and take God at His word.

The Wave Sheath (Orem) Offering / Feast of Firstfruits

http://www.hebrew4christians.com/Holidays/Spring_Holidays/First_Fruits/first_fruits.html

Feast of "Firstfruits"?

The day following the first day of Unleavened Bread is called Reshit Katzir (רֵאשִׁית קָצִיר) the "beginning of the harvest" (sometimes confusingly called the Feast of Firstfruits). In ancient times, on this day a sheaf (omer) of barley (the first grain crop to ripen) was waved before the LORD in a prescribed ceremony to mark the start of the counting of the omer, thereby initiating the forty nine day countdown to the harvest festival of Shavuot:

> And the LORD spoke to Moses, saying, "Speak to the people of Israel and say to them, 'When you come into the land that I give you and reap its harvest, you shall bring the sheaf (omer) of the first (reshit) of your harvest (katzir) to the priest, and he shall wave the sheaf before the LORD, so that you may be accepted. On the day after the Sabbath the priest shall wave it. And on the day when you wave the sheaf, you shall offer a male lamb a year old without blemish as a burnt offering to the LORD.' (Lev. 23:9-12)

In other words, on this day the priest would wave a sheaf (omer) of green barley of the new harvest before the LORD (north, south, east, then west) as a symbolic gesture of dedicating it to Him. A male lamb was then sacrificed as a burnt offering to the LORD (olah) along with a minchah (unleavened bread mixed with oil) and wine (Lev. 23:13). Only after the wave offering was performed, could the crop could begin to be used (Lev. 23:14).

It is altogether remarkable that on this day a defect-free male lamb was to be offered along with bread and wine - the very symbols Yeshua used to recall His sacrifice...

There is some controversy about precisely when the wave offering (called tenufat HaOmer) was performed, since the phrase "the day after the Sabbath" can refer to either:

- Sunday (or Yom Rishon). This was the interpretation of the (corrupt) Sadducees. The Wave Offering would occur on the first Sunday after the regular weekly Sabbath.

  > Note: Some have argued that since the Sadducees controlled the Second Temple worship schedule, the Wave Offering would have occurred on the Sunday following the weekly Sabbath. However, if this were so, it would not help make the case that the Resurrection of Yeshua occurred at this time, since the gospels state that Yeshua was raised before the women discovered Him missing from the tomb early on Sunday morning (Matt 28:1; Mark 16:2, Luke 24:1, John 20:1). In other words, the time of the resurrection of Yeshua and the time of the Wave Offering were not coincidental, since the wave offering occurred later in the day.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

- The day following the "High" Sabbath of the first day of Unleavened Bread (a "High" Sabbath is a day of shabbaton (rest) that may occur on any day of the week besides the weekly Sabbath day of Saturday). This is the position of the Pharisees and Orthodox Judaism. The wave offering would occur on Nisan 16, the day following the High Sabbath of the first day of Unleavened Bread (Josh. 5:11).

<<> See additional notes countering the notes from this site with the reasoning for Firstfruits having occurred on the 17th of Nisan >>>

The people were to take a sheaf of their crops and bring it to the priest at the Temple who would then wave it before the Lord for acceptance. The people were acknowledging the Lord's blessing with this action. They were also to bring a lamb of the first year, without blemish, a grain offering with oil and a drink offering of wine. The people were forbidden to eat of the crops until the "First Fruits" were celebrated. They were to eat of their stores from the previous years.

First Fruits marked the start of Israel's grain harvest and the beginning of the count for the Feast of Weeks (Pentecost), Israel's forth feast. The Feast of Weeks took place forty nine days after First Fruits on the Fiftieth Day.

Today, since there is no Temple, the feast of Firstfruits is no longer celebrated. What is celebrated now is only the counting of the omer. From the Firstfruits Israel was commanded to count off seven weeks until the feast of Shavuot (Feast of Weeks).

The purpose of Firstfruits is to demonstrate to man that God is owner of all our wealth. He gives us the ability to attain success by returning to the Lord the "first" of our produce. We are acknowledging the source. God declared that the firstfruits on the land was His, including the firstborn of livestock. Even the Donkey was required to be redeemed. (Exodus 22:29, 23:19, 34:26, Deuteronomy 18:4, 26:2)

The firstborn son was also to be redeemed according to the law.

Re: Omer / First Fruits

The interpretation of the timing of this [First Fruits, omer] offering was the subject of heated controversy in early rabbinic times. Before Christ was born, the Sadducees prevailed in controlling the priesthood and the Temple services. This continued right up until about 20 years before the destruction of the Temple in 70 A.D. by the Romans. Thus, the Sadducees controlled the Temple services for some twenty years after the death of Christ and the founding of the Christian Church (see Acts 4:1; 5:17). Politically, the Sadducees were in good standing with the Romans, but during the last 20 years of the Temple the Pharisees came to be in control and many things changed, including the day on which the "Omer" was offered.

Now the Sadducees were well-known for their very liberal beliefs and rejection of certain fundamental truths, such as a literal resurrection of the dead, the existence of angels, spirits, etc. However, they were also conservative or literalists in some aspects of interpreting the Law. The Pharisees, on the other hand, were the highly orthodox group that went even beyond the written Law to observing their "Oral Law" (traditions) as equal authority. Their oral laws sometimes contradicted the written Law. This became the major difference between the two groups, and the major difference in the observance of the "Offering of the Omer." This difference had to do with the time in which it was to be offered.

The day on which the Pharisees would observe the offering eventually prevailed in practice after they gained control. It still does until this time in the Jewish world. The Pharisees were actually looking to assign some historical event in Israel's early history to the celebration of the Feast of Pentecost. Unlike Passover and Tabernacles, which were attached to the Passover lambs in Israel's deliverance from Egypt, and to their dwelling in booths (tabernacles) for forty years, Pentecost was only named by the number of days from the Offering of the Omer — seven "Weeks" (Hebrew, Shavuot), or Pentecost (50th). Therefore since the giving of the Law occurred some 50 days after Israel's exodus, they assigned Pentecost to the commemoration of the giving of the Law. The Pharisees took the word "Sabbath" in Lev. 23:11 to mean the special High Sabbath of Nisan 15 and thus the Offering of the Omer would always be done on the following morning of the 16th of Nisan. (See The Jerusalem Post, International Edition, Rabbi Reskin, "What's in a name?" June 1, 2006, and "Something doesn't add up," May 21, 1999, and the June 6, 2003 article.)

Please remember, the Offering of the Omer marked the beginning of "the counting of days" (Lev. 23:15,16) until Pentecost. Now Moses went up on Mount Sinai approximately 50+ days after Israel left Egypt on the 15th of Abib. Therefore, certain historians believe that the Pharisees took this position in order to correlate the Feast of Pentecost with the giving of the Law from Mount Sinai approximately fifty days after the first Passover in Egypt. In so doing, they converted Pentecost into a Feast that would commemorate the giving of the Law, which in its Biblical setting is not specifically indicated.

However, as I stated before, at the time of Christ's death the Sadducees were still very strongly in control of the Temple services and the priesthood. They rejected the oral law of the Pharisees, including this attempt to change the nature of Pentecost and the time of the Offering of the Omer. They were known to take the passage in Leviticus literally and thus, since the word "Sabbath" was not designated as the "High Sabbath," it meant it was simply the regular Sabbath that would fall during the Feast of Unleavened Bread. Therefore, the Omer would always be offered on a Sunday morning after the regular Sabbath that occurred during the feast. This first of all meant that the Sunday morning they were making this particular Wave Offering before the Lord in the Temple services, the disciples were hearing the news of Christ's resurrection from the dead. And shortly thereafter the Roman soldiers were offered bribes to change their story (see Matt. 28:11-15). (This, likewise, would mean that Pentecost would always fall on a Sunday as well.)

In this regard, I would have to agree with the position of the Sadducees as do certain scholars today. The historical references for most of this I have taken from: The Pentateuch & Haftorahs, edited by J.H. Hertz under "the Omer," pages 520, 521; The Encyclopedia Judaica, under "Sadducees" and "Shavuot" (Weeks or Pentecost); Guide to the Jewish Holy Days by Hayyim Schauss, pages 87, 88; Davis Dictionary of the Bible, "Weeks, feast of," page 809, and other articles such as I listed above from the Jerusalem Post, International Edition.

God Commanded Certain Breads to Be Made with Leaven

…Let us consider two other Tabernacle and then Temple offerings that were commanded by God to be baked with leaven. Like the twelve breads, they too were always called "bread" and never "matzah." The original Hebrew referred to them as lechem and in the Greek Septuagint as arton (i.e., regular bread).

The first of these was a sacrificial offering of thanksgiving that was commanded to be made with leaven and was called "bread":

> NAS Leviticus 7:12 'If he offers it by way of thanksgiving, then along with the sacrifice of thanksgiving he shall offer unleavened cakes mixed with oil, and unleavened wafers spread with oil, and cakes of well stirred fine flour mixed with oil.
> NAS Leviticus 7:13 'With the sacrifice of his peace offerings for thanksgiving, he shall present his offering with cakes of leavened bread.

The other offering, also called "bread," was for the Festival of Pentecost (Shavout) and was commanded to consist of two leavened breads. The Greek word Pentecost means "50," as this festival under Moses happened after the 50 days counting from the morrow of the first regular Sabbath after Passover:

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

> NAS Leviticus 23:16 'You shall count fifty days to the day after the seventh sabbath; then you shall present a new grain offering to the LORD.

It was on this day, following the true Passover of Christ, that God began to pour out His spirit on all flesh (Joel, Acts 2, 10), causing the two leavened "breads" (Jews and Gentiles) to become "one bread," i.e., the spiritual body of Christ (Acts 2:16).

These two breads were made with the same measure of flour as the Showbread and were baked with leaven. And like the Showbread, and the leavened sacrifice for thanksgiving, they were never called "matzah" but always "bread":

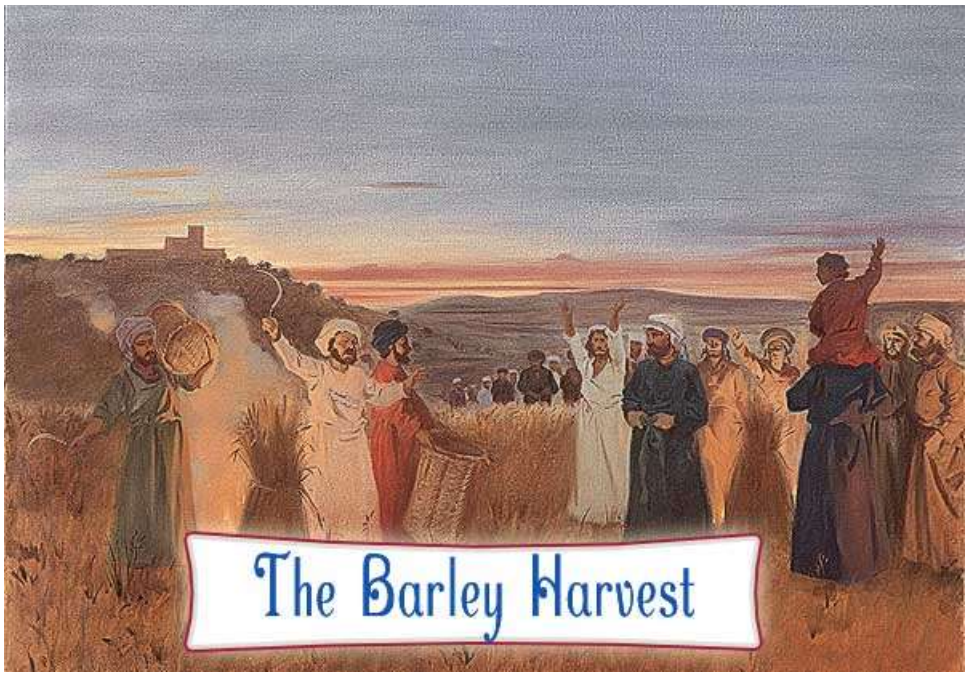
> NAB Leviticus 23:17 For the wave offering of your first fruits to the LORD, you shall bring with you from wherever you live two loaves of breadmade of two tenths of an ephah of fine flour and baked with leaven.

> NAS Leviticus 23:18 'Along with the bread, you shall present seven one year old male lambs without defect, and a bull of the herd, and two rams; they are to be a burnt offering to the LORD, with their grain offering and their libations, an offering by fire of a soothing aroma to the Lord.

Since the thanksgiving offering (also called "thank offering") and the Festival of Pentecost offering are both made with leaven, it makes sense that they are never called "matzah" (unleavened). Along the same lines, since the twelve breads were called "bread" and never "matzah," this affords some proof that in the time of Moses they were made as regular leavened bread. Some say that the leaven in bread always refers symbolically to malice and wickedness, but then this would have God commanding offerings to Him of malice and wickedness.

At some point in history an argument began between the Pharisees and the Sadducees concerning the true starting point for the countdown to Pentecost, which began with the waving of the sheaf (Leviticus 23:12) and the first-fruits offering.

The Pharisees argued that this 50-day counting was to begin after the Sabbath of the Passover (i.e., the Sabbath of the 15th special day of rest when the Israelites came out of Egypt). The Sadducees argued that since in Hebrew the regular word for the Sabbath (i.e., Saturday Sabbath) was used, that the first Saturday Sabbath in the Festival is what was meant.



God decided the matter by raising Christ from the dead on the morrow of the Saturday Sabbath, and Paul called Christ our "first fruits." Thus Pentecost also would always fall on a Sunday. The scriptures also bear this out, because Leviticus 23:16 says to count 50 days until the "day after the seventh Sabbath," and for that 50-count to end on the day after a Sabbath, it had to begin on the day after a regular Saturday Sabbath.

It is possible that the Pharisees changed this date so that events did not align so closely with Christ being both sacrificed at the 14th-day Passover and then resurrected, fulfilling the unleavened first-fruits offering on the morrow of the Sabbath (i.e., Sunday). This change to the Pharisaic doctrine probably took place sometime shortly after Christ fulfilled this first-fruits offering, but either way the change was not scriptural.

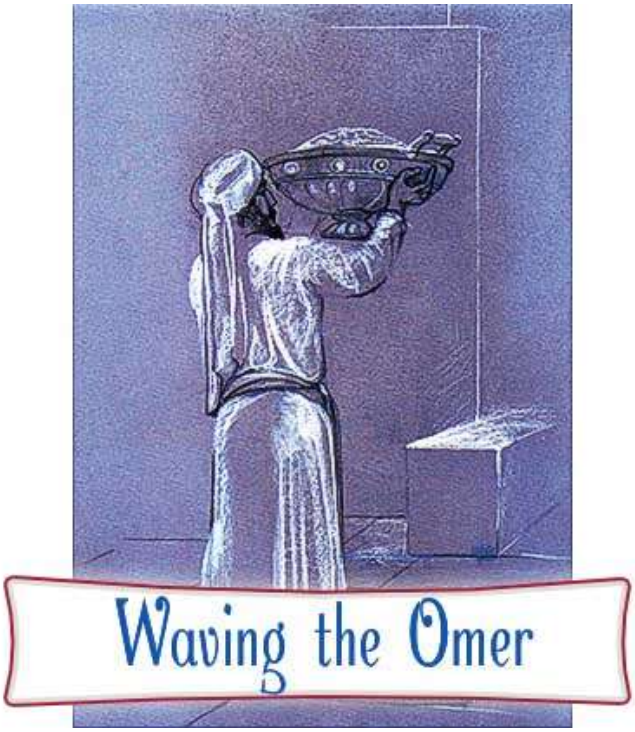
On the 16th day [NOTE: based on Pharisee interpretation / Sadducees followed 17th day –LY] of Nisan, the barley to be used in the Omer offering was harvested in a grand public event. Residents of the villages surrounding Jerusalem would all come out to take part in the joyous occasion.



After completing the harvest, the kohanim, (priests), would bring baskets filled with barley to the eastern side iof the inner Temple courtyard. There, the newly ripened grain was beaten, roasted, and sifted in thirteen seives. A handful of the flour was burned on the altar, and the rest was eaten by the kohanim.

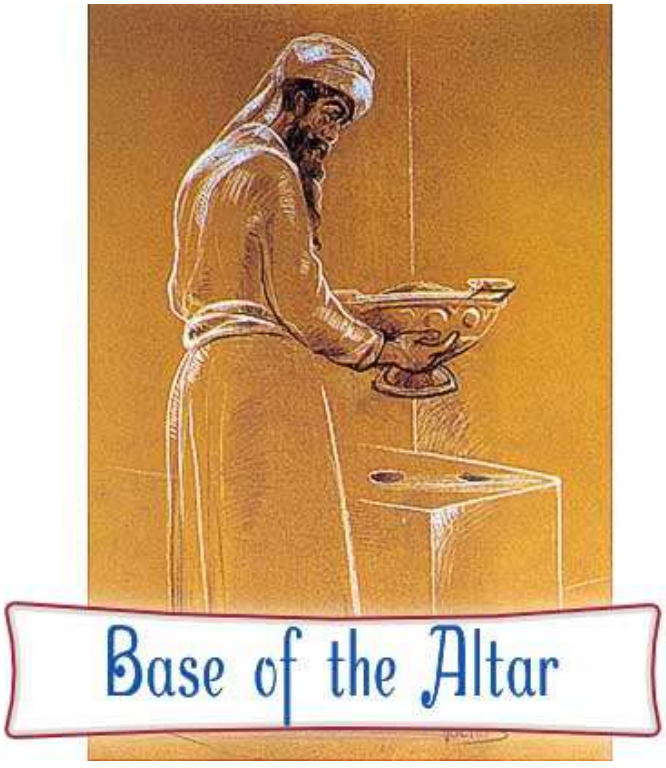
Torah states that the first grain offering must consist of fresh barley kernels rosted in a perforated pan, and then ground into a coarse meal. "You must place olive oil and frankincense on it..." (Leviticus 2:15)



Next, the kohen must "wave the Omer before G-d." (Leviticus 23:11) This was done in front of the northeast corner of the altar, the kohen facing westward.

The final step of the Omer offering involved the kohen scooping out a handful of flour from the meal mixture and placing in on the fire atop the altar. This was followed by the bringing of a single male sheep as a burnt offering. From this point on, grain from the new harvest could be eaten.

After waving the Omer at the northeast corner of the altar, the kohen presented the first grain offering before the southwest corner of the altar. This was standard procedure for nearly all meal-offerings

Pentecost (Shavout) – the Feast of Weeks

Celebrates:

Shavuot* (Feast of Weeks) is a Jewish holiday that commemorates the single most important event in Israel's history: the giving of the Torah (the first five books in the Hebrew Bible) to Moses at Mount Sinai. Although it is not as well known among non-Jews as Passover or Sukkot (the Feast of Booths), it is one of the three major festivals often called "pilgrim" festivals because all Jewish males were required to observe them at the Holy Temple in Jerusalem.

This year Shavuot will be celebrated from sundown May 18 through May 20.

More than 3,000 years ago, after leaving Egypt on the night of Passover, the Jews traveled to the Sinai desert. There, they experienced divine revelation as God gave the Jewish people His Law. In Deuteronomy 4:10-13, Moses reminded the people of that experience:

The two holidays, Passover and Shavuot, are linked by more than just their proximity. The Exodus from Egypt, which Passover celebrates, marked the beginning of physical freedom for the Jewish people. But Shavuot is a reminder for the Jews that physical liberation was incomplete without the spiritual redemption represented by receiving God's law. Shavuot is also called Atzeret, meaning "the completion," because together with Passover it forms the completion of a unit. Jews gained their freedom from Egypt on Passover in order to receive the Torah on Shavuot.

The earlier celebrations of Shavuot were more agricultural in nature and motif. In ancient times, sheaves of barley (the winter crop) were brought to the Temple each day, starting on Passover until Shavuot, the beginning of the harvest season fifty days later. Farmers looked forward to Shavuot with great anticipation. When it finally arrived, the people would bring their firstfruits to the Temple amid great pomp and ceremony. They rejoiced before God and thanked Him for their material blessings.

With the destruction of the second Temple and the forced separation of the Jewish people from their land, the centrality of the harvest motif diminished. Instead, the theme of the anniversary of the revelation of the Torah to Moses on Mount Sinai gained dominance—a theme continued today.

During Temple times, Shavuot was observed an agricultural festival, though the sages also recognized it as the time to commemorate the giving of the Torah at Mount Sinai. As one of the three pilgrimage festivals, Jews from all over the world would come to Jerusalem to celebrate and reaffirm their commitment to the covenant of Moses.

And such was the practice when God delivered the Substance of which the festival of Shavuot was merely a "type and a shadow." For the Brit Chadashah reveals that Shavuot is the climax of God's plan for our deliverance through Yeshua, the true Lamb of God (Seh Elohim). The countdown to Shavuot represents the giving of the anticipated New Covenant to mankind, since it was on this very day that the Ruach HaKodesh (Holy Spirit) was given to form the Church of God.

With a touch of divine irony, on the very day that Jews from around the world gathered in Jerusalem to reaffirm their commitment to the covenant of Moses, the Holy Spirit descended upon Israel to offer the promise of the New Covenant to all who will believe (see Acts 2:1-42). This new covenant makes Torah a matter of the heart, written by the God's Spirit that yields a life fruitful in the praise of God.

Just as the resurrection of Yeshua represents the Firstfruits of those who have died (1 Corinthians 15:20) and fulfills the prophetic ritual of the waving of the omer on the festival of First Fruits, so the giving of the Holy Spirit to the church fulfills the wave offering of the wheat loaves on the day of Shavuot.

Shavuot marks the time when God entered into covenant with the Jewish nation. During the first Shavuot at Sinai, God instituted the Mosaic covenant and gave the Torah in written form, but during the Shavuot at Zion, after the resurrection of Yeshua, God established the New Covenant when He wrote the Torah on the hearts of Yeshua's followers.

- Shavuot at Mount Sinai is sometimes considered the day on which Judaism was born. Shavuot in Jerusalem (Mount Zion) is the day on which the church was born when the Holy Spirit was poured out upon the followers of the Mashiach.
- At Mount Sinai the Ten Commandments were written on tablets of stone by the "finger of God" (Exodus 31:18), but at Mount Zion, the Torah is written on tables of the heart by the Spirit of God (2 Corinthians 3:3; Hebrews 8:10).
- Just as the Israelites were affirmed as God's chosen people on Shavuot with the giving of the Torah, so the Church was affirmed as God's chosen people at Shavuot after the Mashiach's ascension into heaven as the Mediator of a Better Covenant (Hebrews 8:6). The 3,000 that were added to the church that day were firstfruits of the redeemed people of God.
- In the Jewish tradition, Shavuot is compared to a wedding, for it was on Shavuot that the covenant between God and the Jewish People was sealed at Mount Sinai. The church is called Kallat Mashiach - the Bride of Messiah (Revelations 21:2,9), and we eagerly await the marriage supper to come (Revelations 19:9).

Shavuot occurs on the 6th of Sivan, the culmination of a seven-week period, "counting of the Omer," that occurs following Passover. The very name "Shavuot" means "weeks," in recognition of the weeks of preparation and anticipation leading up to the Sinai experience. Since Shavuot occurs 50 days after the first day of Passover, it is sometimes known as "Pentecost," a Greek word meaning "the holiday of 50 days." (Shavuot, however, has no connection to the Christian Pentecost holiday.)

In Judaism, The Feast of Weeks or Shavuot (Hebrew label) or Pentecost (Greek label) is the name given to the festival, which occurred fifty days after the offering of the barley sheaf during the Passover feast (see Leviticus 13:16).

The Feast of the Fiftieth Day has been a many-sided one, and as a consequence has been called by many names. In the Hebrew Bible or Old Testament it is called the "Feast of Harvest" (Exodus 12:16) and the "Feast of Weeks" (Deuteronomy 16:10), also the "Day of the First-Fruits" (Numbers 27:26).

In the later literature it was called also the "closing festival" (Haggai 2:4). It is called, too, the "closing season of the Passover" to distinguish it from the seventh day of Passover and from the closing day of the Feast of Tabernacles, i.e., the end of the fruit harvest (Leviticus 23:36, Numbers 29:35, and Deuteronomy 16:8).

re: Counting the Omer:
http://www.cityshul.com/counting-the-omer.html

“Counting the Omer” is an important verbal counting of each of the forty-nine days between the Jewish holidays of Passover and Shavuot as stated in the Hebrew Bible: Leviticus 23:15–16

This mitzvah ("commandment") derives from the Torah commandment to count forty-nine days beginning from the day on which the Omer, a sacrifice containing an omer-measure of barley, was offered in the Temple in Jerusalem, up until the day before an offering of wheat was brought to the Temple on Shavuot. The Counting of the Omer begins on the second day of Passover (the 16th of Nisan) for Rabbinic Jews (Orthodox, Conservative, Reform), and after the weekly Shabbat during Passover for Karaite Jews, and ends the day before the holiday of Shavuot, the 'fiftieth day.'

The idea of counting each day represents spiritual preparation and anticipation for the giving of the Torah which was given by God on Mount Sinai at the beginning of the month of Sivan, around the same time as the holiday of Shavuot. The Sefer HaChinuch (published anonymously in 13th century Spain) states that the Hebrew people were only freed from Egypt at Passover in order to receive the Torah at Sinai, an event which is now celebrated on Shavuot, and to fulfill its laws. Thus the Counting of the Omer demonstrates how much a Hebrew desires to accept the Torah in his own life.

As soon as it is definitely night (approximately thirty minutes after sundown), the one who is counting the Omer recites this blessing:

> (Blessed are You, Lord our God, King of the Universe, Who has sanctified us with His commandments and commanded us to count the Omer.

Then he or she states the Omer-count in terms of both total days and weeks and days. For example, on the 23rd day the count would be stated thus: "Today is twenty-three days, which is three weeks and two days 'of' [or] 'to' (לעומר) [or] 'in' (בעומר)] the Omer". The count is said in Hebrew.

According to the Halakha, a person may only recite the blessing while it is still night. If he or she remembers the count the next morning or afternoon, the count may still be made, but without a blessing. If one forgets to count a day altogether, he or she may continue to count succeeding days, but without a blessing. The Omer may be counted in any language, however one must understand what one is saying.

According to Jewish tradition, Pentecost commemorates God giving the Ten Commandments at Mount Sinai fifty days after the Exodus. The Talmud derives this from a calculation based on Biblical Texts.

There is a Jewish tradition that David was born and died on Pentecost. This may be why, in Peter's speech found in Acts 2, he explains the current happenings using David's tomb and some of his quotes (Acts 2:29*ff).

Shavuot is one of the lesser-known Jewish holidays among secular Jews in the Jewish diaspora, while those in Israel are more aware of it. According to Jewish law, Shavuot is celebrated in Israel for one day and in the Diaspora (outside of Israel) for two days. Reform Judaism celebrates only one day, even in the Diaspora.

Shavuot is [originally] connected to the season of the grain harvest in Israel. In ancient times, the grain harvest lasted seven weeks and was a season of gladness (Jer. 5:24, Deut. 16:9-11, Isa. 9:2). It began with the harvesting of the barley during Passover and ended with the harvesting of the wheat at Shavuot. Shavuot was thus the concluding festival of the grain harvest, just as the eighth day of Sukkot (Tabernacles) was the concluding festival of the fruit harvest. During the existence of the Temple in Jerusalem, an offering of two loaves of bread from the wheat harvest was made on Shavuot.

[Source: Wikipedia]

In ancient times, two wheat loaves would be offered in Holy Temple. It was also at this time that people would begin to bring bikkurim, their first and choicest fruits, to thank G-d for Israel's bounty.

The holiday of Shavuot is a two-day holiday, beginning at sundown of the 5th of Sivan and lasting until nightfall of the 7th of Sivan. (In Israel it is a one-day holiday, ending at nightfall of the 6th of Sivan.)

On this day G-d swore eternal devotion to us, and we pledged everlasting loyalty to Him

Work is not permitted during Shavu'ot.

It is customary to stay up the entire first night of Shavu'ot and study Torah, then pray as early as possible in the morning.

It is customary to eat a dairy meal at least once during Shavu'ot. There are varying opinions as to why this is done. Some say it is a reminder of the promise regarding the land of Israel, a land flowing with "milk and honey." According to another view, it is because our ancestors had just received the Torah (and the dietary laws therein), and did not have both meat and dairy dishes available. See Separation of Meat and Dairy.

The book of Ruth is read at this time. Again, there are varying reasons given for this custom, and none seems to be definitive.

The Feast of Pentecost. The word Pentecost means fifty. The number fifty points to fullness, to ripeness, to a time that is ready for something to happen. This feast has three levels:

A. Harvest Festival. Israel, fifty days - seven weeks to the day - after the sickle was first put to the grain there was a harvest festival. Fifty days after the grain harvest, processions of pilgrims bore baskets of their first fruits to the temple as a thank offering for the harvest. It was something akin to our Thanksgiving Day.

B. Torah Festival. In later Judaism (two centuries before Christ) Pentecost was seven weeks to the day after the Passover Sabbath to celebrate the giving of the Law at Sinai where God had made a people for Himself. Akin to our Independence Day.

C. Spirit Festival. Evangelization Festival. Prophetic Festival. Seven weeks to the day after Jesus died and rose from the dead, He breathes the wind and fire of His Spirit upon His Church. This is the fulfillment of the Harvest festival: Fifty days after the sickle had been put to the grain, fifty days after Jesus was hung on a cross, crucified and buried, fifty days after the promised Seed that had been buried in the ground sprouted to life, there was a harvest festival of the resurrection - the reaping of the souls. This is also the fulfillment of the Torah feast: Fifty days after His exodus through death into life, Jesus forms a people, His Israel, His Church. A new covenant, a new people. The Church's birthday. A day of celebration for the outpouring of the Spirit and the spread of the Gospel to all nations.

([In Roman Catholic churches] The red paraments remind us of Pentecost fire, the fire of Jesus' love poured out in the Holy Spirit towards others.]

The Feast of Tabernacles [Sukkot] – [The Hebrew pronunciation of Sukkot is "Sue COAT"] also known as the Feast of Booths (or the more literal, Festival [or Feast] of Shelters).

This was one of the three pilgrimage festivals of the Jewish year, occurring in the autumn after harvest. The Jews dwelt in booths made of the boughs of trees for the seven days of the festival. [Source: Ryrie Study Bible notes]

The Feast of Tabernacles lasted seven days (Lev 23:34; Dt 16:13,15) but had a "closing assembly" on the eighth day (Lev 23:36).
[Source: NIV '08 Study Bible Notes]

Though it is not mentioned in the OT, the Jews had a ceremony of carrying water from the Pool of Siloam and pouring it into a silver basin by the altar of burnt offering each day for the first seven days of the Feast of Booths. On the eighth day this was not done, making Christ's offer of the water of eternal life from Himself even more startling.
[Source: Ryrie Study Bible note]

The seventh (and final) feast given to Israel is called Sukkot or the "Feast of Tabernacles." (It is also called, "Feast of Shelters.") Sukkot is observed in the fall, from the 15th to the 22nd of Tishri. During this time many Jewish families construct a sukkah, a small hastily built hut in which meals are eaten throughout the festival.

The sukkah is used to remember the huts [plural: sukkot] Israel lived in during their 40 year sojourn in the desert after the exodus from Egypt. Later, after Israel entered the land of promise, Sukkot was associated with the fall harvest and came to be known as Chag ha-Asif (the "Festival of Ingathering" (of the harvest) at the end of the year.

While the Torah states that the Feast of Tabernacles (Sukkot) is a seven day holiday (Lev. 23:34; Deut. 16:13), an additional day called "Shmini Atzeret" is also included (Lev. 23:36; Num. 29:35). And since Sukkot marked the end of the agricultural year, a further holiday called Simchat Torah was added to celebrate the end of Torah reading cycle for the year as well. Sukkot is celebrated for eight days in Israel and nine days in the Diaspora. In Israel the eighth day of Sukkot combines both Shmini Atzeret and Simchat Torah, whereas in the Diaspora, the eighth day of the holiday is Shmini Atzeret and the ninth day is Simchat Torah. During the first and last [eighth] days of Sukkot no normal "work" (melakhah) is permitted (see Lev. 23:39). The intervening days of Sukkot are called Chol Ha-Mo'ed, half-holidays during which usual work activities are permitted. Since it is an eight day festival, there will always be at least one Sabbath that occurs during the festival. [Source: hebrew4christians.com]

The eighth day of Sukkot (Tabernacles) was the concluding festival of the fruit harvest [Wikidpedia]

For Christians, this final day of "harvest celebration" pictures the vast second resurrection.

The holiday lasts seven days in Israel and eight in the diaspora. The first day (and second day in the diaspora) is a Shabbat-like holiday when work is forbidden, followed by intermediate days called Chol Hamoed. The festival is closed with another Shabbat-like holiday called Shemini Atzeret (two days in the diaspora, where the second day is called Simchat Torah).

Origins:

In the Book of Leviticus, God told Moses to command the people:

"On the first day you shall take the product of hadar trees, branches of palm trees, boughs of leafy trees, and willows of the brook" (Lev. 23:40), and "You shall live in booths seven days; all citizens in Israel shall live in booths, in order that future generations may know that I made the Israelite people live in booths when I brought them out of the land of Egypt" (Lev. 23:42-43).

The origins of Sukkot are both historical and agricultural. Historically, Sukkot commemorates the forty-year period during which the children of Israel were wandering in the desert, living in temporary shelters. Agriculturally, Sukkot is a harvest festival and is sometimes referred to as Chag HaAsif (חג האסיף, the "Festival of Ingathering"), as it celebrates the gathering of the harvest.

Laws and Customs:

Sukkot is an eight-day holiday, with the first day celebrated as a full festival with special prayer services and holiday meals. The seventh day of Sukkot is called Hoshana Rabbah ("Great Hoshana", referring to the tradition that worshipers in the synagogue walk around the perimeter of the sanctuary during morning services) and has a special observance of its own. Outside Israel, the first and last two days are celebrated as full festivals. The intermediate days are known as Chol HaMoed ("festival weekdays"). According to Halakha, some types of work are forbidden during Chol HaMoed. In Israel many businesses are closed during this time.

Throughout the week of Sukkot, meals are eaten in the sukkah and the males sleep there, although the requirement is waived in case of rain. Every day, a blessing is recited over the Lulav and the Etrog.

The following blessing is recited when eating a meal in the sukkah:

בָּרוּךְ אַתָּה יהוה	Blessed are You,
אֱלֹהֵינוּ מֶלֶךְ הָעוֹלָם	Our God, Creator of time and space,
אֲשֶׁר קִדְּשָׁנוּ בְּמִצְוֹתָיו	who enriches our lives with holiness,

Baruch atah adonai eloheinu melech ha'olam asher kid'shanu b'mitzvotav v'tzivanu leisheiv basukkah.

Observance of Sukkot is detailed in the Book of Nehemiah and Leviticus 23:34-44 in the Bible, the Mishnah (Sukkah 1:1–5:8); the Tosefta (Sukkah 1:1–4:28); and the Jerusalem Talmud (Sukkah 1a–) and Babylonian Talmud (Sukkah 2a–56b).

During the intermediate days of Sukkot, gatherings of music and dance, known as Simchat Beit HaShoeivah (Celebration of the Place of Water-Drawing), take place. This commemorates the drawing of the water for the water-libation on the Altar, an offering unique to Sukkot, when water was carried up the Jerusalem pilgrim road from the Pool of Siloam to the Temple in Jerusalem.

The seventh day of Sukkot is known as Hoshana Rabbah (Great Supplication). This day is marked by a special synagogue service in which seven circuits are made by worshippers holding their Four Species, reciting Psalm 118:25 with additional prayers. In addition, a bundle of five willow branches is beaten on the ground.

The holiday immediately following Sukkot is known as Shemini Atzeret (lit. "Eighth [Day] of Assembly"). Shemini Atzeret is usually viewed as a separate holiday. In the Diaspora a second additional holiday, Simchat Torah ("Joy of the Torah"), is celebrated. In the Land of Israel, Simchat Torah is celebrated on Shemini Atzeret. On Shemini Atzeret people leave their sukkah and eat their meals inside the house. Outside of Israel, many eat in the sukkah without making the blessing. The sukkah is not used on Simchat Torah.

The Feast of Tabernacles (Leviticus 23:33-43; Numbers 29:12-40; Deuteronomy 16:13-15) is the third of the three major Jewish festivals (the other two are Passover and the Feast of Weeks). All adult males were required to travel to the sanctuary to take part. Tabernacles was the only feast with specific instructions to rejoice. This festival began on the 15th day of Tishri (our September-October), the 5th day after the Day of Atonement. It was quite a transition, from the most solemn day of the year to one of the most joyous. The festival lasted 7 days. During the festival the Jewish people lived in tents, or booths, as they had done in the wilderness. It celebrated the completion of the great fall harvest and commemorated the Hebrews living in booths and wandering in the wilderness for 40 years because of their unbelief and disobedience.

The first day of the festival was observed as a day on which no work was permitted, and proceeded with a gathering at the Tabernacle.

The Last Great Day (Shmini Atzeret)

The day after the end of Tabernacles, on the 22nd of Tishri, was also celebrated. It was called the Last Great Day; the 8th, an extra day of assembly. No work was permitted on this day and the people once again gathered at the Tabernacle.

Offerings [During the time of the Temple]

The first day of Tabernacles and the Last Great Day were high days, which were to be treated like Sabbaths. Therefore two additional lambs were to be offered as burnt offering after the morning service. Besides the regular daily offerings, additional animal sacrifices were offered every day:

Day	Burnt Offering			Sin Offering
	Bulls	Rams	One-year-old Male Lambs	Male goat
1	13	2	14	1
2	12	2	14	1
3	11	2	14	1
4	10	2	14	1
5	9	2	14	1
6	8	2	14	1
7	7	2	14	1
Last Great Day	1	1	7	1
(Total)	(71)	(15)	(105)	(8)

The burnt offerings were accompanied by their grain offering and their drink offerings.

Many Americans, upon seeing a decorated sukkah for the first time, remark on how much the sukkah (and the holiday generally) reminds them of Thanksgiving. This is not entirely coincidental. Our American pilgrims, who originated the Thanksgiving holiday, were deeply religious people. When they were trying to find a way to express their thanks for their survival and for the harvest, they looked to the Bible for an appropriate way of celebrating and based their holiday in part on Sukkot.

[Source: http://www.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/jsource/Judaism/holiday5.html]

Another observance important to Sukkot involves the four species (Hebrew, arba minim).

Jews are commanded to take four plants - etrog (a citrus fruit native to Israel); lulav (a palm branch); hadas (a branch from a myrtle tree); and, arava (a willow branch). Joined together, they are used to "rejoice before the L-rd."

Every morning of Sukkot, except on Shabbat, it is the custom to hold the lulav in the right hand and the etrog in the left. Bringing them together (with the pitam, the stem of the etrog pointing downward), the following blessing is recited:

בָּרוּךְ אַתָּה יהוה	Blessed are You,
אֱלֹהֵינוּ מֶלֶךְ הָעוֹלָם	our God, Creator of time and space,
אֲשֶׁר קִדְּשָׁנוּ בְּמִצְוֹתָיו	who enriches our lives with holiness,

Baruch atah adonai eloheinu melech ha'olam asher kid'shanu b'mitzvotav v'tzivanu al n'tilat lulav.

The four species are also held during the Hallel prayer in religious services, and are held during processions around the bimah (the pedestal where the Torah is read) each day during the holiday. These processions commemorate similar processions around the alter of the ancient Temple in Jerusalem. The processions are known as Hoshanahs, because while the procession is made, we recite a prayer with the refrain, "Hosha na!" (please save us!). On the seventh day of Sukkot, seven circuits are made. For this reason, the seventh day of Sukkot is known as Hoshanah Rabbah (the great Hoshanah).

The four species (Hebrew: ארבעת המינים arba'at ha-minim, also called arba'a minim) are four plants mentioned in the Torah (Leviticus 23:40) as being relevant to Sukkot. Karaite Jews build their Sukkot out of branches from the four specified plants (see Other interpretations), while Rabbinic Jews take three types of branches and one type of fruit which are held together and waved in a special ceremony during the Jewish holiday of Sukkot. The waving of the four plants is a mitzvah prescribed by the Torah, and contains symbolic allusions to a Jew's service of God.

In Leviticus 23:40 the Hebrew terms for the four plants are:

- ʻêṣ hāḏār (עֵץ הָדָר), magnificent/beautiful trees
- təmārîm (תְּמָרִים), palm trees
- ʻêṣ ʻāḇōṯ (עֵץ־עָבֹת), thick/leafy trees
- ʻarḇê-nāḥal (עַרְבֵי נַחַל), willows of the brook/valley

In Talmudic tradition, the four plants are identified as:

- etrog (אתרוג) – the fruit of a citron tree
- lulav (לולב) – a ripe, green, closed frond from a date palm tree

"A Remembrance for the Temple"

It was only after the Holy Temple was destroyed that Rabban Yochanan ben Zakai, head of the Sanhedrin-in-exile at Tiberias and composer of the Jerusalem Talmud, enacted that hallel should be recited with the lulav everywhere during the entire festival of Sukkot - as a remembrance for the Holy Temple! This is the origin of our practice today.

Background: Rabban Yochanan and the Destruction

Rabban Yochanan was an eye-witness to the Temple's destruction. Acting out of a firm belief that the Temple would be rebuilt speedily, and concerned that its practices and procedures should remain fresh in Israel's collective consciousness, Rabban Yochanan enacted a series of measures which fully demonstrate the centrality of the Holy Temple in the lives of the Jewish people... a centrality so vibrant and a force so powerful in her life, that it remains not merely a memory, but a fire which refuses to be extinguished. Truly, all other factors in Israel's national life are eclipsed by the importance of the Holy Temple.

Other Temple Remembrances

In addition to this measure concerning the use of the lulav throughout Sukkot as it was done in the Temple, here is another aspect of Rabban Yochanan's legislation: Priests who can keep track of the day on which their shift serves in the Temple service should behave themselves on those days as if the Temple still stood -meaning, they should abstain from drinking wine, so that they will remain in a state of readiness to resume their priestly duties.

Similarly, other customs were adopted by the majority of Israel which were designed to keep the Temple's memory at the forefront of their awareness. For example, the famed sage Hillel's custom of eating the matzah and bitter herb together in a sandwich on the seder night, in the same manner that the Passover celebrants ate in Jerusalem in the shadow of the Temple. Likewise, to paraphrase Psalms 137:6, "Jerusalem is to be raised above our chiefest joy." Thus at the hour of a man's chiefest joy, his wedding, he breaks a glass under his foot to symbolize the destruction of the House of the L-rd. The message is clear: Even this great moment of joy, perhaps the greatest of his life, cannot be complete as long as the Temple still lies in ruins.

In section 560 of Rabbi Joseph Caro's (1488-1575) monumental Code of Jewish Law, we find other instances of these remembrances which were enacted by the great sages living in the generation of the Second Temple's destruction. For example, when an individual builds a home, he must leave a small section of the wall opposite the entrance blank and unplastered.

PURIM

Esther was chosen to be the wife and Queen of King Ahasuerus (believed to be Xerxes I) of Persia. When the King's adviser, Haman, persuades him to kill all the Jews in the empire, Queen Esther's cousin and adopted father, Mordecai, calls on her to use her influence to stop the planned massacre.

The tale is told in the Book of Esther, known as the Megillah, and ends with Haman's hanging and the Jewish people being saved.

The story of Esther is well known and is recorded in the book bearing her name. Here we read how Ahasuerus' wife, Queen Vashti, refused the will of the king and was deposed; how Esther (Hadassah) was chosen to replace her; how evil Haman (said to have been an Amalekite) plotted to exterminate the Jews on account of his feral hatred of Esther's pious cousin Mordecai; how Esther learned of Haman's plot and called for a fast in order to make appeal to the king on behalf of the Jewish people, and how the Jews were given permission by the king to defend themselves and thereby be delivered from their oppressors. As for nasty Haman - all his schemes boomeranged upon him - and he was hung on the very gallows originally built to hang his nemesis, Mordecai.

Much is made over the fact that the book of Esther is the only book of the Tanakh that does not explicitly mention the Name of God. However, the idea of God's sovereignty and hashgachah (divine providence) is clearly implied throughout the entire story. In light of this nes nistar, or "hidden miracle" of the Jew's deliverance, Esther and Mordecai ordained that Purim should be observed as a "day of feasting and merrymaking" and of sending gifts to the poor (Esther 9:22,28). By the way, Purim is so named because Haman had cast lots (purim) to determine the day on which to destroy the Jews.

For the Diaspora, Purim is celebrated on the 14th of Adar, the day after Haman's roll of the dice indicated that the 13th of Adar was most "propitious" for the extermination of the Jews. It is celebrated on the day after since it was on this day that the Jews successfully fended off their enemies and experienced the joy of deliverance. Shushan Purim is observed in Israel a day later still (on Adar 15th). The reason for these different dates of the festival of Purim is that the Jews of Shushan waged war on both the 13th and the 14th of Adar and observed the 15th as a day of festivity and rejoicing, but in the other provinces the Jews waged war on the 13th and observed the 14th as the day of rejoicing. Jews in Israel identify with the Jews of Shushan, and hence its celebration is called "Shushan Purim."

On leap years, Purim is celebrated a month later, during Adar II (though Adar 14th is still observed during leap years as Purim Katan, or "little Purim"). In modern times, many cities have celebrated local "Purims", also called "Purim Katan", all commemorating the deliverance of the local community from a particular antisemitic ruler or group.

Purim is a time of celebration on account of God's victory and deliverance for His people. "Hooray for Mordecai! -- and may Haman and his kind forever be foiled in their attempts to undermine those who call upon the Name of the LORD God of Israel. Amen."

Purim Customs (minhagim)

Today Purim is a happy festival with an almost carnival atmosphere. It is a time to remember that "God worketh all things together for good" for those who are called according to His purposes. It is also a time of special parties and plays put on by children at the synagogue (if you haven't seen a little girl dressed up as Queen Esther and a little boy fumfer (mumber/fumble) his lines as King Ahasuerus, you are missing out on a real treat!).

The Feast of Trumpets

The Feast of Trumpets (Leviticus 23:23-25; Numbers 29:1-6) was on the first day of Tishri. After the exile, it became the New Year's Day (Rosh Hashanna) of the civil year. But the start of the religious year is the first of Nisan.

On this day, a ram horn's horn, or shofar, called the people to prepare for the Day of Atonement. No work was allowed on this day and the people gathered at the Tabernacle. The 10 days from Trumpets to the Day of Atonement were known as "the days of awe" in modern Judaism. During this 10 days the people searched their hearts and examined their lives. The sounding of the shofar was a wake-up blast - a reminder that the time was near for the Day of Atonement.

Offerings [During the time of the Temple]

This was one of the seven high days, which were to be treated like Sabbaths. Therefore two additional lambs were to be offered as burnt offering after the morning service. Because Trumpets was also the first day of the month, the regular new moon sacrifices were also offered. In addition, the offerings on this day consisted of:

	Burnt Offering			Sin Offering
	Bulls	Rams	One-year-old Male Lambs	Male goat
New Moon	2	1	7	1
Trumpets	1	1	7	1

The burnt offerings were accompanied by their grain offering and their drink offerings.

Hanukkah

Hanukkah, the Festival of Lights, is observed for eight days, beginning on the evening of the 25th day of the month of Kislev. It commemorates the historic victory of a small band of Maccabees over the ruling Syrian-Greek regime.

The story of Hanukkah began in the reign of Alexander the Great. Alexander conquered Syria, Egypt and Palestine, but allowed the lands under his control to continue observing their own religions and retain a certain degree of autonomy. More than a century later, Antiochus Epiphanes, a successor of Alexander, became king of the Syrian-Greeks. He forced the Jews to worship the pagan idols and adopt the Greek culture. Whole families of Jews were executed for their observance of the Sabbath and circumcision. Tens of thousands of men, women, children and infants, who would worship no other gods, were martyred.

In 167 B.C. Antiochus Epiphanes marched to Jerusalem, entered the Temple and defiled it. He set up an idol of his god, Zeus, in the Temple and built an altar to Zeus. On the altar, he sacrificed a pig, which the Torah prohibits the Jews to eat. The pig's blood was brought into the Most Holy Place where even the High Priest alone could only enter on the Day of Atonement. This abomination was unheard of before.

In the Judean village of Modi'in, the people were assembled in the town square by Syrian Greek soldiers. An altar was built, and the old priest Mattathias was ordered to sacrifice a pig for the townspeople to eat. Mattathias refused to defile himself or his people. The soldiers insisted, offering great financial incentive.

Finally, another man from the village volunteered to collaborate with the Syrian Greeks. As the man approached the pig, Mattathias suddenly ran forward and assassinated the collaborator, striking the man with a large mallet or hammer. (Thus the name "Maccabees"<Hammer>, for the Hasmoneans)

The five sons of Mattathias drew their weapons, struck down the soldiers, and headed for the hills. They were joined by many fellow revolutionaries, and so began a lopsided revolt against the mighty Syrian Greek Empire.

Soon after, the leadership of the ragtag Jewish army passed to Mattathias' son, Judah, nicknamed the Hammer, or in Hebrew, Maccabee. Thereafter, the revolutionaries were known as The Maccabees.

After three years of Jewish guerilla warfare, the rebels achieved victory. On the 25 of Kislev, 165 BC, the Maccabees triumphantly entered the defiled and half-demolished Temple. They then began the process of rededication.

The undying, eternal flame of the Temple Menorah, the great seven-branched lampstand so central to the worship of Israel, had been extinguished. The Greeks had desecrated nearly all of the sacred oil used for the Temple Menorah. Only a small container remained, containing a one day supply. It would take eight days for the priests to consecrate more oil. Nevertheless, the High priest kindled the Menorah and a miracle happened: The Menorah flame continued to burn for eight days!

To commemorate the event, it was decided that henceforth, the holiday would be observed annually by kindling one new light each day for eight days. Thus Hanukkah became known as the Feast of Lights.

The Hanukkah Menorah has nine branches [which differs from the seven branch Temple Menorah], eight to commemorate this eight day feast. In celebration, each night of Hanukkah Jews light candles on their menorah, beginning with the shamash (central candle, which lights the others, and in some menorahs is raised over the other eight).

Hebrew Roots FAQ's and Myths – Hanakkuh

(includes historical and Jewish traditional background on the festival)
http://www.seekgod.ca/hr/hrfaqs4a2.htm

Includes answers to following FAQ's / Myths:

Jesus celebrated Hanukkah not Christmas, and we should be celebrating Chanukkah instead of pagan Christmas.

Hanukkah commemorates the miracle of the oil and the victory of the Maccabees over the Gentile rule and should be celebrated by those in Hebrew Roots or Messianics instead of pagan Christmas.

The Hanukkah Menorah with nine candles symbolizes Christ and therefore all Messianics and Christians should be celebrating Hanukkah instead of pagan Christmas.

Christians believe Christmas is Jesus' birthday.

The Hanukkah festival is observed in Judaism by the lighting of a special nine candle Menorah, although the Menorah ordained by God for the Temple has seven candles. One candle is lit per night, and each additional candle is lit on each night of the holiday, progressing to the eighth on the last night. The ninth candle, separated either above or below the rest, is called the 'shamash' or guard or servant candle, which is lit each night in order to light the other candles. It's purpose is fully secular, not religious, and is strictly for Judaism to which this holiday belongs.

According to the Talmud, the purpose of the extra light is to adhere to the prohibition, specified in Tracate Shabbat 21b–23a, against using the Hanukkah lights for anything other than publicizing and meditating on the Hanukkah story.

The Hebrew word of hanukkah or chanukkah is used in the Old Testament eight times. It means 'dedication.' and is found in Numbers 7:10, 11, 84, 88; 2 Chronicles 7:9; Nehemiah 12:27 and Psalms 30:1. The secondary language found in the Old Testament, Aramaic, uses hanukkah precisely four times, in Daniel 3:2,3 and Ezra 6:16 & 17 and spells it chanukka. Invariably, the word hanukkah refers to the dedication of the altar in front of the Tent of Meeting, the Temple built by Solomon, or the wall of Jerusalem. The two times in Daniel 3 it is not used for those purposes, but rather is found used in reference to the dedication and worship of the image of Nebuchadnezzar in Babylon. Those that refused to worship it were to be thrown into a fire.

??? The dates of Hanukkah and Christmas might well be associated because 25 Kislev was when the Temple was rededicated and the early Church chose December 25th because they took over the birthday of Greek god Zeus/Roman god Jupiter.

Candle Lighting Procedures

The procedures for lighting the chanukiah (Chanukah menorah) are as follows. On the first night (unless it is Friday), after the stars appear, the first candle is placed at the end of the menorah, facing the right hand. We light the shamash (i.e., the servant candle), recite the traditional blessings (lehadlik ner shel Chanukah, she'ash nissim, and the Shehecheyanu) and then light the rightmost candle. We return the shamash to its holder. We then recite the Ha-nerot ha-lalu statement and celebrate! We let the candles burn all the way down....

On the second night, we add one candle to the left (now we have two at the right end of the menorah). We light the shamash, recite the blessings (minus the Shehecheyanu), and light the candles left-to-right in the menorah (i.e., the newest candle is lit first). Again we recite the Ha-nerot ha-lalu statement and celebrate! And so on for each of the eight days of Chanukah.

This procedure continues until the eighth night, when the entire chanukiah is lit up:

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

The last night of Chanukah is called Zot Chanukah, "This is Chanukah" (from the Chanukah Torah portion for the last day: זאת חֲנֻכַּת הַמִּזְבֵּחַ בְּיוֹם הִמָּשַׁח אתו / "This is the dedication (chanukah) of the altar, in the day of its being anointed..." (Num. 7:84)). It marks the grand finale of the Chanukah celebration, when the supernatural light burns brightest!

Note: If a day of Chanukah occurs on a Shabbat (i.e., Friday night), you light the Chanukiah candles before lighting the Shabbat candles.

Displaying the Chanukiah

It is an old custom to display the chanukiah where its lights will be visible from the outside. Note that if you place the chanukiah near a window, the candles should appear lit right to left from the point of view of the one seeing them from outside. Many families have multiple chanukiahs, one for each child of the household, and perhaps a larger one for the entire family.

Here's a practical tip. To clean your chanukiah after Chanukah, use a hairdryer -- set on low -- and heat up the menorah wherever you see the wax drippings. Use a butter knife to peel away the warmed wax....

How Do You Light The Hanukkiah?

Each night, you light the Shammas (servant) candle first. Then you use the Shammas to light the others. Then every night, you light one more candle. You light from the right to left, starting with the candle for the newest night. On the last night, all 8 candles are burning brightly including the Shammas (servant) in celebration of the miracle.

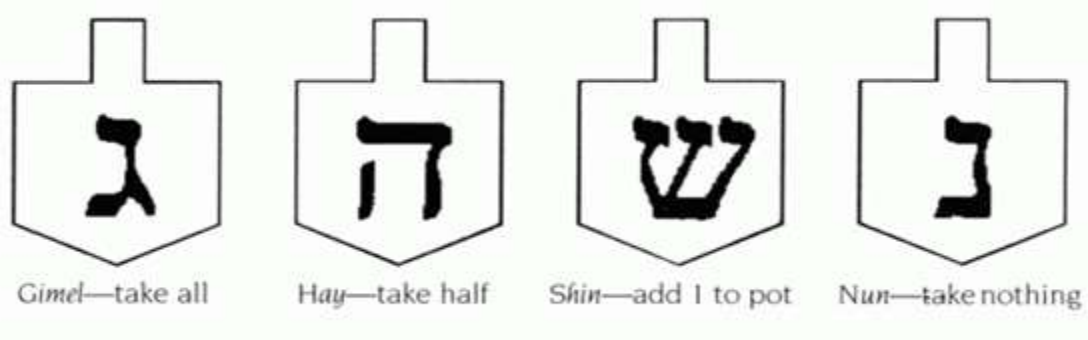
How to Play the Dreidel Game



Each side of the dreidel bears a letter of the Hebrew alphabet: Nun, Gimel, Hay and Shin. Together, they form the acronym for "Nes", "Gadol", "Haya", and "Sham" which means "a great miracle happened there".

These letters also form a mnemonic for the rules for playing the dreidel game:

- Nun stands for the Yiddish word "nit" which means 'nothing'
- Hay stands for "halb" which means 'half'
- Gimel for "gants" which means 'all'
- Shin for "shteln" which means 'put in'

Game Instructions

1. Give each person the same amount of money, candy or nuts.
2. Each player puts one piece in the pot.
3. The first player spins the dreidel and does what the dreidel says.
4. After a player gets money, everyone puts one more piece into the pot.
5. Everyone gets a turn. When you are finished playing, you can keep the money or eat your candy or nuts.

The Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur)

Leviticus 16:29-31 (NASB)

29 "This shall be a permanent statute for you: in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, you shall humble your souls and not do any work, whether the native, or the alien who sojourns among you;

30 for it is on this day that atonement shall be made for you to cleanse you; you will be clean from all your sins before the LORD.

31 "It is to be a sabbath of solemn rest for you, that you may humble your souls; it is a permanent statute.

Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, comes on the tenth day of the Jewish month of Tishri (September/October in the secular calendar). Because this day is the most solemn day in the year, it is known as "The Day."

The Week Before

A week before the Day of Atonement, the High Priest would leave his own house, and took up his quarter in the side chambers in the Temple. A substitute was appointed for him, in case he should die or become Levitically unfit for his duties. During the whole of that week, he would perform all the temple duties, such as burning the incense, lighting the lamps, offering the daily sacrifice, etc. In addition, he would study two Torah portions and learn them by heart to make sure he didn't make any mistakes.

The Eve

On the eve of the Day of Atonement, the High Priest would stay up all night learning Torah and preparing himself spiritually. If he fell asleep, young priests woke him up by reciting psalms. Sometimes they would make the High Priest stand all night on the cold, stone floor.

The Morning Service

On the Day of Atonement, not ordinary priest, but the High Priest alone officiated. Throughout the day, he would wash his whole body five times, and his hands and feet ten times.

When the first dawn of morning came, the High Priest bathed and put on his usual priestly garments - the golden garments.

Exodus 28:4, 36, 42 (NASB)

4 "These are the garments which they shall make: a breastpiece and an ephod and a robe and a tunic of checkered work, a turban and a sash, and they shall make holy garments for Aaron your brother and his sons, that he may minister as priest to Me.

36 "You shall also make a plate of pure gold and shall engrave on it, like the engravings of a seal, 'Holy to the LORD.'

42 "You shall make for them linen breeches to cover their bare flesh; they shall reach from the loins even to the thighs.

The golden garments

The golden garments consisted of eight items: tunic, belt, turban, pants, breastplate, ephod, robe, and a golden head plate. Over the white tunic, he put on the sky-blue robe, hemmed with decorative pomegranates and bells which rang as he moved around. Then he put on the ephod, which looked like an apron and was fastened by a long belt. There were two shoulder-straps sewn onto the belt. These straps went behind, up and over the priest's shoulders. Two sardonyx stones were attached at the ends of these straps, on the shoulders. He also put on a breastplate, set with twelve precious stones, one stone representing each of the twelve tribes of Israel. His turban differed from those of the ordinary priests, and had in front a golden plate inscribed "Holy to the Lord".

These were called "golden garments," because gold, the symbol of splendor, appeared in them. More about the priestly garments...

He then washed his hands and feet, and proceeded to perform the regular morning service, including the morning's sacrifice, the lighting of the lamps and the burning of incense.

This was one of the seven high days, which were to be treated like Sabbaths. Therefore two additional lambs were to be offered as burnt offering after the morning service.

The Yom Kippur Services

Before the High Priest began the peculiar part of the day's services, he washed his hands and feet, put off his "golden garments", took a bath and changed into a simple robe made of white linen, and again washed his hands and feet.

Leviticus 16:4 (NASB)

4 "He shall put on the holy linen tunic, and the linen undergarments shall be next to his body, and he shall be girded with the linen sash and attired with the linen turban (these are holy garments). Then he shall bathe his body in water and put them on.

The white garments

Only on the Day of Atonement would the High Priest wear the white garments: tunic, belt, turban and pants. This signifies that the High Priest came before God within the Most Holy Place humbly and simply. He did not come in the outward splendor of gold and rich colors, but in pure white. Furthermore, white is the color of forgiveness, and forgiveness is what the High Priest is seeking for himself and all Israel as he came before the Ark.

Part 1. Sin Offering

Leviticus 16:6 (NASB)

6 "Then Aaron shall offer the bull for the sin offering which is for himself, that he may make atonement for himself and for his household.

He walked over to a young bullock stood between the Temple-porch and the great bronze altar. Standing towards the east (that is, the worshipers), he turned the head of the bullock towards the west (that is, to face the sanctuary), laid both his hands on the head of the bullock, and prayed for himself and for his family a prayer of confession.

Part 2. Choosing the Scapegoat

Leviticus 16:7-10 (NASB)

7 "He shall take the two goats and present them before the LORD at the doorway of the tent of meeting.

8 "Aaron shall cast lots for the two goats, one lot for the LORD and the other lot for the scapegoat.

9 "Then Aaron shall offer the goat on which the lot for the LORD fell, and make it a sin offering.

10 "But the goat on which the lot for the scapegoat fell shall be presented alive before the LORD, to make atonement upon it, to send it into the wilderness as the scapegoat.

The High Priest then walked over to two identical goats. He cast a lot to choose which of the two goats was to be "for JEHOVAH" and the other, a scapegoat, bore the collective sins of the people.

Having designated each of the two goats, the High Priest tied a piece of red wool around the horns of the scapegoat, then a piece was cut off and tied to the temple door. Another piece of red wool was tied around the throat of the goat for Jehovah, which was to be slain.

According to Jewish tradition, each year when the scapegoat died, the red wool on the temple door turned white as if to signify the atonement of another Yom Kippur was acceptable to the Lord. But 40 years before the second Temple was destroyed the red wool stopped turning white.

The scapegoat, was now turned around towards the people, and stood facing them, waiting, as it were, till their sins should be laid on him. With this presentation of the scapegoat before the people commenced the third and most solemn part of the expiatory services of the day.

Part 3. The Confession and the Sacrifice

Leviticus 16:11-12 (NASB)

11 "Then Aaron shall offer the bull of the sin offering which is for himself and make atonement for himself and for his household, and he shall slaughter the bull of the sin offering which is for himself.

12 "He shall take a firepan full of coals of fire from upon the altar before the LORD and two handfuls of finely ground sweet incense, and bring it inside the veil.

The High Priest now once more returned towards the sanctuary, and once again laid his two hands on the same bullock, which still stood between the porch and the altar. Once again the High Priest made the confession, over the bullock, this time for himself, his family and also the priesthood.

The young bullock was then slaughtered and its blood collected in a basin for later use. An attendant received the basin and kept it stirring so that the blood would not coagulate.

Then came the most important part of the ceremony. The High Priest walked up the ramp to the altar, filled a gold censer with coals and a golden ladle with incense. Then, with everyone watching, he walked into the Most Holy Place, where no one but the High Priest entered except on Yom Kippur.

Part 4. Inside the Most Holy Place

Leviticus 16:13 (NASB)

13 "He shall put the incense on the fire before the LORD, that the cloud of incense may cover the mercy seat that is on the ark of the testimony, otherwise he will die.

The veil was folded back, and the High Priest stood alone and separated from the people outside. He placed the censer between the staves of the Ark. He now carefully put the incense into his hand, and threw it on the coals of the censer. He waited until the smoke filled the Most Holy Place, and if all went well, emerged unscathed from the inner sanctuary.

While the incense was being offered in the Most Holy Place, the people withdrew from proximity to it, and worshiped in silence. At last the people saw the High Priest emerging from the sanctuary, and they knew that the service had been accepted.

Part 5. The Sprinkling of the Blood

14 "Moreover, he shall take some of the blood of the bull and sprinkle it with his finger on the mercy seat on the east side; also in front of the mercy seat he shall sprinkle some of the blood with his finger seven times.

15 "Then he shall slaughter the goat of the sin offering which is for the people, and bring its blood inside the veil and do with its blood as he did with the blood of the bull, and sprinkle it on the mercy seat and in front of the mercy seat.

16 "He shall make atonement for the holy place, because of the impurities of the sons of Israel and because of their transgressions in regard to all their sins; and thus he shall do for the tent of meeting which abides with them in the midst of their impurities.

17 "When he goes in to make atonement in the holy place, no one shall be in the tent of meeting until he comes out, that he may make atonement for himself and for his household and for all the assembly of Israel.

18 "Then he shall go out to the altar that is before the LORD and make atonement for it, and shall take some of the blood of the bull and of the blood of the goat and put it on the horns of the altar on all sides.

19 "With his finger he shall sprinkle some of the blood on it seven times and cleanse it, and from the impurities of the sons of Israel consecrate it.

The High Priest took from the attendant, who kept it stirring, the blood of the bullock. Once more he entered into the Most Holy Place, and sprinkled with his finger once upwards, towards the Mercy Seat, and seven times downwards. Coming out from the Most Holy Place, the High Priest now placed the basin of blood before the veil.

Next, the remaining goat was slaughtered. The High Priest then entered the Most Holy Place the third time, and sprinkled as before, once upwards and seven times downwards. He then came out and again placed the basin with the blood of the goat before the veil.

Now he took the basin with the bullock's blood, he sprinkled once upwards and seven times downwards towards the veil, outside the Most Holy Place, and then did the same with the blood of the goat.

Finally, he poured the blood of the bullock into the basin containing the blood of the goat, then poured the mixed blood back into the basin which had held the blood of the bullock, so that the two were thoroughly mixed together. He then sprinkled each of the horns of the altar of incense, and then seven times on the top of the altar of incense.

He then took the remaining blood outside to the inner court and poured out on the west side of the base of the altar of burnt offering.

Now the High Priest had cleansed the sanctuary in all its parts: the Most Holy Place, the veil, the Holy Place, the altar of incense, and the altar of burnt offering. The continuation of typical sacrificial communion with God was once again restored. [See also "Services of Priests" in this Appendix]

Part 6. The Scapegoat

20 "When he finishes atoning for the holy place and the tent of meeting and the altar, he shall offer the live goat.

21 "Then Aaron shall lay both of his hands on the head of the live goat, and confess over it all the iniquities of the sons of Israel and all their transgressions in regard to all their sins; and he shall lay them on the head of the goat and send it away into the wilderness by the hand of a man who stands in readiness.

22 "The goat shall bear on itself all their iniquities to a solitary land; and he shall release the goat in the wilderness.

All this while the scapegoat was standing looking eastwards, facing the people, and waiting to bear the sins of all the people to a solitary land. Laying both his hands on the head of this goat, the High Priest now confessed and pleaded for all the people.

The scapegoat was then led through the temple's east gate to a waiting priest whose job was to take it to a predetermined spot about ten to twelve miles away. Along the way, there were ten stations with food or drink in case the tired priest needed to break his fast. When the priest came to the final station, he pushed the goat off a cliff. Using a system of signal flags, the priest leading the animal would message back to the Temple that the sins of the people were forgiven.

And, tradition has it that when the sacrifice was fully accepted the piece of red wool on the temple door would turn miraculously white, to symbolize the gracious promise in Isaiah 1:18; but it adds that this miracle did not take place for 40 years before the destruction of the second Temple, that is, after Christ Himself completed the final sacrifice.

Part 7. The Carcasses Burnt "Outside the City"

Leviticus 16:27 (NASB)

27 "But the bull of the sin offering and the goat of the sin offering, whose blood was brought in to make atonement in the holy place, shall be taken outside the camp, and they shall burn their hides, their flesh, and their refuse in the fire.

While the scapegoat was being led into the wilderness, the High Priest proceeded to cut up the bullock and the goat, put the "inwards" (internal organs) in a vessel, and sent their carcasses to be burnt outside the city, in the place where the Temple ashes were usually deposited.

Then the High Priest, still wearing the linen garments, offered with a series of prayers and read the passages concerning the Day of Atonement, i.e. Leviticus 16; 23:27-32; also repeating by heart Numbers 29:7-11.

Conclusion of the Yom Kippur Services

Leviticus 16:23-25 (NASB)

23 "Then Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting and take off the linen garments which he put on when he went into the holy place, and shall leave them there.

24 "He shall bathe his body with water in a holy place and put on his clothes, and come forth and offer his burnt offering and the burnt offering of the people and make atonement for himself and for the people.

25 "Then he shall offer up in smoke the fat of the sin offering on the altar.

The High Priest again washed his hands and feet, put off his linen garments, bathed, put on his "golden garments," and once more washed hands and feet.

He now appeared again before the people as the Lord's annointed. Before he offered the burnt offerings for the afternoon service, he sacrificed a male goat as a sin offering. The flesh of this sin offering was eaten at night by the priests within the sanctuary.

Next, he sacrificed the burnt offerings for the people and that for himself, and finally burned the "inwards" of the special offerings. This, properly speaking, finished the services of the day.

Evening Service

Although the special Yom Kippur service was concluded, the regular evening temple service still had to be completed.

He offered the ordinary evening sacrifice, then washed his hands and his feet, once more put off his "golden garments," bathed, and put on his "linen garments," and again washed his hands and feet. Then he entered the Most Holy Place a fourth time, to fetch from it the censer and incense dish which he had left there.

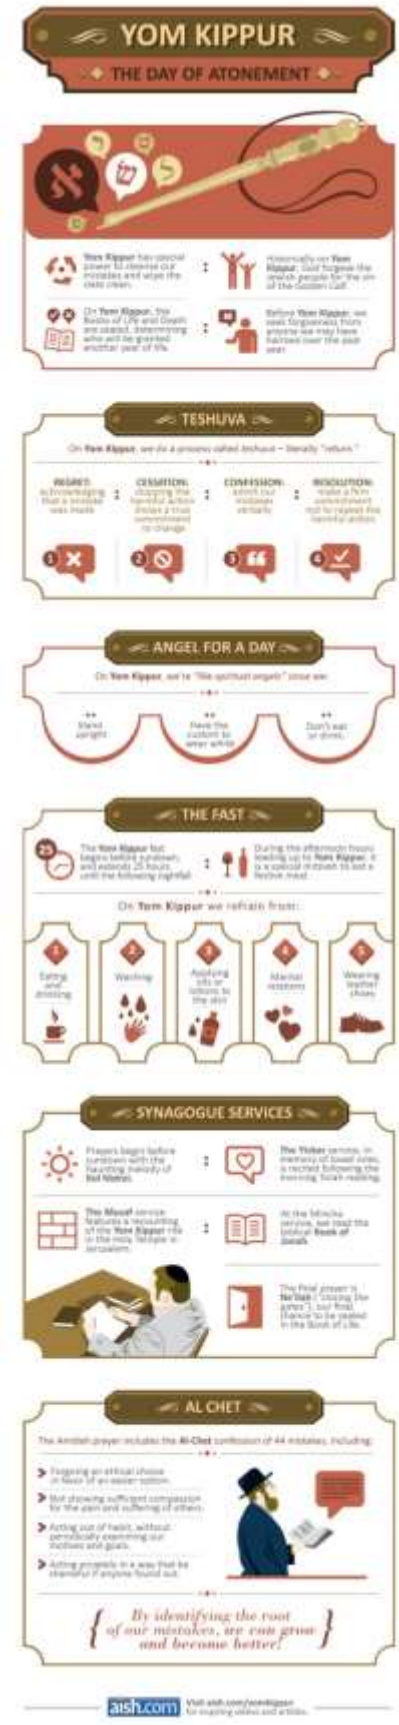
On his return he washed once more hands and feet, put off his "linen garments", which were never to be used again, bathed, put on his "golden garments," washed hands and feet, burnt the evening incense on the golden altar and lit the lamps.

Finally, he washed his hands and feet, put off his "golden garments," and put on his ordinary layman's dress.

When he finally went home, he was accompanied by well wishers, who after praying and fasting all day, wanted to thank the High Priest for a successful Yom Kippur. At home, however, he could still not relax. As High Priest, it was his duty to invite fellow priests and dignitaries to a feast.

Dance Following Yom Kippur

It was also the custom following Yom Kippur, for unmarried young men and women to go dancing in the vineyards to find mates. All the young women wore white so the rich would not have an advantage over the poor who could not afford finer clothes.



Yom Kippur of Today

During the times of the Temple, the Yom Kippur service was focused on the High Priest. Today each individual focuses on himself and his personal service to God. Emphasis had shifted from sacrifices and priestly rituals to prayer, repentance and giving of charity. For more information, visit the web at http://www.everythingjewish.com/YomK/YK_origins.htm.

Rosh Hashanah (The Jewish Calendar New Year)

Rosh HaShanah an autumnal festival that marks the begining of the new year in the Jewish calendar. It it celebrated for two days on the first and second of Tishrei.

In Hebrew, the phrase Rosh Hashanah literally means "head of the year" and thus the holiday is commonly known as the Jewish New Year. This name is somewhat deceptive to those unaffiliated with Jewish practices, however, as there is little similarity between Rosh Hashanah, one of the holiest days in the Jewish year, and the Western, secular interpretation of New Years.

There is, however, one important similarity between the Jewish New Year and the secular one: many people use New Years as a time to make "resolution" and plan to lead a better life. Likewise, the Jewish New Year is a time to begin introspection, looking back at the mistakes of the past year and planning the changes to make in the new year. This period of introspection does not end at the conclusion of Rosh HaShanah but actualy stretches for ten days, known commonly as the Days of Awe, until Yom Kippur.

The name "Rosh Hashanah" is not used in the Bible to discuss this holiday. The Bible refers to the holiday as Yom HaZikkaron (the day of remembrance) or Yom T'ruah (the day of the sounding of the shofar). The holiday is instituted in Leviticus 23:24-25.

The shofar is a ram's horn which is blown somewhat like a trumpet. One of the most important observances of this holiday is hearing the sounding of the shofar in the synagogue. A total of 100 notes are sounded each day. There are four different types of shofar notes: tekiah, a 3 second sustained note; shevarim, three 1-second notes rising in tone, teruah, a series of short, staccato notes extending over a period of about 3 seconds; and tekiah gedolah (literally, "big tekiah"), the final blast in a set, which lasts (I think) 10 seconds minimum. The Bible gives no specific reason for this practice. One that has been suggested is that the shofar's sound is a call to repentance. The shofar is not blown if the holiday falls on a Sabbath.

No work is permitted on Rosh Hashanah.

Another popular observance during this holiday is eating apples dipped in honey, a symbol of our wish for a sweet new year. We also dip bread in honey (instead of the usual practice of sprinkling salt on it) at this time of year for the same reason. In addition to dipping an apple honey, we eat round challah bread to symbolize the circle of the life and the cycle of a new year. The challah is also in the shape of a crown because we refer to God as royalty several times throughout the holidays.

Another popular practice of the holiday is Tashlikh ("casting off"). We walk to flowing water, such as a creek or river, on the afternoon of the first day and empty our pockets into the river, symbolically casting off our sins. This practice is not discussed in the Bible, but is a long-standing custom.

Religious services for the holiday focus on the concept of God's sovereignty.

The common greeting at this time is L'shanah tovah ("for a good year"). This is a shortening of "L'shanah tovah tikatev v'taihatem" (or to women, "L'shanah tovah tikatevi v'taihatemi"), which means "May you be inscribed and sealed for a good year." More on that concept at Days of Awe.

A shofar is an instrument made from the horn of a ram or other kosher animal. It was used in ancient Israel to announce the New Moon (Rosh Chodesh) and call people together. It was also blown on Rosh Hashanah, marking the beginning of the New Year, signifying both need to wake up to the call to repentance, and in connection with the portion read on the second day of Rosh Hashanah, the Binding of Isaac (Genesis, chapter 22) in which Abraham sacrifices a ram in place of his son, Isaac.

Today, the shofar is featured most prominently in the Rosh Hashanah morning services. It is considered a commandment to hear the shofar blown.

There is a great deal of symbolism tied in with the legal requirements for what constitutes a proper shofar. The shofar of Rosh Hashanah, whose purpose it is to rouse the Divine in the listener, may not be constructed of an artificial instrument. It must be an instrument in its natural form and naturally hollow, through whom sound is produced by human breath, which God breathes into human beings. This pure, and natural sound, symbolizes the lives it calls Jews to lead. What is more, the most desirable shofar is the bent horn of a ram. The ram reminds one of Abraham's willing sacrifice of that which was most precious to him. The curve in the horn mirrors the contrition of the one who repents.

In the Talmud, we read: Rabbi Abbahu said:

Why do we sound the shofar? Because the Holy One, blessed be God, said: Blow me a ram's horn that I may remember to your credit the binding of Isaac, the son of Abraham, and I shall account it to you as a binding of yourselves before Me. The Torah tells us: Abraham look up and behold, he saw a ram caught in the thicket by its horns [Genesis 22:13]. This teaches us that the Holy One, blessed be God, showed our ancestor Abraham the ram tearing himself free from one thicket and becoming entangled in another. Said the Holy One, blessed be God, to Abraham: Thus are your children destined to be caught in iniquities and entangled in misfortunes, but in the end they will be redeemed by the horns of a ram. Therefore the prophet Zechariah said of the time of redemption: And the Lord shall be seen over them, and his arrow shall go forth like the lightning; and the Lord God shall blow the shofar, and shall move in stormy winds of the south [Zechariah 9:14]. [Rosh Hashanah 16a]

According to Leo Rosten, “The bend in the shofar is supposed to represent how a human heart, in true repentance, bends before the Lord. The ram's horn serves to remind the pious how Abraham, offering his son Isaac in sacrifice, was reprieved when God decided that Abraham could sacrifice a ram instead. The man who blows the shofar is required to be of blameless character and conspicuous devotion; he must blow blasts of different timbre, some deep, some high, some quavering.”

"When more than one kind of offering was presented (as in Numbers 6:16-17), the procedure was usually as follows:

1. sin offering or trespass offering,
2. burnt offering,
3. peace offering and grain offering (along with a drink offering).

This sequence furnishes part of the spiritual significance of the sacrificial system. First, sin had to be dealt with (sin offering or trespass offering). Second, the worshiper committed himself completely to God (burnt offering and grain offering). Third, fellowship or communion between the Lord, the priest and the worshiper (peace offering) was established. To state it another way, there were sacrifices of expiation (sin offerings and trespass offerings), consecration (burnt offerings and grain offerings) and communion (peace offerings). " (A portion of the table and the above information are extracted from the NIV Study Bible.)

Offerings

Daily the priest offered 1 lamb in the morning service and 1 lamb in the evening service. On a Sabbath, 2 additional lambs were offered after the morning service.

Seven high days are designated in Leviticus 23 (verses 7, 8, 21, 25, 28, 30-32, 35-36). These high days are Sabbaths. They were to be treated like the seventh day Sabbath, even though they could occur on a day other than the seventh day (Saturday) of the week - which was the normal Jewish Sabbath. On a high day, besides the daily regular offerings, the priest offered 2 additional lambs after the morning service, and additional sacrifices for the day. These seven high days were:

1. The 1st day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread (Nisan 15)
2. The 7th day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread (Nisan 21)
3. The Feast of Weeks (Sivan 6)
4. The Feast of Trumpets (Tishri 1)
5. The Day of Atonement (Tishri 10)
6. The 1st day of the Feast of Tabernacles (Tishri 15)

* Feast of Weeks (Pentecost): Numbers 28:27 recorded 2 bulls and 1 ram, but Leviticus 23:18 recorded 1 bull and 2 rams.

Notes - Special Offering on The Day of Atonement

Normally a bull was offered as sin offering for the whole congregation (Leviticus 4:13-14). But once a year on the Day of Atonement, a goat was offered instead. And for the High Priest, a bull was offered as sin offering (Leviticus 16:14-15). Another live goat, or the scapegoat, was to be sent to the wilderness (Leviticus 16:20-22). These were the special offerings during the atonement ceremony.

Besides the regular daily offering and atonement sin offerings, one bull, one ram and seven lambs were also offered (Numbers 29:7-11).

The Five Scrolls (Megilloth) and Festival Liturgy

The Megilloth usually composes the second subsection of the Writings and includes the five scrolls, which are also the five shortest books in the Writings: Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, and Esther. In many Jewish communities, these five books have become part of the liturgy of five annual feasts:

- Passover—Song of Songs
- Pentecost—Ruth
- Ninth of Ab—Lamentations
- Feast of Tabernacles—Ecclesiastes
- Purim—Esther

The Meaning of the Jewish Holy Days for Christians

Several significant points must be remembered when we examine the Spring Feasts of Israel, as listed by Marvin J. Rosenthal in The Feasts of the Lord."

· First, these seven feasts of the Lord were given to the Hebrew nation. The Jewish people are God's covenant people.

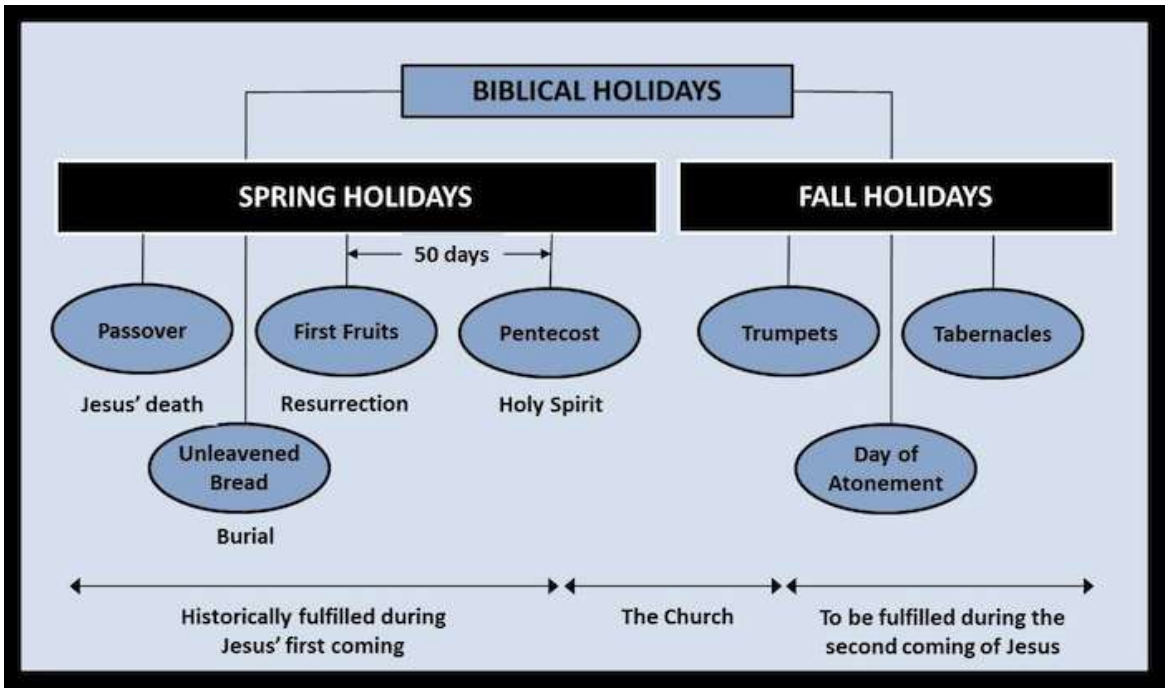
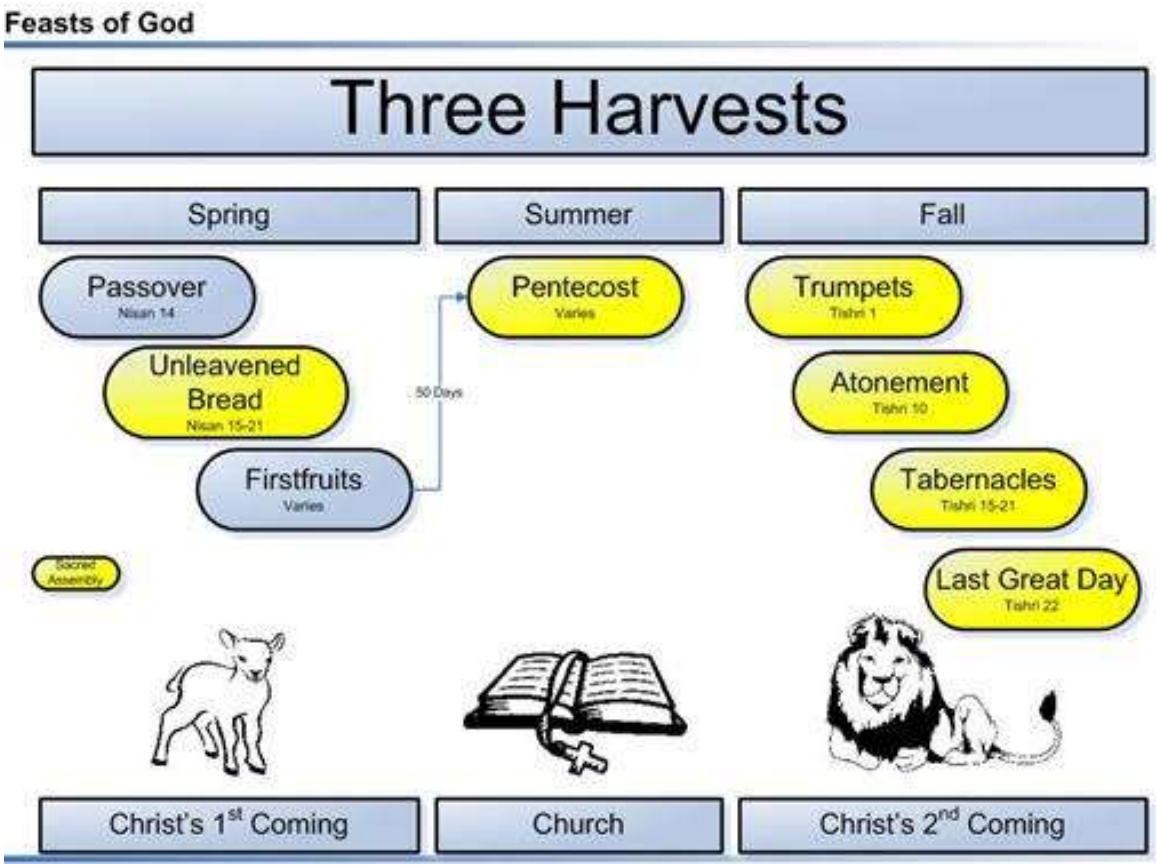
· Third, the timing of the seven feasts is based on the Jewish Lunar (moon) calendar of approximately 354-day years.



· Fourth and fundamentally, these seven feasts typify the sequence, timing and significance of the major events of the Lord's redemptive career. They commence at Calvary where Jesus voluntarily gave Himself for the sins of the world (Passover), and climax at the establishment of the messianic Kingdom at the Messiah's second coming (Tabernacles).



· Fifth, because the spiritual realities to which the feasts clearly point are fulfilled in Messiah, all men everywhere have been placed in an opportune position.

· Sixth, the participation of Gentiles in the blessing associated with the feasts God appointed for Israel should come as no surprise. It is consistent with God's unconditional covenant to the patriarch Abraham, the central provision of which is, "In your seed all the nations of the earth shall be blessed" (Genesis 22:18)"

Messiah in the Hebrew Feasts

The Hebrew word for feasts, moedim, literally means “appointed times.” Seven special Jewish feasts were divinely appointed by God to point believers to the person and work of the Messiah (Col 2:16-17). These feasts, some of which were designated as extra Sabbath rests, are listed in Leviticus 23, and are separated into two groups: the first set of feasts take place in the spring and are generally understood to point to what Jesus did in His first coming c. 33AD. The second set of feasts takes place in the fall of each calendar year, yet to be fulfilled. It is believed that these fall feasts relate to Christ’s Second Coming.

While the Bible does not spell out every correlation between each feast and the fulfillment in Christ, a number of the connections are not difficult to see.

Messiah in the the Spring Feasts

Passover Feast – Pesach - Nisan 14 (Mar / Apr) Exodus 12:1-28; Leviticus 23:5
FEAST	CHRIST
The Children of Israel first celebrated this feast on the same night they left Egypt. The Angel of Death made his way through the land, killing the firstborn of every home but passing over all homes covered by the blood of the lamb. God marked the month of Abib (later named Nisan) as the first month of the religious New Year.	John the Baptist introduced Jesus as “The Lamb of God which takes away the sin of the world”. The parallels between Christ and the Passover Lamb are significant, and highlight the sacrificial Messiah (1 Cor 5:7) as the fulfillment of the prophecies, types, shadows and metaphors in the Law, Prophets and Psalms (Old Testament).
• On the 10th day of the first month, a spotless male lamb was to be chosen and then observed for 4 days to ensure the lamb was free of defect and imperfection.	• In the final week of Christ’s ministry on earth, He was examined/tested by His detractors. His responses proved His holiness. (Matt 21 - 22; Luke 11:53; Luke 11:54; John 8:46; 18:38)
• On the 14th, the Passover, the lamb was killed and roasted over an open fire.	• Jesus was tortured and crucified on the 14th and truly died.
• None of the lamb's bones were to be broken.	• Unlike the thieves, none of Christ’s bones were broken.
• Passover was only to be celebrated by true believers (Israelites and proselytes), the lamb was to be completely eaten (any portions not eaten was to be buried), and they were to be fully dressed for travel while eating the lamb.	• Followers of Christ must ‘consume’ Him completely (John 6:54-58), and be prepared to follow Him wherever He leads. (Matt 4:18-25)
• During the Exodus, the Israelites were required to put the blood of the lamb on their door posts, thereby causing the Angel of Death to pass over their homes. The Angel of Death struck every home not covered by the lamb’s blood.	• On Judgment Day, only those who believe in Jesus as the Messiah are saved by His blood from eternal death. Those not covered by the blood of the Lamb, regardless of their religion, beliefs or ethnicity, will be sent to hell. (2 Thess 1:7-9, Rev 13:8; 21:27)

Unleavened Bread – Hag Hamatzot - Nisan 15 (Mar / Apr) Exodus 12; Leviticus 23:6
FEAST	CHRIST

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Starting the day after Passover, the Israelite's home was to be rid of all leaven (yeast), a representation of sin. Sin and a holy God cannot abide together (2 Cor 6:14-18), nor can a holy God allow sin to go unpunished (Exod 34:5-7). The feast lasted seven days, the first and last of which were special Sabaaths.

All Jewish males were required to travel to Jerusalem to attend the Feast of Unleavened Bread.

Jesus was without sin and the perfect sacrifice for all time (1 Peter 2:22-24). After Jesus was killed on the cross, He was placed in a new tomb (Jn 19:41). While the Israelites celebrated the Feast of Unleavened Bread, the Holy Lamb of God was lying, sinless, in a tomb, awaiting resurrection as the Bread of Life. Perhaps it is coincidental, but after the resurrection, Jesus remained untouched by human hands during the remainder of the Unleavened Feast. (John 20:17; 20:26-27)

Feast of Firstfruits – Yom HaBikkurim - Nisan 17 (Mar / Apr) Leviticus 23:9-14

FEAST	CHRIST
Three days after Passover, the Israelites celebrated the Feast of Firstfruits. This three-day ritual brought God's blessings on the spring harvest by way of a token blessing on the first budding crop. It also started a 50-day countdown to the Feast of Weeks.	Jesus rose from the dead three days after Passover. Paul calls Him the "Firstfruit from the dead". One day, just like our forerunner, we will be resurrected to new life and will join Him in glory. (1 Cor 15:12-25)
• On the day of Passover, the farmer would go out into his field, find the ripest sheaf of barley, and bind a cord around it, marking it as the Firstfruit.	• On the day of Passover, Judas went into the garden, identified Jesus to the soldiers, and had Him bound.
• The next day, he would cut the sheaf, and prepare it for offering.	• Jesus' trial began on the night of the Passover, and by noon the next day, He was crucified.
• On the third day after the Passover, he would bring the Firstfruit, a lamb, grain and wine to the priest.	• Three days after the Passover, Jesus rose from the dead and presented Himself to God. (Jn 20:17)
• The priest's blessing for the Firstfruit would be a token blessing whereby the remainder of the crop would also receive a blessing at harvest time.	• Jesus' resurrection from death is the ultimate victory over sin and death. By God raising Him up, we, as believers, will be raised up on the last day. (Jn 6:40)

Feast of Weeks – Shavuot / Pentecost - Sivan 6 (May / Jun) Leviticus 23:15-22

FEAST	CHRIST
Fifty days after Firstfruits (seven weeks and one day), the Children of Israel were to celebrate the Feast of Weeks, thanking God for the harvest. Jewish tradition says that the Mosaic Law was given at Mt. Sinai on this day. Jews were required to travel to Jerusalem to celebrate this special Sabbath feast.	Fifty days after the resurrection, Holy Spirit was poured out on the Apostles and disciples as they gathered to pray. Jews and proselytes from all over the known world were in Jerusalem as required by the Mosaic Law. The Greek word for "fifty" is "pentecost".

• Offerings were presented as a “wave offering”. The symbols were waved upwards, downwards and towards the 4 corners of the earth, symbolizing the goodness of Gods provisions spread throughout the whole world[1].	• With the grafting in of the Gentiles, salvation started with the Jews first, but is now available to the whole world of Jews and Gentiles. (Acts 2:32-33)
• Two loaves, made of fine flour with yeast, offered along with new grain and other animals.	• New crop of forgiven believers presented to God. (two loaves to represent both Jews and Gentiles?)
• The feast commemorates God’s giving of Moses’ Law at Mt. Sinai on this day.	• God gave the Holy Spirit on Mt. Zion. (Jerusalem) on this same day.
• People found in violation of the Law were slaves to sin and condemned to die. (Deut 30:15-20).	• People with the Holy Spirit are freed from sin and live forever. (Jn 6:63; 2 Cor 3:1-8; Jer 31:31-34; Titus 3:3-6)
• People worshiped golden calf.	• People worshiped God.
• 3,000 people killed following Aaron’s worship.	• 3,000 people saved following Peter’s preaching.

Messiah in the Hebrew Feasts: The Fall Feasts

The following feasts take place in the fall of each calendar year. These feasts also point to Christ, but unlike the Spring feasts, the Bible does not specify how they are fulfilled in Christ. It is generally believed that the fall feasts refer to Jesus’ Second Coming. There is some speculation as to how each feast represents the person and work of Christ.

Feast of Trumpets – Rosh Hashanah - Tishri 1 (Sep / Oct) Leviticus 23:23-25

FEAST	CHRIST
On the first day of the seventh month (Tishri), the Children of Israel were to have a special solemn Sabbath followed by a ten-day period of repentance known as the High Holy Days. The new year of the civil calendar began on this day. (Nisan was the beginning of the religious calendar.)	Some scholars speculate that the beginning of the new civil calendar might correspond to the return of Christ and the beginning of the new reign of Christ on earth.
• Trumpets sounded at the temple and synagogues around the world.	• The whole world hears the last trumpet and voice of Archangel. (1 Cor 15:52)
• Various practices were observed throughout Israel’s history regarding the type, nature and meaning of the trumpet sounds. Generally, trumpets announce a warning, a judgment or an announcement of good news.	• The Second Coming of Christ is both good news for His saints and bad news for those facing judgment. (1 Thess 4:13-18; 2 Thess 1:6-10; Joel 2:1-15; Zech 9:1417; Matt 24:31)
• The Mishnah and Talmud see this day as God judging all humans with the Books of Life[2].	• Jesus stated that Judgment was for Him to execute on the living and the dead. (John 5:24-27; 2 Tim 4:1)

• Rosh Hashanah marked the beginning of ten days of repentance, in preparation of the next feast, the Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement).	• When man hears the call of the Gospel, he is to respond in repentance and faith in Jesus as the Messiah. He is granted new life in Christ.

Day of Atonement – Yom Kippur - Trishi 10 (Sep / Oct) Leviticus 16; 23:26-32

FEAST	CHRIST
This special Sabbath feast took place ten days after the Feast of Trumpets. It is the most solemn of all Hebrew feasts, a day of self-denial, fasting, prayer and mourning. It was a national day of repentance and atonement for sins.	Some believe this is the day that Jesus will return for His people, and/or the day that all Israel will look on Him whom they pierced and repent (Zech 2:1). Many believe that on this day of repentance, ethnic Israel will be forgiven and restored. (Is 66:5-14; Rom 11:25-32)
• A thick curtain separated the Holy of Holies from the Holy Place. Only the High Priest could enter the Holy of Holies, and only once a year on this day to make special sacrifices to atone for the sins of the nation.	• When Jesus died, the veil separating the Holy Place from the Holy of Holies was torn by God from top to bottom (Lk 23:44-49), and now access Him directly. (Heb 6:19-20; Heb 9; Heb 10:19-22).
• The High Priest acted as a mediator to perform the sacrifices required on the Day of Atonement.	• Jesus is the only Mediator between man and God. No other human is needed to intercede for man. (Heb 9:15)
• The High Priest first had to make atonement for himself before making atonement for the people.	• Jesus, as the sinless perfect High Priest, did not have to first offer an atonement for His sins before making atonement for His people. (Heb 7:26-28)

Feast of Tabernacles – Sukkot – Tishri 10 (Sep / Oct) Leviticus 23:33-43

FEAST	CHRIST
Also known as the Feast of Booths, this weeklong feast was a joyful commemoration God's forgiveness and provision for His people. The booths were a reminder of God's sheltering them during the wilderness wanderings. Jews are required to travel to Jerusalem for this feast.	Sukkot represents the future final harvest when all nations will share in the joy and blessings of God's kingdom. Although celebrated only by believers, it praises God for His presence and goodness everywhere.
• Jews continue to celebrate Sukkot today by building booths (temporary shelters) and living in them during the feast.	• This feast may represent the House of the Lord that Christ will make for His people to dwell in forever.
• Four special plants are used in this celebration: citron, myrtle, palm and willow. A lulav, made of willow, palm and myrtle branches, is waved up and down in all four directions (north, south, east and west) to symbolize God's presence everywhere.	• In the Day of the Lord, all believers will one day celebrate this feast (Zech 14:16-19), coming in from all nations to worship before the Lord. Nations that do not respond in worship will be struck with drought and famine.

• According to tradition, a priest would carry water from the Pool of Siloam to the Temple, symbolizing that when the Messiah comes, the whole earth will know God “as the waters cover the sea.” (Is 11:9; Hab 2:14)	• On the last day of this feast, the great day, Jesus stood up and cried out, "If anyone thirsts, let him come to me and drink. Whoever believes in Me, as the Scripture has said, ‘Out of his heart will flow rivers of living water.’" (Jn 7:37-38)
• People carrying torches marched around the Temple, placing lights around the outside perimeter of the Temple, indicating that the Messiah would be a light to the Gentiles. (Is 49:6; Is 60:1-3)	• The next morning, while the torches were still lit, Jesus declared “I AM the light of the world. Whoever follows Me will not walk in darkness, but will have the light of life.” (Jn 8:12)
• The final day of the feast was an especially festive event called the “Day of the Great Hosanna”, looking forward to the coming of the Messiah.	• During the Triumphal Entry, the crowds met the Messiah waving palm branches and calling out “Blessed is the coming kingdom of our father David! Hosanna in the highest!” (This did not take place during the Feast of Tabernacles, but the emblems and titles are the same.)

COMMENTS

The Hebrew feasts were given by God approximately 1445 years before Christ was born, and have continued till this day. Many sociologists and theologians believe that the nature of the feasts is a primary reason behind the Jewish people being able to maintain their language, religious practices and cultural identity for over 3,500 years – longer than any other civilization alive today.

Although some of the particular practices associated with the feasts have been modified over the centuries, most of the core symbols, elements and practices remain the same. The greatest changes have been due to geo-political changes in Israel’s history: exile to Babylon and destruction of Solomon’s temple in 586BC, rebuilding of the temple in 516BC, destruction of the temple in 70AD, destruction of Jerusalem in 90AD, banishment of Jews from the Holy Land in 131AD, etc. A large number of minor traditions have been woven into the festivals, particularly the Passover, and seem to point directly to the Messiah (nature of the matzah bread, number of wine drinks, etc). While some of the extra traditions were present in Jesus’ day, the origins of many of these embellishments are unknown, and since they are not prescribed in the Bible, many of them have not been addressed in this document. Readers interested in these extra-biblical details might be interested in consulting publications from Messianic Jewish organizations such as Jews for Jesus (www.JewsForJesus.org).

Two other feasts were added to the Jewish calendar before Christ was born. These feasts are not part of the Levitical command, and are not covered in this document:

- Hanukkah 25 Kislev – 2 Tevet (Nov / Dec): commemorating the Maccabeean victory over the Greeks and the rededication/purification of the Temple in 165BC after Antiochus Ephiphanes IV defiled it. Many believe this desecration of the temple was predicted in Daniel 11:21-35. Jesus celebrated this festival in John 10:22.

- Purim 14 Adar (Feb / Mar): commemorating Esther’s bravery before Persian king Xerxes and the victory over Hamaan’s plot to exterminate the Jews. Some believe Purim is the unnamed feast of John 5.

Biblical Pilgrimage Festivals and Major Feast Days of Ancient Israel and Modern Judaism

Three Biblical Pilgrimage Festivals:

- Hebrew Bible Origins:
  - Three agriculture-related pilgrimage festivals are mandated in Exodus 23:14-17: a seven-day springtime festival of Unleavened Bread, around the barley harvest; an early summer festival of Harvest, when the wheat ripens; and an autumn festival of Ingathering, when olives, grapes, and other fruits are harvested (cf. Exod 34:18-23).
  - The book of Leviticus gives regulations for feast days that are to be celebrated "with a sacred assembly," including the weekly sabbath (Lev 23:1-4) and seven annual feast days: Passover (7 days, incl. unleavened bread), First fruits, Pentecost or Weeks, the New Year, the Day of Atonement, the first day of Booths, and the eighth day of Booths (Lev 23:5-44)
  - These festivals are later transformed and combined with commemorations of historical/religious events; originally the people could bring their offerings to any major sanctuary, but later they are required to go to the Jerusalem temple, esp. for three main pilgrimage festivals (see Deut 16:1-17).

- Feast of Passover (Pesach) and Unleavened Bread (Mazzot):
  - The barley-harvest festival was transformed to include the commemoration of the original Exodus, when the Hebrews came out of Egypt, ca. 1300 BCE.
  - The Passover was originally celebrated in each family's house; an unblemished lamb was slaughtered and eaten, and its blood sprinkled on the doorposts with a branch of the hyssop plant (Exod 12:1-13, 21-28, 43-49; cf. John 19:29).
  - The lamb was slaughtered on the afternoon of the 14th day of the month of Nisan/Abib (called the "Day of Preparation"), and the Passover meal eaten just after sunset (the beginning of the 15th day, in the Jewish calendar).
  - The seven-day feast of Unleavened Bread is also related to the Exodus, when the Hebrews did not even have time to let bread rise as they were leaving Egypt (Exod 12:14-20; 13:3-10).
  - Both festivals combined became a major pilgrimage feast, with the people going to the Jerusalem temple to offer the sacrificial lamb (Lev 23:4-14; Num 9:2-5; 28:16-25; Deut 16:1-8).
  - In modern Judaism, the entire Song of Songs is read in the synagogue services during Pesach.

- Feast of Weeks (Pentecost or Shavuot):
  - The older "Wheat-Harvest" festival was later mandated to be held 7 weeks (=50 days in Hebrew counting) after the Passover (Lev 23:15-21; Num 28:26; Deut 16:9-12; 34:22).
  - Later it also became a commemoration of the giving of the Torah on Mount Sinai (Exod 19-20).
  - In the NT it is called "Pentecost" since it is held "50 days" after Passover (cf. Acts 2:1; 20:16; 1 Cor 16:8).
  - In modern Judaism, the Book of Ruth is read in the synagogue services during the Feast of Shavuot.

- Feast of Booths (Tabernacles or Sukkoth):
  - The older "Ingathering" or "Fruit-Harvest" festival became a commemoration of the 40 years that the Hebrew wandered in the desert, living in temporary shelters like tents or "booths" (Lev 23:33-36, 39-43; Deut 16:13-15).

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

- In the Second-Temple period, it was an 8-day festival involving the imagery of water and light; water was brought daily from the Pool of Siloam (cf. John 9:1) up to the Temple and poured over the altar; light was provided by large lamps that were lit nightly in the temple courtyards.
- The eighth day of Sukkoth, considered the last and greatest day of the feast, included an assembly of all the people (Lev 23:36).
- In modern Judaism, the Book of Qoheleth is read during the feast of Sukkoth.

- New Testament References:
  - The Synoptic Gospels have only one Passover meal (often mentioned together with the Feast of Unleavened Bread), which Jesus celebrates just before his death (Mark 14:12-26; Matt 26:17-29; Luke 22:15-20)
  - The Fourth Gospel reports three different Passovers during Jesus' public ministry (John 2:13-23; 6:4; 11:55--19:14; but never mentions "Unleavened Bread"), as well as the Festival of Booths (7:2, 14, 37), and an unspecified feast (5:1) that some scholar think might be Pentecost.

Other Feasts and Special Days in the Bible:

- Weekly Sabbath (Shabbat):
  - Resting from work on the seventh day of the week is mandated in the Ten Commandments (Exod 20:8-11; Deut 5:12-15), and reinforced frequently throughout the Hebrew Bible (Exod 23:12; 34:21; Lev 23:3).
  - It is based on the story that God rested from his work after the six "days" of creation (Gen 2:1-3).
  - However, Jews throughout the centuries have debated exactly what constitutes unlawful "work" (cf. Jer 17:10-27) and whether God does not do at least some essential life-sustaining "work" on the sabbath (cf. John 5:9-18; 7:21-23).

- First of the Month (Rosh Kodesh):
  - The sighting of the new moon each month was a significant event celebrated by a minor festival in biblical times (1 Chron 23:31; 2 Chron 2:4; Ps 81:3; etc.)
  - In modern Judaism, the first of each month is not a major celebration, although some special prayers and readings are done in the synagogues.
  - In some Jewish communities, it is a day free from work for women (but not men), to honor them for their refusal to participate in the worship of the Golden Calf.

- New Year (Rosh HaShanah):
  - The first day of the seventh month (the month of "Tishri" on the Jewish calendar) is celebrated with "sabbath rest" and a "sacred assembly" (Leviticus 23:23-25; cf. Numbers 29:1).
  - On this day, the burnt offerings were reestablished by the priest Ezra in the period after the Babylonian Exile (Ezra 3:6; cf. Neh 8:2).
  - Festivities include the blowing of the Shofar (a type of trumpet made out of a ram's horn).
  - Note that the Jewish Calendar has four different days called "New Year" (just as Westerners have "New School Year" and "New Fiscal Year" dates different from Jan. 1): Nissan 1 (in March) = new year for counting calendar months; Elul 1 (in August) = new year for tithing of animals; Tishri 1 (in September) = new year for years (increase year numbers); Shevat 15 (in February) = new year for trees (when fruit is ripe enough to eat).

- Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur):
  - An annual purification ritual, involving a sacrifice offered for the purification of the temple, the land, and the people (Lev 16:1-34; 23:26-32).

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

- The New Testament does not directly mention this feast day, but adapts its imagery to speak of Jesus' death as an atonement for sins (Rom 3:25; Heb 2:17).

- Feast of Dedication or Feast of Lights (Hanukkah):
  - The temple of Jerusalem had been "desecrated" (but not "destroyed") by the Seleucid ruler Antiochus IV Epiphanes in 167 BC.
  - After the success of their revolt, the Maccabees cleansed and rededicated the Temple and the Altar in 164 BC, and mandated an annual 8-day celebration to commemorate this joyful event (1 Macc 4:36-59).
  - This winter-time feast is not mentioned in the Hebrew Bible, but only in the Deuterocanonical/Apocryphal books of 1 Maccabees and 2 Maccabees.
  - It is also mentioned briefly in John 10:22, but nowhere else in the New Testament.

- Feast of Lots (Purim):
  - Commemorates Queen Esther's defeat of a plan to slaughter all Persian Jews, ca. 400 BCE, as told in the Book of Esther.
  - In modern Judaism, the entire Book of Esther read on the day of Purim. It is a time of great celebration, with noisemakers, costumes, etc. (somewhat equivalent to Western "Carnival" or "Mardi Gras" festivities).

- Lesser Agricultural Feasts:
  - "Fifteenth Day of the Month of Shevat" (Tu B'Shevat) - considered the "New Year for Trees" (Lev 19:23-25)
  - "Counting the Omer" (Sefirat Ha'Omer) - based on Lev 23:15-16, which tells the Israelites to "count" the fifty days between Pesach and Shavuot.

- Sabbath Years:
  - Every seventh year, no agricultural work was to be done; the land should also be allowed to "rest," and the people should harvest only what grows on its own in the fields (Exod 23:10-11; Lev 25:2-7, 18-24; 26:34-43).
- Jubilee Year:
  - Every fifty years, all debts are to be forgiven, slaves were supposed to be freed, and land that was sold was to be returned to its original owners (Lev 25:8-17, 25-55; 27:16-25). Scholars debate whether this biblical injunction was ever actually carried out.

Jewish Feasts Introduced in the Rabbinic Period:

- Simchat Torah ("Rejoicing in the Torah"):
  - Held on the day after the end of Sukkoth (thus the 23rd day of Tishri), this feast celebrates the ending and restarting of the annual cycle of Torah readings in the synagogue.
  - On this day, the end of the Book of Deuteronomy is read, followed immediately by the beginning of the Book of Genesis.
  - Although not mandated in the Hebrew Bible as a particular feast day, many biblical passages celebrate the centrality of the Torah in Jewish life (e.g., Ps 119).
- Tish B'Av ("9th day of the month of Av"):
  - A major fast day (fasting for 25 hours), commemorating the two destructions of the Jerusalem Temple (586 BCE & 70 CE).
  - The destruction of the First Temple by the Babylonians is told near the end of the Books of Kings and Chronicles, and bemoaned by the prophet Jeremiah.
  - The destruction of the Second Temple by the Romans is told by the first-century Jewish historian Josephus.
  - The Book of Lamentations (attributed to Jeremiah) is read in synagogue services on this day.

Additional Jewish Calendar Events

Shemitah

What is a Shemitah Year…? The Shemitah Year is the seventh year of the seven-year agricultural cycle mandated by the Torah for the Land of Israel and still observed in contemporary Judaism. When Moses received the Levitical law, God gave the commandment to rest on the seventh day… the Sabbath. Moses also applied the cycles of "seven" to weeks and years. A cycle of seven weeks points to the 50th day, called Pentecost. And a cycle of seven sets of seven years points to the 50th year, the year of Jubilee. The year of Jubilee is based on letting the land rest every seventh year as follows; "For six years sow your fields, and for six years prune your vineyards and gather their crops. But in the seventh year the land is to have a Sabbath of rest, a Sabbath to the Lord." (Leviticus 25:3-4)

Leviticus 25 promises bountiful harvests to those who observe the Shemitah, and describes its observance as a test of religious faith.

“At the end of every seven years you shall grant a release. And this is the manner of the release: every creditor shall release what he has lent to his neighbour. He shall not exact it of his neighbour, his brother, because the LORD’S RELEASE has been proclaimed….” Deuteronomy 15:1-4 (Reading this Scripture further promises… many blessings!)

Source: http://www.pray4zion.org/thecomingshemitahjubileeyear57745.html

Initially, Israel kept to the provisions of the shemitah year, but for the 490 years prior to the Babylonian captivity they had neglected to do so, thereby ignoring 70 shemitah years.

In Ezekiel 23 God had the prophet tell the people a parable of two sisters, Oholah and Oholibah. Oholah represented Samaria, the capitol of the Northern Kingdom, and Oholibah represented Jerusalem, the capital of the Southern kingdom. In a chapter so sexually graphic you wouldn’t want your children to read it, He detailed the spiritual adultery of the two kingdoms and said that was the cause of the coming judgment. He had already handed the north over to Assyria, and was about to hand the south over to Babylon. This chapter makes it very clear that the reason for this judgment was their descent into idolatry.

The Northern Kingdom had already ceased to exist altogether, but in a demonstration of His Grace, God fixed the term for the Southern Kingdom’s judgment at 70 years, one for each of the 70 shemitah years they had ignored, in accordance with Leviticus 26:34-35.

God pleaded with them to turn from their evil ways and their evil practices, promising if they did they could stay in the land. Through His prophets He said, “Turn now, each of you, from your evil ways and your evil practices, and you can stay in the land the Lord gave to you and your ancestors for ever and ever.Do not follow other gods to serve and worship them; do not arouse my anger with what your hands have made. Then I will not harm you” (Jeremiah 25:5-6). But they refused.

(Let’s make sure you understand that. Had the Israelites ceased their idol worship and turned back to Him, the Lord would not have required them to make up the 70 shemitah years they had ignored and they could have stayed in the land. This makes it clear that the reason for the Babylonian captivity was their refusal to give up their idolatry and turn back to Him. The 70 shemitah years simply gave the Lord a term for the temporary period of captivity.)

After they refused his first offer, He said if they surrendered to the Babylonians instead of trying to defeat them, they could all live (Jeremiah 27:12-13). In other words, none of them had to die in battle. But they refused that, too. Finally they left Him no choice and after a period of 19 years of warnings, He had the Babylonian army break down the walls of Jerusalem, destroy the temple and the city, and carry the people off to Babylon. Thousands of Israelites died as a result.

At the end, He gave them one more assurance that it was only temporary.

This is what the Lord Almighty, the God of Israel, says to all those I carried into exile from Jerusalem to Babylon: "Build houses and settle down; plant gardens and eat what they produce. Marry and have sons and daughters; find wives for your sons and give your daughters in marriage, so that they too may have sons and daughters. Increase in number there; do not decrease. Also, seek the peace and prosperity of the city to which I have carried you into exile. Pray to the Lord for it, because if it prospers, you too will prosper" (Jeremiah 29:4-7)

"When seventy years are completed for Babylon, I will come to you and fulfill my good promise to bring you back to this place. For I know the plans I have for you," declares the Lord, "plans to prosper you and not to harm you, plans to give you hope and a future" (Jeremiah 29:10-11).

So the cause of the Babylonian captivity was their descent into idolatry. The 70 year term was to give the land its missing shemitah years, and God's promise was to restore and prosper them afterwards, to give them hope and a future.

When the seventy years had been completed, the Lord raised up the Medes and Persians who conquered Babylon without a battle and freed the Jewish people so they could return to their homeland and rebuild their nation as He had promised them.

Year of Jubilee

So then what is a Jubilee Year…? By adding together seven cycles of seven years, we count a total of 49 years. Therefore, the year of Jubilee is the 50th year as noted by the following verses… "You are also to count off seven Sabbaths of years for yourself, seven times seven years, so that you have the time of the seven Sabbaths of years, namely, forty-nine years. You shall then sound a ram's horn abroad on the tenth day of the seventh month; on the Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur) you shall sound a horn all through your land. You shall thus consecrate the fiftieth year and proclaim a release through the land to all its inhabitants. It shall be a jubilee for you, and each of you shall return to his own property, and each of you shall return to his family," Leviticus. 25:8-10.

The English word "jubilee" comes from the Hebrew word "yovel" meaning a "trumpet or ram's horn." These rams' horns were blown on the Day of Atonement to announce the start of the year of jubilee... The word jubilee should not be confused with the word jubilation which comes from a Latin word meaning to rejoice. The year of jubilee was no doubt a time of great jubilation, but the similarities of the two words are (at least humanly speaking) a coincidence. For many years before the Exodus, the Israelites had been slaves in the land of Egypt, without freedom and without possessions. When they reached the land of Canaan, Joshua divided the land among their tribes and their families… so that each had his own inheritance.

TORAH, ORAL TORAH and TALMUD (From Mainly Jewish Sources/Perspectives)

Torah

The word "Torah" is a tricky one, because it can mean different things in different contexts. In its most limited sense, "Torah" refers to the Five Books of Moses: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy. But the word "torah" can also be used to refer to the entire Jewish bible (the body of scripture known to non-Jews as the Old Testament and to Jews as the Tanakh or Written Torah), or in its broadest sense, to the whole body of Jewish law and teachings

Written Torah

To Jews, there is no "Old Testament." The books that Christians call the New Testament are not part of Jewish scripture. The so-called Old Testament is known to us as Written Torah or the Tanakh.

This is a list of the books of Written Torah, in the order in which they appear in Jewish translations, with the Hebrew name of the book, a translation of the Hebrew name (where it is not the same as the English name), and English names of the books (where it is not the same as the Hebrew name). The Hebrew names of the first five books are derived from the first few words of the book. The text of each book is more or less the same in Jewish translations as what you see in Christian bibles, although there are some occasional, slight differences in the numbering of verses and there are some significant differences in the translations.

Oral Torah: The Talmud

In addition to the written scriptures we have an "Oral Torah," a tradition explaining what the above scriptures mean and how to interpret them and apply the Laws. Orthodox Jews believe G-d taught the Oral Torah to Moses, and he taught it to others, down to the present day. This tradition was maintained only in oral form until about the 2d century C.E., when the oral law was compiled and written down in a document called the Mishnah.

Over the next few centuries, additional commentaries elaborating on the Mishnah were written down in Jerusalem and Babylon. These additional commentaries are known as the Gemara. The Gemara and the Mishnah together are known as the Talmud. This was completed in the 5th century C.E.

Jewish Scripture – Text and Tales:
http://www.uwyo.edu/religionet/er/judaism/jtexts.htm

Religious Writings:

2. Writings

The Old Testament was written in Hebrew, but the people spoke mostly Aramaic or Greek. In fact, in cities such as Alexandria in Egypt there were many Jews whose families had lived there for many generations and who spoke only Greek. If Judaism was to survive, it was necessary for people to be able to read and understand the Old Testament. To this end, translations were made and used in Jesus' day: the Septuagint for Greek-speaking Jews and the Targums for Aramaic-speaking Jews.

The Septuagint

The Septuagint is a translation of the Hebrew Old Testament into Greek, made in Alexandria. According to tradition, 70 Jews, skillful linguists, were sent from Jerusalem to Egypt at the request of Ptolemy Philadelphus (285-247 B.C.) and completed the translation in 70 days.

In reality, the translation was done over a period of time. The Torah (Genesis – Deuteronomy) was translated first, and later the rest of the Old Testament books were added. It was called the Septuagint because of the 70 translators who were reputed to have begun it (septuaginta = Greek for 70; the common abbreviation for Septuagint is LXX, the Roman numeral for 70). The quality of the translation of the Torah (Pentateuch) is excellent, but the other books vary a great deal in quality.

The Septuagint was in common use in the days of Christ. Many of the quotations from the Old Testament in the New Testament (which was written in Greek) are from the Septuagint.

[See also: The Septuagint section later in this Appendix for more details]

The Targums

The Targums are translations of the Hebrew Old Testament books into Aramaic. They were originally oral translations, paraphrases, and interpretations that had their origin in the Babylonian captivity, when Hebrew lost its standing as the primary language of the Jewish exiles and was replaced by Aramaic. These oral paraphrases were later written down and became increasingly necessary as the use of Aramaic became prevalent in Palestine. In the synagogue, a passage would often be read in Hebrew, followed by the Targum of that same passage.

Tradition

Respect for tradition was particularly strong among Jews during the period at the beginning of the Christian era. Among these traditions, the most important collection was Pirke Aboth (Traditions of the Fathers). This consisted of comments by famous rabbis in explanation of the written Law. This and a growing collection of other rabbinic traditions interpreting the Law became an authoritative commentary on the written code. This collection was esteemed to be equal to the written Law.

The Pharisees used the expression "tradition of the elders" when speaking to Jesus about hand washing (Matthew 15:2; Mark 7:5). In his response, Jesus referred to the "traditions of men," thus drawing attention to their human origin. In fact, in Mark 7:8, he definitely set the commandment of God over these traditions, which had become a burden to the people. Jesus strongly criticized the scribes and Pharisees for the way these traditions were enforced (Matthew 23). He noted that adherence to the tradition had become more important than the moral and personal effect of the teaching.

Tradition, Oral

Oral tradition is both sharply distinguished from written tradition and yet closely connected with it. Many literary traditions are based on oral traditions, making it necessary to investigate how transitions were made from one to the other.

In the ancient Near East, all significant events were committed to writing by the scribes. At the same time, an oral version of the occurrences would enable the information to be disseminated in contemporary society, and perhaps also to subsequent generations. It is important to realize the coexistence of written and oral forms of the same material, so that the way in which material was transmitted will be understood properly.

Oral transmission was very important in Judaism, and one of the strongest characteristics of rabbinic theology is the importance attached to the oral law in addition to the written Law. This oral law consisted of traditional interpretations that had been handed down from teacher to pupil. In the course of the passing on of the tradition, further explanations of basic principles were added. Rabbinic literature supplies many indications of the careful methods that were used in the schools for the study of the Law. The teacher's main aim was to ensure that the disciples accurately memorized the content of the teaching. There is no doubt that in rabbinic Judaism the passing on of the oral tradition had developed into a highly organized technique.

Such care is not surprising in view of the fact that the oral law carried equal weight with the written Law. It was essential that the transmission of this tradition should not be left to chance. Authorized oral tradition was an essential feature of Jewish life. There is little doubt that in the earliest period the words and works of Jesus were passed on by word of mouth. Whether Jesus himself followed the rabbinic teaching method is doubtful, but as much care went into preserving his teachings as the rabbis used in preserving their oral law.

The Talmud

(From Mainly Jewish Sources/Perspectives)

Talmud – Summary Intro.

The Talmud is the extraordinary compendium of law and lore of rabbinic Judaism, comprising both the Mishnah and the Gemara. Side by side with the Written Law of the Bible, over time there developed the Oral Law, which expanded upon the ordinances of the Pentateuch. This Oral Law was handed down from master to disciple, studied in Jewish academies of learning, and applied by Jewish courts of law. The period of national and spiritual crisis which followed the unsuccessful Jewish rebellions against Rome in 68 and 135 CE persuaded Judah ha Nasi, head of the Jewish community in Palestine at the turn of the third century, to compile, systematize, and reduce the Oral Law, which had come down by word of mouth, into writing. This collection of laws, legal opinions, decisions, and comments upon them is known as the Mishnah. it is less a code than a report on prevailing law and custom, and a digest of legal opinions which invite further study and discussion.

Study and discussion of the Mishnah in the centuries following were carried on in academies and applied in courts in Palestine and Babylonia. The summary and digest of this scholarly activity is called the Gemara. Not at all dry-as-dust legal argumentation, it reports on the exciting application of law to life, recording the disputations which grew out of diverse traditions and differing opinions. Here and there it is interlaced

The Mishnah is in Hebrew, the language of the Bible and of worship and scholarly discourse in late antiquity; the Gemara is in Aramaic, the language of common discourse of that time. There are two versions of the Talmud. The first, edited circa 325 CE, contains the discussions in Palestinian schools and courts and is called the Jerusalemite or Palestinian. The Babylonian, edited a century and half later, is the compendium of scholarly legal discussions carried on in the academies and courts of that Jewish community. Like the Mishnah, the Gemara is not a code of law (an organized body of legal decisions), but the raw material for establishing codes-the source for discussion, refinement, and application

Since the term torah means instruction or teaching, the traditional Jewish world uses torah in a very broad sense. For example, sometimes the Talmud, the authoritative compendium of Oral Law, is referred to as Torah. Along these lines, traditional rabbinic Judaism adheres to what is referred to as the Oral Torah.

Talmud continued…

Word meaning “to study,” “to learn.” It is a body of literature in Hebrew and Aramaic, covering interpretations of legal portions of the OT, as well as wise sayings from many rabbinical sources; it spans a time period from shortly after Ezra, about 400 BC, until approximately the AD 500s.

Origin and Development of the Oral Law

Traditional Jews believe that a second law was given to Moses in addition to the first or written word; this second one was given orally, and handed down from generation to generation in oral form. The Talmud itself makes this claim for an early origin, and Pirke Aboth 1:1 states that it is attributed to Moses. Other scholars do not agree on this origin of the oral law and insist that it had its beginning and development after Ezra. For example, there is no mention by the preexilic prophets concerning a lapse from the oral law, but the messages of the prophets abound in warnings about abandoning the written revelation given to Moses, thereby indicating the absence of a body of oral tradition prior to the Babylonian exile.

In the period succeeding Ezra (“a scribe skilled in the law of Moses,” Ezra 7:6), teacher succeeded teacher in synagogues and schools, and their understanding of the OT was treasured and memorized. Across the centuries, many memorizing devices were employed to learn and remember the growing mass of opinions and interpretation. But eventually not even the best memory could retain all the available materials. It was finally necessary to compile a summary of all the essential teachings of preceding generations, and also to facilitate access for future generations to the immense treasure of thought, religious feeling, and wisdom for guidance and inspiration. The compilation is known as the Talmud, the basic repository of the oral law. Jewish people regard it as second to the Scriptures. A literature recognized as the genius of a national and religious creation, it has a profound influence upon the development of the Jewish world view.

Rationale for an Oral Law

With the cessation of the postexilic prophets, and with the continual development of the complexity of life in Israel and its relationships to the outer world, there arose a need for further elaboration of the laws of the Pentateuch. The oral law, at first, was intended to be helpful so that people could obey the written Word of God.

The oral law contained in the Talmud has a twofold function. First, it provided an interpretation of the written Law. According to the rabbis, this is necessary since the oral law makes it possible to observe the written Law. Without the former, it would be impossible to observe the latter. A good example is the concept of not working, as indicated by the biblical Sabbath law. Everyone knew that work was not done on the Sabbath. The rabbis contend, however, that it took the oral law to define what was meant by work.

The second aspect of the oral law is that it modifies and seeks to adapt the written Law to fit new conditions and circumstances. The oral law is supposed to make the written Law a viable document from generation to generation. Without this oral law, the written Law would become obsolete. Therefore, the oral law is necessary for observance of prohibitions as well as for stressing what is good Jewish devotion and loyalty.

It is true that every generation must face new social, political, and economic conditions, which make necessary a different application of the Word of God. But the Word of God cannot be changed in order to accommodate personal desires or interpret new problems in different ages. Something of this is apparent in the first century AD, when Jesus challenged the Jewish leaders for having preempted the Word of God by their oral traditions (Mark 7:9-13).

Basic Antecedents to the Talmud

One of the earliest means for teaching oral law was a running commentary, or Midrash (“to expound”), of the biblical text. If the teaching handled the legal portions of the OT, then it was referred to as Midrash Halakah (the latter emphasized a way by which one walks or lives). When treating nonlegal, ethical, or devotional portions of the OT, then the opinions and understanding was called Midrash Haggadah (“narration”). Ezra and his trained associates were using the method of Midrash, upon the occasion of the completion of the Jerusalem wall in 444 BC, when they “explained the law to the people while the people remained in their place. They read from the book, from the law of God, translating to give the sense so that they understood the reading” (Nehemiah 8:7-8, NASB). This kind of oral Midrash is the method followed by generations of teachers after Ezra, when the religious leaders were known as Soferim (“bookmen” or “scribes”), until about 200 BC. Sometimes referred to as the “Great Synagogue,” these scholars provided teaching to “hedge” the revealed moral and ceremonial word so that Israel would never stray into idolatry or ignorance again. The Soferim were succeeded by the Hasidim (“pious ones”), who tried to maintain a high level of religious devotion. In turn, the Hasidim were succeeded by the Pharisees (“separated ones”) at about 128 BC. Each of these groups contributed to the Midrash method. This material continued to increase and was transmitted orally. Succeeding generations learned these materials through continuous repetition. Therefore, the new method was called Mishnah (“repetition”), and the teachers of the Mishnah were known as Tannaim (“those who handed down orally”). Both Midrash and Mishnah existed side by side in ensuing generations. There came a time, however, when it was necessary to codify the oral law covered by Mishnah, since this became cumbersome to learn as a body of material. Eventually, this material was put into writing; it came to be known as Gemara (“completion”). The combination of Gemara and Mishnah constitute the Talmud.

[Note: In general, if Talmud is mentioned, it usually is assumed to be both the Gemara and the Mishnah; if Mishnah is mentioned with the Talmud, then the Talmud is just the Gemara. In other words, the term Talmud can be used to mean either the Gemara alone, or the Mishnah and Gemara as printed together. Source: Wikipedia]

The term "Talmud" normally refers to the Babylonian Talmud, though there is also an earlier collection known as the Jerusalem Talmud.

The Talmud has two components.

The first part is the Mishnah (Hebrew: משנה, c. 200 CE), the written compendium of Rabbinic Judaism's Oral Torah (Torah meaning "Instruction", "Teaching" in Hebrew). The Mishnah is a compilation of legal opinions and debates.

The second part is the Gemara (c. 500 CE), an elucidation of the Mishnah and related Tannaitic (Rabbinic sages) writings that often ventures onto other subjects and expounds broadly on the Hebrew Bible. The term Talmud can be used to mean either the Gemara alone, or the Mishnah and Gemara as printed together.

In the three centuries following the redaction of the Mishnah, rabbis in Palestine and Babylonia analyzed, debated, and discussed that work. These discussions form the Gemara (גמרא). Gemara means “completion” (from the Hebrew gamar גמר: "to complete") or "learning" (from the Aramaic:

"study"). The Gemara mainly focuses on elucidating and elaborating the opinions of the Tannaim. The rabbis of the Gemara are known as Amoraim (sing. Amora אמורא).

Much of the Gemara consists of legal analysis. The starting point for the analysis is usually a legal statement found in a Mishnah. The statement is then analyzed and compared with other statements used in different approaches to Biblical exegesis in rabbinic Judaism (or - simpler - interpretation of text in Torah study) exchanges between two (frequently anonymous and sometimes metaphorical) disputants, termed the makshan (questioner) and tartzan (answerer). Another important function of Gemara is to identify the correct Biblical basis for a given law presented in the Mishnah and the logical process connecting one with the other: this activity was known as talmud long before the existence of the "Talmud" as a text.

The whole Talmud consists of 63 tractates, and in standard print is over 6,200 pages long. It is written in Tannaitic Hebrew and Aramaic. The Talmud contains the teachings and opinions of thousands of rabbis on a variety of subjects, including Halakha (law), Jewish ethics, philosophy, customs, history, lore and many other topics. The Talmud is the basis for all codes of Jewish law and is much quoted in rabbinic literature.

Note: If there is a conflict between the Babylonian Talmud and the Jerusalem Talmud, the Babylonian Talmud usually supersedes the Jerusalem Talmud.

Tannaic Period
The Tannaim (Hebrew: תנאים [tanaʿʔim], singular תנא [taʿna], Tanna "repeaters", "teachers") were the Rabbinic sages whose views are recorded in the Mishnah, from approximately 10-220 CE. The period of the Tannaim, also referred to as the Mishnaic period, lasted about 210 years. It came after the period of the Zugot ("pairs"), and was immediately followed by the period of the Amoraim ("interpreters"). [Source: Wikipedia]

Structure of Talmud

Folios

One further physical division of the Talmud is most important for the student to understand. Each tractate is physically divided into folios, corresponding to the physical leaves of paper of the Vilna Edition, printed by the Romm family in Lithuania in the 1800s. As with a page in an English book, a folio may start or end in the middle of a sentence. An average folio may span about ten printed pages in the Soncino edition. Folios are numbered, and further subdivided into "a" and "b." Thus, a Talmud passage can be unambiguously cited as "Sanhedrin 18b." In our discussions, we will always use this tractate/folio system when citing the Talmud.

Some commentators do not use the Vilna standard when citing Talmud passages. Instead, they use the tractate, chapter, and Mishnah number. Thus, in Tractate Sanhedrin, Chapter 6, the first Mishnah could be cited as "Sanhedrin 6:1". This is less common, but it is sometimes used among people who take exception to the Vilna printing.

Rashi -- an acronym for Rabbi Shlomo Yitzchaki, French scholar of 11th century France.

Unlike Moses, Rashi did not receive the Torah from G-d at Sinai, nor was Rashi revered as a prophet. Yet 900 years after his passing, Jews of all ages and persuasions still seek their weekly guidance and inspiration from Rashi's commentary to the Torah; and Rashi remains the primary exponent of the Talmud, the core of Judaism's vast intellectual heritage. Rashi's commentaries have gained such an authority that they have become inseparable from the text -- one does not learn Torah, but Torah with Rashi. He has thus become the undisputed father of all commentators, as Nachmanides wrote, "He [Rashi] has the firstborn right" (after Deuteronomy 21:17).

Halakha (/hɑːˈlɔːxə/;[1] Hebrew: הֲלָכָה, Sephardic: [halaˈχa]; also transliterated as halacha or halachah) or halocho (Ashkenazic: [haˈloχo]) is the collective body of Jewish religious laws derived from the Written and Oral Torah. It includes the 613 mitzvot ("commandments"), subsequent Talmudic and rabbinic law and the customs and traditions compiled in the Shulchan Aruch (literally "Set Table", but more commonly known as the "Code of Jewish Law").

"The single greatest event in the history of God's revelation took place at Sinai, but was not limited to it. God's communication continued in the teaching of the prophets and the biblical sages, and in the activity of the Rabbis of the Mishnah and the Talmud, embodied in Halakhah and Aggadah (law and lore). The process of revelation did not end there; it remains alive in the Codes and Responsa to the present day."

What are the Mishnah and Talmud? (Jewish Perspective)

http://www.askmoses.com/en/article/190,104/What-are-the-Mishnah-and-Talmud.html

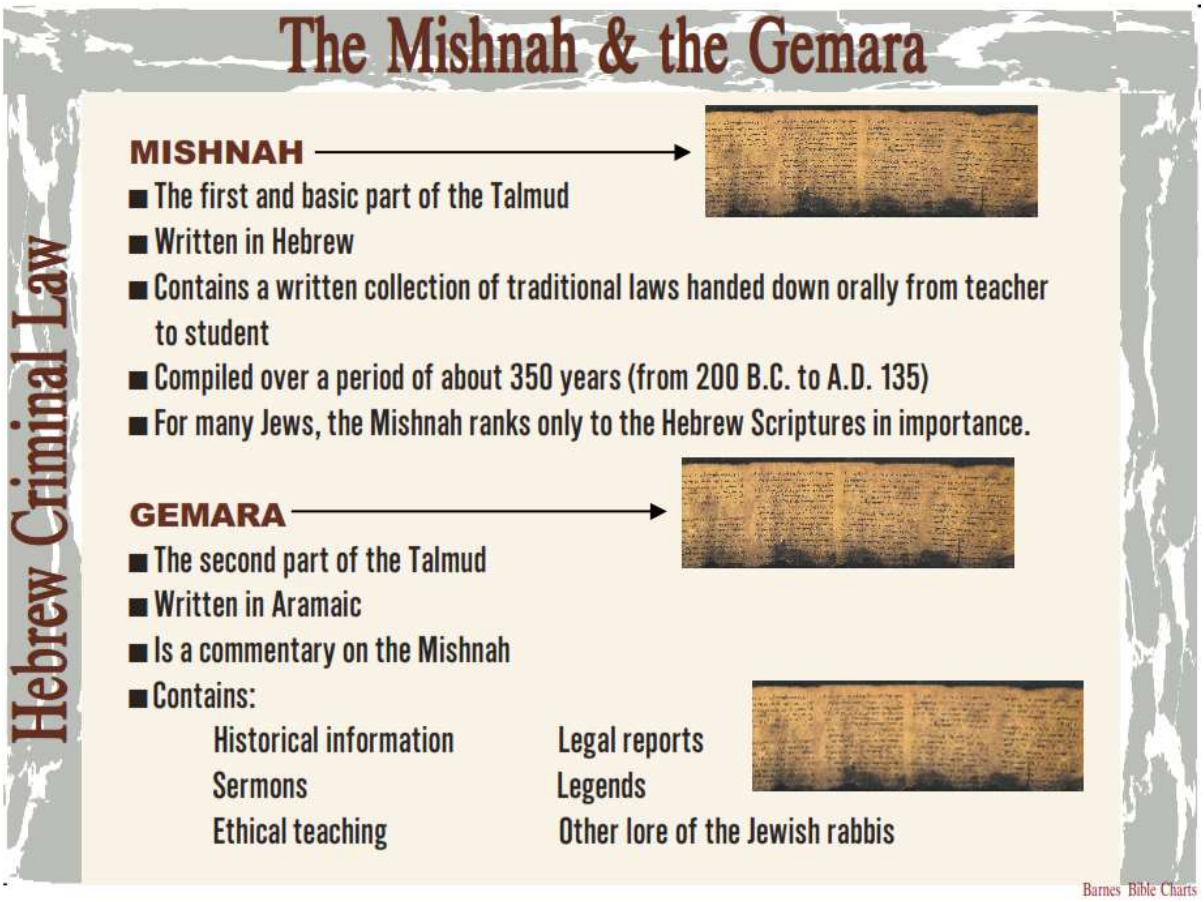
A. The Torah--i.e. the Five Books of Moses--is very vague. For instance, the Torah says not to “work” on Shabbat. But what’s “work?” To answer this and many other questions (like how to slaughter an animal in the Kosher way, what Tefillin are), God explained the entire Torah to Moses. Moses then explained the entire Torah to the people orally. This explanation is therefore called the Oral Torah, since it was transmitted by word of mouth and was not written down.

B. The Oral Torah was taught mouth-to-ear, mouth-to-ear, through the generations until the 2nd Century CE, at which point the sages felt that it would be forgotten unless it was written down. Rabbi Judah the Prince indeed went ahead and compiled the basics into a 63 volume document called the Mishnah. The Mishnah was taught in schools through the generations, with an accompanying oral explanation. In the 5th Century CE, it became too vast and confusing for people to understand, and the oral explanation was written down in a massive collection that dwarfs the Mishnah. This explanation is known as the Gemara, and together they - the Mishnah with its Gemara commentary - form the Talmud.

C. The 63 volumes of the Mishnah are divided into six sections, each one on a different area of Jewish life: Agriculture, Shabbat and Holidays, Family Relations, Civil Law, Temple Sacrifices and Ritual Purity. Thirty eight volumes of the Mishnah have accompanying Gemara commentary, making them Talmudic Tractates. The Talmud thus consists of huge books crammed with densely packed Aramaic, an ancient Semitic language that uses the Hebrew alphabet. The Talmud follows the six-section structure of the Mishnah.

How do I study Talmud?

1. Study with a partner or with a class



OK, you’ve decided to study Talmud on your own, with your brand-new English-language version. Now, you’re cruising through the third page, and you get stuck—something doesn’t make sense. The commentaries help, but not completely—what do you do? To preempt this problem, The Rabbis instituted what might be called the “buddy system”—always studying Torah, and particularly the intricate, challenging Talmud—with a partner. Better yet, go to a Talmud class—you’ll learn even more and meet people who share your avid interest in Talmud, too. Chances are your local Chabad center offers one.

2. Remember what you’re doing

The Talmud is not just an engrossing exposition of Jewish law and lore—it’s part and parcel of the Torah. In other words, it’s not just another book—it’s a Jewish book. When you study Talmud, remember that you’re studying Torah, Divine wisdom.

Mishnah

The Mishnah or Mishna (/ˈmɪʃnə/; Hebrew: מִשְׁנָה, "study by repetition"), from the verb shanah שנה, or "to study and review", also "secondary," is the first major written redaction of the Jewish oral traditions known as the "Oral Torah". It is also the first major work of Rabbinic literature. The earliest known copy of the Mishnah has additions, and is contained within a book featuring commentary that was printed in Naples Italy during the late 15th century.

The Mishnah was redacted by Rabbi Yehudah HaNasi before his death around 217 CE, in a time when, according to the Talmud, the persecution of the Jews and the passage of time raised the possibility that the details of the oral traditions of the Pharisees from the Second Temple period (536 BCE – 70 CE) would be forgotten. The majority of the Mishnah is written in Mishnaic Hebrew, while some parts are Aramaic.

The Mishnah consists of six orders (sedarim, singular seder סדר), each containing 7–12 tractates (masechtot, singular masechet מסכת; lit. "web"), 63 in total, and further subdivided into chapters and paragraphs or verses.

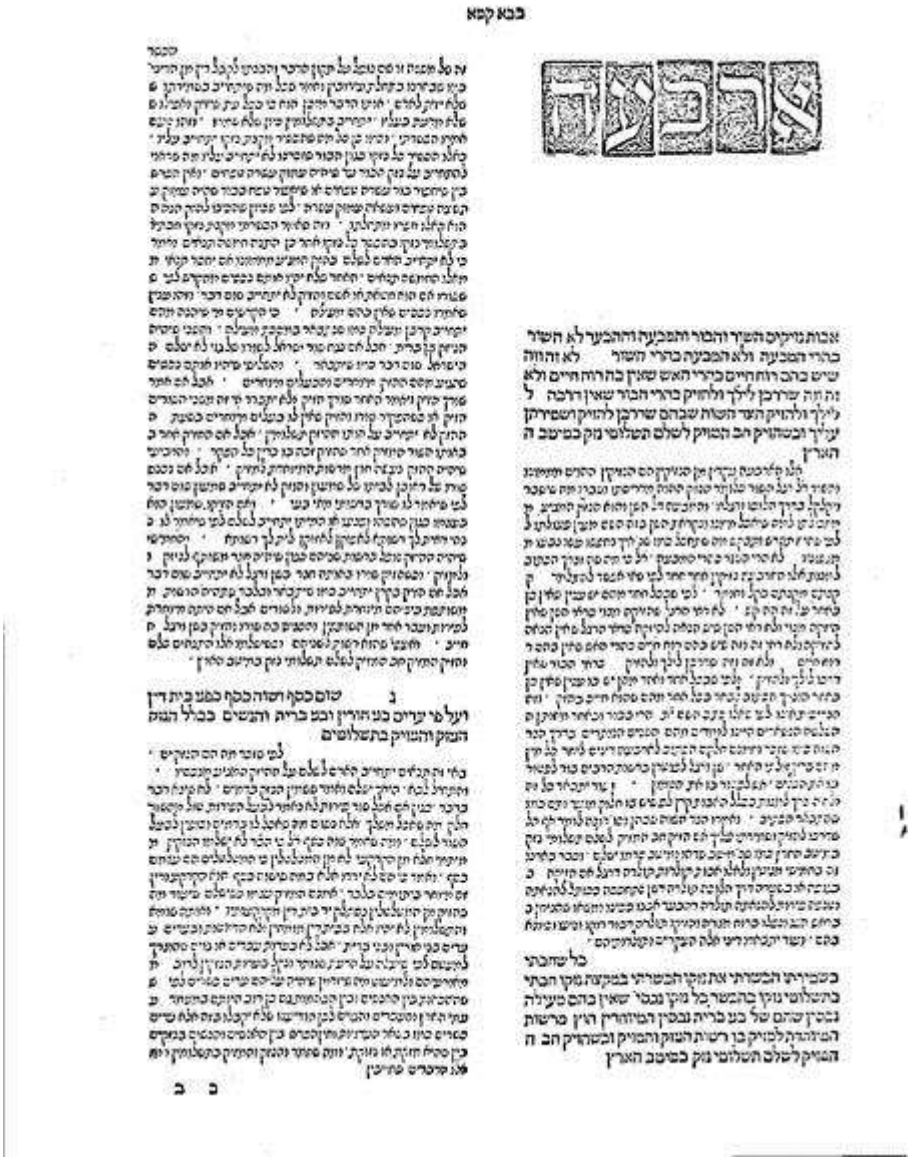
The word Mishnah can also indicate a single paragraph or a verse of the work itself, i.e. the smallest unit of structure in the Mishnah. For this reason the whole work is sometimes called by the plural, Mishnayot.

The term "Mishnah" originally referred to a method of teaching by presenting topics in a systematic order, as contrasted with Midrash, which meant teaching by following the order of the Bible. The Mishnah as a written compilation accordingly orders its content by subject matter, instead of by biblical context as the Midrashim do. Likewise it includes a much broader selection of halakhic subjects, and discusses individual subjects more thoroughly, than the Midrashim.

The Mishnah consists of six orders (sedarim, singular seder סדר), each containing 7–12 tractates (masechtot, singular masechet מסכת; lit. "web"), 63 in total. Each masechet is divided into chapters (peraqim, singular pereq) and then paragraphs (mishnayot, singular mishnah). In this last context, the word mishnah means a single paragraph of the work, i.e. the smallest unit of structure, leading to the use of the plural, "Mishnayot", for the whole work.

Because of the division into six orders, the Mishnah is sometimes called Shas (an acronym for Shisha Sedarim – the "six orders"), though that term is more often used for the Talmud as a whole.

The six orders are:



> Zera'im ("Seeds"), dealing with prayer and blessings, tithes and agricultural laws (11 tractates)
> Mo'ed ("Festival"), pertaining to the laws of the Sabbath and the Festivals (12 tractates)
> Nashim ("Women"), concerning marriage and divorce, some forms of oaths and the laws of the nazirite (7 tractates)
> Nezikin ("Damages"), dealing with civil and criminal law, the functioning of the courts and oaths (10 tractates)
> Kodashim ("Holy things"), regarding sacrificial rites, the Temple, and the dietary laws (11 tractates) and
> Tohorot ("Purities"), pertaining to the laws of purity and impurity, including the impurity of the dead, the laws of food purity and bodily purity (12 tractates).

In each order (with the exception of Zeraim), tractates are arranged from biggest (in number of chapters) to smallest. A popular mnemonic consists of the acronym "Z'MaN NaKaT."

The Babylonian Talmud (Hagiga 14a) states that there were either six hundred or seven hundred orders of the Mishnah. Hillel the Elder organized them into six orders to make it easier to remember. The historical accuracy of this tradition is disputed. There is also a tradition that Ezra the scribe dictated from memory not only the 24 books of the Tanakh but 60 esoteric books. It is not known whether this is a reference to the Mishnah, but there is a case for saying that the Mishnah does consist of 60 tractates. (The current total is 63, but Makkot was originally part of Sanhedrin, and Bava Kamma, Bava Metzia and Bava Batra may be regarded as subdivisions of a single tractate Nezikin.)

Mishah: A noun formed from the verb "shanah," which has the same meaning as the Aramaic "matnita," derived from "teni" or "tena." The verb "shanah," which originally meant "to repeat," acquired in post-Biblical Hebrew the special force of "to teach" and "to learn" that which was not transmitted in writing but only orally; the development of connotation being due to the fact that the retention of teachings handed down by word of mouth was possible only by frequent recitation.

The Shulchan Aruch (Hebrew: שֻׁלְחָן עָרוּךְ [ʃulˈħan ʕaˈʁuχ], literally: "Set Table") also known by various Jewish communities but not all as "the Code of Jewish Law." There are various legal codes in Judaism but the Shulchan Aruch is the most widely consulted. It was authored in Safed, Israel, by Yosef Karo in 1563 and published in Venice two years later. Together with its commentaries, it is the most widely accepted compilation of Jewish law ever written.

The halachic rulings in the Shulchan Aruch generally follow Sephardic law and customs whereas Ashkenazi Jews will generally follow the halachic rulings of Moses Isserles whose glosses to the Shulchan Aruch note where the Sephardic and Ashkenazic customs differ. These glosses are widely referred to as the mappah (literally: the "tablecloth") to the Shulchan Aruch's "Set Table". Almost all published editions of the Shulchan Aruch include this gloss, and the term "Shulchan Aruch" has come to denote both Karo's work as well as Isserlis', with Karo usually referred to as "the mechaber" ("author") and Isserles as "the Rema".

The Shulchan Aruch (and its forerunner, the Beit Yosef) follow the same structure as Arba'ah Turim by Rabbi Jacob ben Asher. These books were written from the standpoint of Sephardi Minhag, other works entitled Shulchan Aruch or Kitzur Shulcan Aruch cited below are written from the standpoint of Ashkenazi Minhag. There are four sections, each subdivided into many chapters and paragraphs.

1. Orach Chayim - laws of prayer and synagogue, Sabbath, holidays;

2. Yoreh De'ah - laws of kashrut; religious conversion; Mourning; Laws pertaining to Israel; Laws of family purity

3. Even Ha'ezer - laws of marriage, divorce and related issues;

4. Choshen Mishpat - laws of finance, financial responsibility, damages (personal and financial), and the rules of the Bet Din, as well as the laws of witnesses

The Shulchan Aruch is largely based on an earlier work by Karo, titled Beth Yosef (Hebrew: "House of Joseph"). The latter is a vast and comprehensive commentary on Jacob ben Asher's (1269–1343) Arba'ah Turim ("Tur"), citing and analyzing the Talmudic, Geonic, and major subsequent halachic authorities. This work analyzes the theories and conclusions of those authorities cited by the Tur, and also examines the opinions of authorities not mentioned by the latter. Karo began the Beth Yosef in 1522 at Adrianople, finished it in 1542 at Safed in the Land of Israel; he published it in 1550-59.

Thirty-two authorities, beginning with the Talmud and ending with the works of Rabbi Israel Isserlein (1390–1460 and known as the Terumath ha-Deshen), are summarized and critically discussed in Beth Yosef. No other rabbinical work compares with it in wealth of material. Karo evidences not only an astonishing range of reading, covering almost the entire rabbinic literature up to his time, but also remarkable powers of critical investigation. He evidences no inclination to simply accept the opinions of ancient authorities, notwithstanding his great respect for them.

The Shulchan Aruch HaRav (Hebrew שולחן ערוך הרב: "Code of Jewish Law by the Rabbi"; also Shulkhan Arukh HaRav) is especially a record of prevailing halakha by Rabbi Shneur Zalman of Liadi (1745 – 1812), known during his lifetime as HaRav (Hebrew for "The Rabbi") and as the first Rebbe (Yiddish for "rabbi") of Chabad. Within the Chabad community the work is known as the Alter Rebbe's Shulchan Aruch.

The Shulchan Aruch HaRav is today used by most Hasidim as their basis for daily practice. The work is broadly considered an authoritative halachic text, and is frequently cited by later authorities such as Yisrael Meir Kagan in his Mishnah Berurah and the Ben Ish Chai of Yosef Chaim of Baghdad, as well as in many contemporary responsa by leading halachic authorities of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Shulchan Aruch HaRav is also one of the three works on which Shlomo Ganzfried based his Kitzur Shulchan Aruch, the well-known precis of customary Ashkenazi Halakha.

References are given in two ways; those to the Shulchan Aruch are found in the later work Be'er ha-Golah, and those to Isserles' work are in brackets after the latter's comments. There is disagreement on the authorship of the references to Isserles' remarks, as they are occasionally incorrect. Since the 17th century, the Shulchan Aruch has been printed with Isserles' annotations in small Rashi print interspersed with Karo's text. As commentaries on the work proliferated, more sophisticated printing styles became required, similar to those of the Talmud.

The legal code known as the Shulkhan Arukh, compiled by the great Sephardic rabbi Joseph Caro in the mid-1500s, is still the standard legal code of Judaism. When rabbis, particularly if they are Orthodox, are asked to rule on a question of Jewish law, the first volume they consult generally is the Shulkhan Arukh. A major reason for its universal acceptance is that it was the first code to list the differing customs and laws of both Sephardic and Ashkenazic Jewry. (Maimonides's earlier Mishneh Torah, for example, contained only the legal rulings of Sephardic Jewry, which differed in certain areas from European Jewry's practices.) This unique feature was not intended by Joseph Caro, but came about through a happy coincidence. At the very time that Caro was compiling his code, a similar undertaking was being planned by Rabbi Moses Isserles of Poland. Isserles, known in Jewish life as the Rama, was thrown into some despair when he first heard about Caro's work, for he knew Caro to be a greater scholar than himself. Nonetheless, he soon realized that both Caro's legal code and his own would not by themselves meet the needs of all Jews. Thus, the Shulkhan Arukh was published with Caro's rulings listed first, and Isserles's dissents and addenda included in italics.

The Shulkhan Arukh is divided into four volumes:

1. Orakh Hayyim-laws of prayer and of holidays.

2. Yoreh Deah-diverse laws, including those governing charity (tzedaka), Torah study and the Jewish dietary laws.

3. Even haEzer-laws concerning Jewish marriage and divorce.

4. Khoshen Mishpat-Jewish civil law.

To this day, rabbinic ordination (semikha) usually is given to a student only after he has been examined on the Shulkhan Arukh, particularly on those sections that deal with kashrut (dietary laws).

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

More than rote knowledge of the Shulkhan Arukh's rulings, however, is expected. A popular Jewish folktale tells of a young student who came to a prominent rabbi to be tested for ordination. The rabbi's first question was "Name the five volumes of the Shulkhan Arukh."

The student, thinking that the rabbi had made a slip of the tongue, named the four volumes, but the rabbi asked him to name the fifth.

"There is no fifth volume," the student said.

"There is indeed," the rabbi said. "Common sense is the fifth volume, and if you don't have it, all your rulings will be of no use, even if you know the other four volumes by heart."

Difference between the Mishnah, Gemara and the Talmud

https://judaism.stackexchange.com/questions/13425/difference-between-the-mishnah-gemara-and-the-talmud#13427

The Mishna is a compilation of (mostly) halachic rulings that comprise the Oral Law, which is the body of knowledge received by Moshe at Sinai sans whatever is included explicitly in the Written Torah. It was compiled (or perhaps even written) by R' Yehuda HaNasi in around the second or third century CE.

In the next several centuries, halachic discussions took place in Batei Midrash (houses of learning) throughout Israel and Babylonia, which were based on primarily the rulings of the Mishna and other less-prominent compilations of Jewish Law. Many of these discussions were recorded and eventually compiled into the Talmud Bavli (representing the halachic analysis that took place in Babylonia) and the Talmud Yerushalmi (representing that of Israel) about four hundred years later (give or take).

"Gemara" is the term that refers to deep halachic analysis, especially when it revolves around the rulings of the Mishna. Because of this, the Talmud is often referred to as the Gemara. (By the way, as a general rule, whenever someone says "the Talmud", they are referring to the Talmud Bavli, as it is more commonly and widely studied since it has the advantage of being more thoroughly redacted and practical halachic rulings generally follow the Talmud Bavli.)

I'm not really sure about when they were first cited in other works. Published Jewish works were scarce at that time and in the centuries that followed. The earliest sources I know of that explicitly cite the Talmud are the works of later geonim, R' Saadia Gaon and R' Sherira Gaon (who actually wrote a history of the Talmud).

A lot of information can be found on Wikipedia as well.

Gemara

The Gemara (also transliterated Gemora, Gemarah, or, less commonly, Gemorra; from Hebrew גמרא, from the Aramaic verb gamar, study) is the component of the Talmud comprising rabbinical analysis of and commentary on the Mishnah. After the Mishnah was published by Judah the Prince (c. 200 CE), the work was studied exhaustively by generation after generation of rabbis in Babylonia and the Land of Israel. Their discussions were written down in a series of books that became the Gemara, which when combined with the Mishnah constituted the Talmud.

There are two versions of the Gemara. The Jerusalem Talmud (Talmud Yerushalmi) was compiled by scholars of the Land of Israel, primarily of the academies of Tiberias and Caesarea, and was published between about 350–400 CE. The Talmud Bavli was published about 500 CE by scholars of Babylonia, primarily of the academies of Sura, Pumbedita, and Nehardea. By convention, a reference to the "Gemara" or "Talmud," without further qualification, refers to the Babylonian version. The main compilers were Revina and Rav Ashi. see Talmud.

Gemara: The Essence of the Talmud

https://www.myjewishlearning.com/article/gemara-the-essence-of-the-talmud/

Sages in both Babylonia (modern-day Iraq) and the Land of Israel continued to study traditional teachings, including the Mishnah, describing the teachings as having been passed down from Moses at Sinai (either literally or figuratively). The oral discussions were preserved, either by memorization or notation, and later edited together in a manner that places generations of sages in conversation with one another. These teachers were interested in bringing greater harmonization between biblical and rabbinic traditions, largely by providing proof-texts for known laws and explaining differences between the biblical and rabbinic versions of laws. This is the origin of the Gemara.

Babylonian vs. Palestinian

There are actually two works known as "Gemara" — the Babylonian Gemara (referred to as "Bavli" in Hebrew) and the Palestinian (or Jerusalem) Gemara (referred to as "Yerushalmi"). The term "Gemara" itself comes from the Aramaic root g.m.r (equivalent to l.m.d, in Hebrew), giving it the meaning "teaching."

Although the Yerushalmi was completed earlier (with material spanning roughly 200-500 C.E.), it was eclipsed by the much longer Bavli (200-600 C.E.). The Bavli's popularity may be due to the work of the Gaonim of Babylonia, who cited that work in the legal judgements (responsa) that they sent to communities throughout the Diaspora. Both Gemaras were written in a combination of Hebrew and Aramaic dialects and share the teachings of sages known by the term Amoraim (in the singular, Amora).

Both Broad and Deep

Gemara encompasses several literary genres, and subject matter ranges from the sacred to the profane. While it is often misrepresented as merely a commentary on the laws of the Mishnah, the Gemara has an intricate relationship with the Mishnah and a far greater scope. Although it is organized in accordance with the structure of the six orders of the Mishnah, mishnaic teachings are, for the Gemara, the launch pad for diverse topics: prayer, holy days, agriculture, sexual habits, contemporary medical knowledge, superstitions, criminal and civil law.

The Gemara contains both halakhah (legal material) and aggadah (narrative material). Aggadah includes historical material, biblical commentaries, philosophy, theology, and wisdom literature. Stories reveal information about life in ancient times, among Jews and between Jews and their neighbors, and folk customs. All of these genres are blended together with the halakhic material, in what is sometimes described as a stream-of-consciousness fashion filled with meaningful tangents and digressions.

The Relationship of Gemara to Mishnah

In dealing with the teachings of the Mishnah, the Gemara has multiple functions. It explains unclear words or phrasing. It also provides precedents or examples to assist in application of the law and offers alternative opinions from sages of the Mishnah and their contemporaries (known as Tannaim). Whereas the Mishnah barely cites biblical verses, the Gemara for nearly every law discussed introduces these connections between the biblical text and the practices and legal opinions of its time. It also extends and restricts applications of various laws, and even adds laws on issues left out of the Mishnah entirely (for example, the key observances of Hanukkah). Multiple opinions of sages are weighed against one another, often without presenting a conclusion.

How the Gemara is Studied

Talmudic teachings have been most often studied in groups or pairs– among masters and students and/or between two partners in learning. A pair of study partners is called a havruta. The havruta-style provides a challenging, lively, and intimate environment in which to explore the rich spiritual and intellectual depths of the Talmud.

The Talmud is a vast collection of Jewish man-made laws and traditions. The Talmud is Judaism's holiest book(s). Evidence of this is found in the Talmud itself, in Erubin 21b (Soncino edition): "My son, be more careful in the observance of the words of the Scribes than in the words of the Torah (Old Testament)."

Sages and Scholars - A few of the more influential Jewish minds of the past two millenia

Chazal (Chachameinu Zichronam Liv'racha)

In traditional discussion of Jewish Law, you will often see people speak of what Chazal says about a matter. Chazal is not a single person; the term refers collectively to the consensus of authoritative opinion, in much the same way that we might speak of what Congress says or what the Supreme Court says. Chazal is an acronym of the Hebrew phrase Chachameinu Zichronam Liv'racha, which means "our sages of blessed memory" or "our sages, may their memory be a blessing." In its strictest sense, Chazal refers to the final opinion expressed in the Talmud, but the term is sometimes used more loosely to refer to the generally accepted opinion of any of the wise people who have contributed to Jewish law. Throughout this site, I usually use the phrase "the rabbis" where others might use the term Chazal.

Hillel and Shammai

These two great scholars born a generation or two before the beginning of the Common Era are usually discussed together and contrasted with each other, because they were contemporaries and the leaders of two opposing schools of thought (known as "houses"). The Talmud records over 300 differences of opinion between Beit Hillel (the House of Hillel) and Beit Shammai (the House of Shammai). In almost every one of these disputes, Hillel's view prevailed.

Rabbi Hillel was born to a wealthy family in Babylonia, but came to Jerusalem without the financial support of his family and supported himself as a woodcutter. It is said that he lived in such great poverty that he was sometimes unable to pay the admission fee to study Torah, and because of him that fee was abolished. He was known for his kindness, his gentleness, and his concern for humanity. One of his most famous sayings, recorded in Pirkei Avot (Ethics of the Fathers, a tractate of the Mishnah), is "If I am not for myself, then who will be for me? And if I am only for myself, then what am I? And if not now, when?" The Hillel organization, a network of Jewish college student organizations, is named for him.

Rabbi Shammai was an engineer, known for the strictness of his views. The Talmud tells that a gentile came to Shammai saying that he would convert to Judaism if Shammai could teach him the whole Torah in the time that he could stand on one foot. Shammai drove him away with a builder's measuring stick! Hillel, on the other hand, converted the gentile by telling him, "That which is hateful to you, do not do to your neighbor. That is the whole Torah; the rest is commentary. Go and study it."

Rabbi Yochanan ben Zakkai

Rabbi Yochanan ben Zakkai was the youngest and most distinguished disciple of Rabbi Hillel (see above). He has been called the "father of wisdom and the father of generations (of scholars)" because he ensured the continuation of Jewish scholarship after Jerusalem fell to Rome in 70 C.E.

According to tradition, ben Zakkai was a pacifist in Jerusalem in 68 C.E. when the city was under siege by General Vespasian. Jerusalem was controlled by the Zealots, people who would rather die than surrender to Rome (these are the same people who controlled Masada). Ben Zakkai urged surrender, but the Zealots would not hear of it, so ben Zakkai faked his own death and had his disciples smuggle him out of Jerusalem in a coffin. They carried the coffin to Vespasian's tent, where ben Zakkai emerged from the coffin. He told Vespasian that he had had a vision (some would say, a shrewd political insight) that Vespasian would soon be emperor, and he asked Vespasian to set aside a place in Yavneh (near modern Rehovot) where he could move his yeshivah (school) and study Torah in peace. Vespasian promised that if the prophecy came true, he would grant ben Zakkai's request. Vespasian became Emperor and kept his word, allowing the school to be established after the war was over. The yeshiva survived and was a center of Jewish learning for centuries.

Rabbi Akiba ben Joseph (approx. 15-135 C.E.)

A poor, semi-literate shepherd, Rabbi Akiba became one of Judaism's greatest scholars. He developed the exegetical method of the Mishnah, linking each traditional practice to a basis in the biblical text, and systematized the material that later became the Mishnah.

Rabbi Akiba was active in the Bar Kokhba rebellion against Rome. He believed that Bar Kokhba was the Mashiach (messiah), though some other rabbis openly ridiculed him for that belief (the Talmud records another rabbi as saying, "Akiba, grass will grow in your cheeks and still the son of David will not have come.") When the Bar Kokhba rebellion failed, Rabbi Akiba was taken by the Roman authorities and tortured to death.

Rabbi Judah Ha-Nasi (approx. 135-219 C.E.)

The Patriarch of the Jewish community, Rabbi Judah Ha-Nasi was well-educated in Greek thought as well as Jewish thought. He organized and compiled the Mishnah, building upon Rabbi Akiba's work.

Rashi (Rabbi Shlomo Yitzchaki) (1040-1105 C.E.)

A grape grower living in Northern France, Rashi wrote the definitive commentaries on the Babylonian Talmud and the Bible. Rashi pulled together materials from a wide variety of sources, wrote them down in the order of the Talmud and the Bible for easy reference, and wrote them in such clear, concise and plain language that it can be appreciated by beginners and experts alike. Almost every edition of the Talmud printed since the invention of the printing press has included the text of Rashi's commentary side-by-side with the Talmudic text. Many traditional Jews will not study the Bible without a Rashi commentary beside it.

Rambam (Maimonides; Rabbi Moshe ben Maimon) (1135-1204 C.E.)

A physician born in Moorish Cordoba, Rambam lived in a variety of places throughout the Moorish lands of Spain, the Middle East and North Africa, often fleeing persecution. He was a leader of the Jewish community in Cairo. He was heavily influenced by Greek thought, particularly that of Aristotle.

Rambam was the author of the Mishneh Torah, one of the greatest codes of Jewish law, compiling every conceivable topic of Jewish law in subject matter order and providing a simple statement of the prevailing view in plain language. In his own time, he was widely condemned because he claimed that the Mishneh Torah was a substitute for studying the Talmud.

Rambam is also responsible for several important theological works. He developed the 13 Principles of Faith, the most widely accepted list of Jewish beliefs. He also wrote the Guide for the Perplexed, a discussion of difficult theological concepts written from the perspective of an Aristotelian philosopher.

Ramban (Nachmanides; Rabbi Moshe ben Nachman) (1194-1270 C.E.)

Ramban was the foremost halakhist of his age. Like Rambam before him, Ramban was a Spaniard who was both a physician and a great Torah scholar. However, unlike the rationalist Rambam, Ramban had a strong mystical bent. His biblical commentaries are the first ones to incorporate the mystical teachings of kabbalah.
He was well-known for his aggressive refutations of Christianity, most notably, his debate with Pablo Christiani, a converted Jew, before King Jaime I of Spain in 1263.

Ramban could be described as one of history's first Zionists, because he declared that it is a mitzvah to take possession of Israel and to live in it (relying on Num. 33:53). He said, "So long as Israel occupies [the Holy Land], the earth is regarded as subject to Him." Ramban fulfilled this commandment, moving to the Holy Land during the Crusades after he was expelled from Spain for his polemics. He found devastation in the Holy Land, "but even in this destruction," he said, "it is a blessed land." He died there in 1270 C.E.

Do not confuse Ramban with Rabbi Nachman of Breslov (see below).

Baal Shem Tov (the Besht, Rabbi Israel ben Eliezer) (1700-1760 C.E.)

The founder of Chasidic Judaism. Although many books of his teachings exist, the Besht himself wrote no books, perhaps because his teachings emphasized the fact that even a simple, uneducated peasant could approach G-d (a radical idea in its time, when Judaism emphasized that the way to approach G-d was through study). He emphasized prayer, the observance of commandments, and ecstatic, personal mystical experiences.

Rabbi Nachman of Breslov (1772-1810 C.E.)

The great-grandson of the Baal Shem Tov (see above), Rabbi Nachman of Breslov (sometimes called Bratzlav, Breslau or Bratislava) was the founder of the Breslover Chasidic sect. Breslov is a town in the Ukraine where Rabbi Nachman spent the end of his life, but some say the name Breslov comes from the Hebrew bris lev, meaning "covenant of the heart." He emphasized living life with joy and happiness. One of his best-known sayings is, "It is a great mitzvah to be happy." Collections of his Chasidic tales (or tales attributed to him) are widely available in print.

Do not confuse Rabbi Nachman with Ramban (see above).

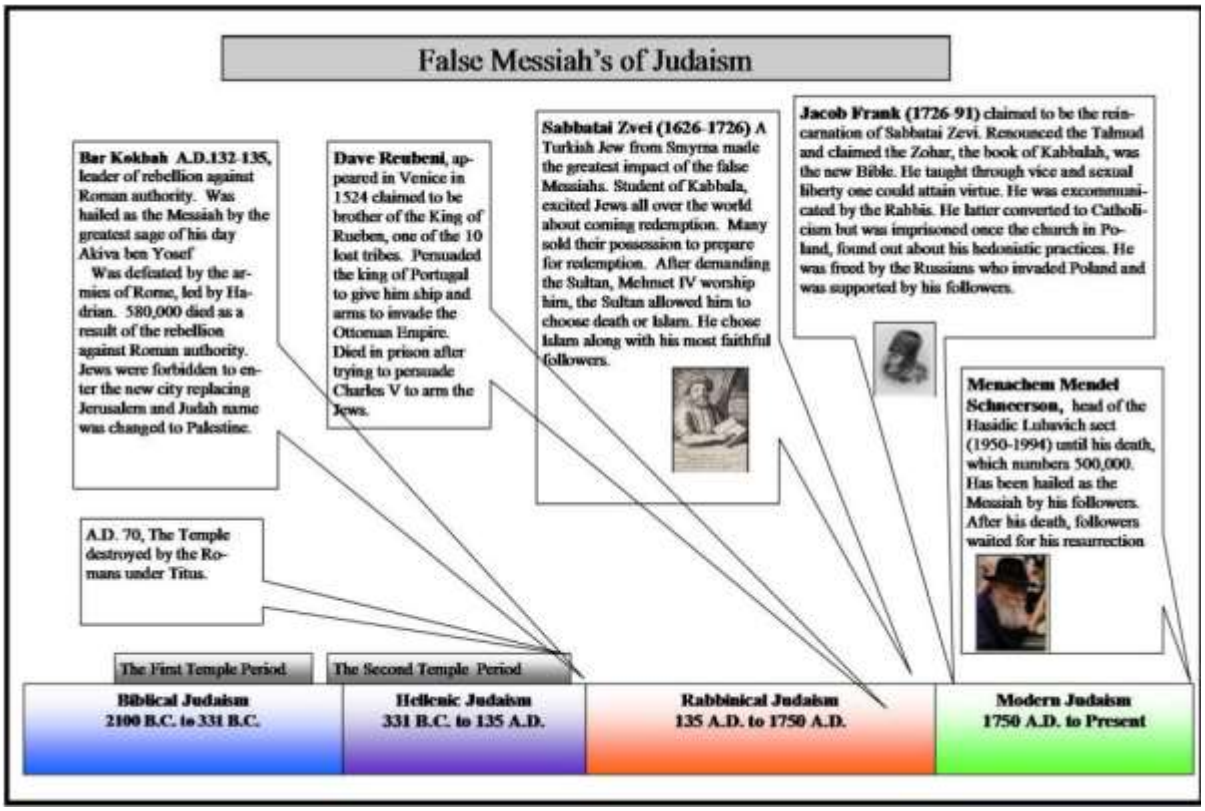
Who is the Messiah the Jews are expecting to come? Why did the Jews reject Yeshua (Jesus) as their Messiah? These two questions often seem a mystery to many Christians as they read the Bible and study the prophets. Before Yeshua, the Jews were waiting for the Messiah, but when Yeshua came and died, he did not fulfill this expectation.



Today, Judaism still waits for the coming of the Messiah, but who are they expecting? What qualifications need to met by the Messiah. Moses Ben Maimon (Maimonides), also called Rambam (1135-1204), wrote in his Thirteen Articles of Faith, that belief in the Messiah was required for a Jew to be resurrected. Is there discontinuity as well as continuity in Jewish conversion? Judaism affirms belief in the Torah, the word and law of God. Rabbinic and Talmudic studies are considered to be 'Oral Torah' revealed by God to Moses and then developed in succeeding centuries. If Judaism were indeed purely founded on the rock of God's revelation in the OT, then the Christian faith in Jesus as Messiah would be only continuous with it. If, however, we see rabbinic and Talmudic studies as man-made additions to God's Torah, then human fallibility and error form an essential part of modern Judaism and discontinuity requires repentance and new birth.

Midrash מִדְרָשׁ

(meed-rahsh) n. Interpretation; commentary; exegesis; investigation. The plural is midrashim. The word "midrash" is a general term that simply means searching the text. There is no single book called "The Midrash" but only various compilations composed and edited over the course of more than a millennium. Midrash can apply to matters of Jewish law (called midrash halakhah) or various narrative matters (called midrash aggadah). Aggadic literature (from אגדה, aggadah, literally "telling" or "story") is intended to reinforce Jewish values, provide moral exhortation, instill a sense of reverence or inspiration, and to generally inculcate Jewish "hashkafah" (perspective).

The largest compilation of aggaidic literature is called the Midrash Rabbah. Each volume comments on one of the five books of the Torah (i.e., Bereshit Rabbah, Shemot Rabbah, etc.). A compilation of midrash that combines both legal and narrative material is the Midrash Tanhuma. When someone says, "It says in the midrash..." they usually mean midrash aggadah taken from the Midrash Rabbah. An individual text of midrashic material is also called a Midrash.

In Judaism, the Midrash (/ˈmɪdrɑːʃ/;[1] Hebrew: מדרש; plural midrashim) is the body of exegesis of Torah texts along with homiletic stories as taught by Chazal (Rabbinical Jewish sages of the post-Temple era) that provide an intrinsic analysis to passages in the Tanakh.
Midrash is a method of interpreting biblical stories that goes beyond simple distillation of religious, legal, or moral teachings. It fills in gaps left in the biblical narrative regarding events and personalities that are only hinted at. The purpose of midrash was to resolve problems in the interpretation of difficult passages of the text of the Hebrew Bible, using Rabbinic principles of hermeneutics and philology to align them with the religious and ethical values of religious teachers. [Source: Wikipedia]

Midrash is commonly defined as the process of interpretation by which the rabbis filled in “gaps” found in the Torah. It is a literature that seeks to ask the questions that lie on the tips of our tongues, and to answer them even before we have posed them.

What made Cain kill Abel: Was it jealousy over his own rejected sacrifice? Why would God choose the sacrifice of one brother over another? Did Isaac know that his father intended to sacrifice him on that altar? Did Sarah know what was going on? These are only a few out of thousands of questions for which the rabbis searched for answers.

Midrash is the method of hermeneutics (Biblical interpretation) used by the ancient rabbis in the time of Jesus and Paul. Midrash incorporates a grammatical-historical exegesis, vaguely similar to the western models of Biblical interpretation that the Reformers borrowed from 16th century Humanism, but it sees this as simply a first step.

In its handling of various Biblical literary genre — such as narrative, wisdom literature, Hebrew poetry and apocalyptic — it seeks cognate relationships between different scriptural texts in order to interpret them in light of each other. The approach is more topical than linear…. [see more]

Midrash is a form of rabbinic literature. There are two types of midrash: midrash aggada and midrash halakha.

Midrash aggada can best be described as a form of storytelling that explores ethics and values in biblical texts. ("Aggada" literally means "story" or "telling" in Hebrew.) It can take any biblical word or verse and interpret it to answer a question or explain something in the text.

For instance, a midrash may attempt to explain why Adam didn't stop Eve from eating the forbidden fruit in the Garden of Eden. One of the best-known midrashim (plural of midrash) deals with Abraham's childhood in early Mesopotamia, where he is said to have smashed the idols in his father's shop because even at that age he knew there was only One God. Midrash aggadah can be found in both Talmuds, in midrashic collections and in Midrash Rabbah, which means "Great Midrash."

Whereas midrash aggada focuses on biblical characters as they pertain to values and ideas, midrash halakha focuses on Jewish law and practice. Midrash halakha attempts to take biblical texts that are either general or unclear and to clarify what they mean. A midrash of this nature may explain why, for instance, tefillin are used during prayer and how they should be worn.

[Source: http://judaism.about.com/od/glossary/g/midrash.htm]

Midrash is an interpretive act, seeking the answers to religious questions (both practical and theological) by plumbing the meaning of the words of the Torah. (In the Bible, the root d-r-sh is used to mean inquiring into any matter, including occasionally to seek out God's word.) Midrash responds to contemporary problems and crafts new stories, making connections between new Jewish realities and the unchanging biblical text.

Midrash falls into two categories. When the subject is law and religious practice (halakhah), it is called midrash halakhah. Midrash aggadah, on the other hand, interprets biblical narrative, exploring questions of ethics or theology, or creating homilies and parables based on the text. (Aggadah means"telling"; any midrash which is not halakhic falls into this category.)

Midrash Halakhah: It is often difficult to determine, simply from reading the biblical text, what Jewish law would be in practice. The text of the Torah is often general or ambiguous when presenting laws. Midrash halakhah attempts to clarify or extend a law beyond the conditions assumed in the Bible, and to make connections between current practice and the biblical text. It made possible the creation and acceptance of new liturgies and rituals which de facto replaced sacrificial worship after the fall of the Second Temple, and the maintenance of continuity by linking those practices to the words of the Torah.

Midrash halakhah from the two centuries following the fall of the Temple was collected in three books--the Mekhilta on Exodus, the Sifra on Leviticus, and the Sifrei on Numbers and Deuteronomy--known as the tannaitic midrashim.(The tannaim were the rabbis from the time of the Mishnah, edited in approximately 200 C.E.)

Midrash Aggadah: The type of midrash most commonly referred to (as in, "There is a midrash which says…") is from the collections of midrash aggadah, most of which were compiled between about 200 and 1000 C.E. (Many midrashim circulated orally before then). Midrash aggadah may begin its exploration with any word or verse in the Bible. There are many different methods of interpretation and exposition.

Written by rabbis both steeped in Bible and absorbed by the Jewish questions of their time, works of midrash aggadah often occupy the meeting ground between reverence and love for the wording of the fixed text of the Torah, and theological creativity. Midrashic writings thus often yield religious insights that have made Torah directly applicable to later Jewish realities, especially the concerns of its authors. Some of what midrash aggadah yields is insight into the burning, sometimes time-bound questions of those who wrote it. Still, the interpretations produced often have more universal and timeless application to our, or any, generation.

In addition to works devoted to midrashic compilations, midrash aggadah also appears throughout the two Talmuds. Midrash Rabbah, the "Great Midrash," is the name of the collections linked to the five books of the Torah and the "Five Scrolls" (Esther, Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, and Ecclesiastes) read on holidays. Some of these works read like verse-by-verse commentaries. Others may have originated in sermons linked to the weekly Shabbat Torah reading."

Zohar

The Zohar (זהר) was compiled by Moses De Leon (1250-1305) who claimed that it contained the mystical writings of the 2nd century sage Simeon bar Yochai (i.e., רשב"י [rashbi], from Rabbi Shimeon bar Yochai), who was the disciple of the famous Rabbi Akiva (50-135 AD). Most modern scholars consider De Leon as the original author, though many kabbalists regard the Zohar as an authentic compilation of mystical traditions dating back to the time of Moses (or even to Adam in the Garden of Eden).

Kabbalah is said to derive from "received" oral traditions that span thousands of years, and there is warrant for this doctrine. Mystical visions were part of the prophetic literature from the earliest times, as Ezekiel's and Isaiah's visions attest, and other apocalyptic literature dates back to the Dead Sea Scrolls. Philo of Alexandria (20 BC- 50 AD) also wrote of mystical Judaism in light of Greek and Egyptian philosophy. After the destruction of the Second Temple we find passages in the Talmud warning against it, perhaps because the sages (i.e., rabbis) wanted to be regarded as the sole religious authorities of the Jewish people in the Diaspora. Nonetheless, various oral traditions later produced different written works, including the Heichalot literature (i.e., discussions about the Chariot vision of Ezekiel), the Sefer Yetzirah (i.e., the "Book of Formation" which gives first mention to ten divine emanations), the Sefer Bahir (an esoteric midrash on Genesis), and (as mentioned above) the Zohar. Today the Sefer Yetzirah, the Bahir, and the Zohar are considered the most significant works of Kabbalistic tradition

Source: http://www.hebrew4christians.com/Articles/kabbalah/What_is_Kabbalah/what_is_kabbalah.html

The Zohar (Hebrew: זֹהַר, lit. "Splendor" or "Radiance") is the foundational work in the literature of Jewish mystical thought known as Kabbalah.[1] It is a group of books including commentary on the mystical aspects of the Torah (the five books of Moses) and scriptural interpretations as well as material on mysticism, mythical cosmogony, and mystical psychology. The Zohar contains a discussion of the nature of God, the origin and structure of the universe, the nature of souls, redemption, the relationship of Ego to Darkness and "true self" to "The Light of God", and the relationship between the "universal energy" and man. Its scriptural exegesis can be considered an esoteric form of the Rabbinic literature known as Midrash, which elaborates on the Torah.

The Zohar is mostly written in what has been described as an exalted, eccentric style of Aramaic. Aramaic, the day-to-day language of Israel in the Second Temple period (539 BCE – 70 CE), was the original language of large sections of the biblical books of Daniel and Ezra, and is the main language of the Talmud.

The Zohar first appeared in Spain in the 13th century, and was published by a Jewish writer named Moses de Leon. De Leon ascribed the work to Shimon bar Yochai ("Rashbi"), a rabbi of the 2nd century during the Roman persecution[3] who, according to Jewish legend, hid in a cave for thirteen years studying the Torah and was inspired by the Prophet Elijah to write the Zohar. This accords with the traditional claim by adherents that Kabbalah is the concealed part of the Oral Torah.

While the traditional majority view in religious Judaism has been that the teachings of Kabbalah were revealed by God to Biblical figures such as Abraham and Moses and were then transmitted orally from the Biblical era until its redaction by Shimon bar Yochai, modern academic analysis of the Zohar, such as that by the 20th century religious historian Gershom Scholem, has theorized that De Leon was the actual author. The view of non-Orthodox Jewish denominations generally conforms to this latter view, and as such, most non-Orthodox Jews have long viewed the Zohar as pseudepigraphy and apocrypha while sometimes accepting that its contents may have meaning for modern Judaism. Jewish prayerbooks edited by non-Orthodox Jews may therefore contain excerpts from the Zohar and other kabbalistic works, even if the editors do not literally believe that they are oral traditions from the time of Moses.

There are people of religions besides Judaism, or even those without religious affiliation, who delve in the Zohar out of curiosity, or as a technology for people who are seeking meaningful and practical answers about the meaning of their lives, the purpose of creation and existence and their relationships with the laws of nature, and so forth; however from the perspective of traditional, rabbinic Judaism, and by the Zohar's own statements, the purpose of the Zohar is to help the Jewish people through and out of the Exile and to infuse the Torah and mitzvot (Judaic commandments) with the wisdom of Kabbalah for its Jewish readers.

In the Bible the word "Zohar" appears in the vision of Ezekiel Chapter 8 Verse 2 and is usually translated as meaning radiance or light. It appears again in Daniel Chapter 12 Verse 3, "The wise ones will shine like the radiance of the firmament".

Yeshiva

Following the destruction of the Second Temple in ad 70, religious life centred upon the great rabbis, then located outside Jerusalem. The yeshiva of major importance in this period was that of Johanan ben Zakkai, who established an academy at Jabneh (or Jamnia, now Yibna) near the Judaean coast. Succeeding tanaim (“teachers”) and sages who dominated religious scholarship were Simeon ben Gamaliel (died 175) and his son, Judah ha-Nasi (c. 135–c. 220), under whose tutelage the compilation of the Mishna was completed.

From the mid-3rd century, Jewish scholarship concentrated on the legal exegesis of the Mishna by the amoraim (“lecturers,” or “interpreters”). In Palestine yeshivas were established in Lydda, Caesarea, Sepphoris, and Tiberias. These academies produced the Palestinian Talmud and undertook the collection of Midrashim (homiletic commentaries on the Bible).

Other yeshivas simultaneously flourished in Babylonia, two of which gained extraordinary renown. The first was established by Abba Arika after his arrival at Sura in 218. The other was set up at Pumbedita by Judah bar Ezekiel. From c. 200 to 1040 these two yeshivas had immense authority as centres of learning and issued “official” interpretations of the law.

As the Babylonian yeshivas declined, others arose in Spain, France, Italy, Germany, and central Europe. Then, as Jews moved eastward, outstanding yeshivas were established in Poland. Important new centres of Jewish learning appeared in Turkey and Palestine following the expulsion of the Jews from Spain in 1492.

The Polish yeshivas suffered a debilitating blow in the violent persecutions of 1648–49, but by the latter part of the 18th century a mystical and pietistic movement called Ḥasidism won over large masses of Polish and Ukrainian Jews and in due course gave rise to new yeshivas.

When the Enlightenment movement (Haskala) of eastern Europe (latter half of the 18th century) challenged the traditions of the yeshivas by adapting Judaism to modern culture, Ḥayyim ben Isaac attempted to counter its influence by establishing a yeshiva (1803) at Volozhin, Russia (now Valozhyn, Belarus). It profoundly influenced Russian Jewry until its final closing in 1892. By including secular subjects in its training of future rabbis, Volozhin departed from the traditional curriculum of European (Lithuanian, Polish, Hungarian) yeshivas.

The first yeshiva in the United States was ʿEtz Ḥayyim of New York (1886), modelled after that in Volozhin. It developed into the Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Yeshiva (1896), which in turn became Yeshiva College in 1928 and Yeshiva University in 1945.

In the Nazi persecution of European Jews prior to and during World War II (1939–45) numerous yeshivas were destroyed and many scholars and rabbinic students were forced to seek other lands, notably England, Canada, the United States, and Palestine. Today the most outstanding yeshivas are located in the United States and Israel.

Rabbinic seminaries of Reform and Conservative Judaism are not usually called yeshivas. In the United States, a day school under Orthodox Jewish auspices is generally known as a “small yeshiva” (yeshiva qeṭana).

In the centuries following the destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem (70 CE), the Jewish people began writing two versions of Jewish thought, religious history and commentary. One was written in Palestine and became known as the Jerusalem Talmud. [see special endnote at the end of this article concerning the Talmud] The other was written in Babylon and was known as the Babylonian Talmud.

We read in the Jerusalem Talmud:

"Forty years before the destruction of the Temple, the western light went out, the crimson thread remained crimson, and the lot for the Lord always came up in the left hand. They would close the gates of the Temple by night and get up in the morning and find them wide open" (Jacob Neusner, The Yerushalmi, p.156-157). [the Temple was destroyed in 70 CE]

A similar passage in the Babylonian Talmud states:

"Our rabbis taught: During the last forty years before the destruction of the Temple the lot ['For the Lord'] did not come up in the right hand; nor did the crimson-colored strap become white; nor did the western most light shine; and the doors of the Hekel [Temple] would open by themselves" (Soncino version, Yoma 39b).

What are these passages talking about? Since both Talmuds recount the same information, this indicates the knowledge of these events was accepted by the widespread Jewish community.

1) The Miracle of the "Lot"

The first of these miracles concerns a random choosing of the "lot" which was cast on the Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur). The lot chosen determined which of two goats would be "for the Lord" and which goat would be the "Azazel" or "scapegoat." During the two hundred years before 30 CE, when the High Priest picked one of two stones, again this selection was governed by chance, and each year the priest would select a black stone as often as a white stone. But for forty years in a row, beginning in 30 CE, the High Priest always picked the black stone! The odds against this happening are astronomical (2 to the 40th power). In other words, the chances of this occurring are 1 in approximately 1,099,511,627,776 — or over one trillion to one! By comparison, your chances of winning your local state or municipal-run cash Lottery would be much more favorable!

The lot for Azazel, the black stone, contrary to all the laws of chance, came up 40 times in a row from 30 to 70 AD! This was considered a dire event and signified something had fundamentally changed in this Yom Kippur ritual. This casting of lots is also accompanied by yet another miracle which is described next.

Yeshua and Talmud
Why Did They Write of Him If He Did Not Exist?

2) The Miracle of the Red Strip

The second miracle concerns the crimson strip or cloth tied to the Azazel goat. A portion of this red cloth was also removed from the goat and tied to the Temple door. Each year the red cloth on the Temple door turned white as if to signify the atonement of another Yom Kippur was acceptable to the Lord. This annual event happened until 30 CE when the cloth then remained crimson each year to the time of the Temple's destruction. This undoubtedly caused much stir and onsternation among the Jews. This traditional practice is linked to Israel confessing its sins and ceremonially placing this nation's sin upon the Azazel goat. The sin was then removed by this goat's death. Sin was represented by the red color of the cloth (the color of blood). But the cloth remained crimson — that is, Israel's sins were not being pardoned and "made white."

As God told Israel through Isaiah the prophet:

"Come, let us reason together, saith the LORD: though your sins be as scarlet [crimson], they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as [white] wool" (Isaiah 1:18).

The clear indication is that the whole community had lost the Lord's attention in relation to something that occurred in 30 CE The yearly atonement achieved through the typical Yom Kippur observance was not being realized as expected. Atonement apparently was to be gained in some other way. Who or what would provide the atonement for another year?

Concerning the crimson strip—though not mentioned in the Scriptures and long before 30 C.E.—during the 40 years Simon the Righteous was High Priest, a crimson thread which was associated with his person always turned white when he entered the Temple's innermost Holy of Holies. The people noticed this. Also, they noted that "the lot of the LORD" (the white lot) came up for 40 straight years during Simon's priesthood. They noticed that the "lot" picked by the priests after Simon would sometimes be black, and sometimes white, and that the crimson thread would sometimes turn white, and sometimes not. The Jews came to believe that if the crimson thread turned white, that God approved of the Day of Atonement rituals and that Israel could be assured that God forgave their sins. But after 30 CE, the crimson thread never turned white again for 40 years, till the destruction of the Temple and the cessation of all Temple rituals!

What did the Jewish nation do in 30 CE to merit such a change at Yom Kippur? By some accounts, on April 5, 30 CE (i.e., on the 14th of Nisan, the day of the Passover sacrifice) the Messiah, Yeshua, was cut off from Israel, himself put to death as a sacrifice for sin. To this event there is a transference of the atonement now no longer achieved through the two goats as offered at Yom Kippur. Like an innocent Passover lamb, the Messiah was put to death though no fault was found in Him! But unlike Temple sacrifices or the Yom Kippur events (as detailed above) where sin is only covered over for a time, the Messianic sacrifice comes with the promise of forgiveness of sins through grace given by God to those who accept a personal relationship with Messiah. This is essentially a one time event for each person's lifetime and not a continual series of annual observances and animal sacrifices. The mechanism providing forgiveness of sin changed in 30 CE

3) The Miracle of the Temple Doors

The next miracle, which the Jewish authorities acknowledged, was that the Temple doors swung open every night of their own accord. This too occurred for forty years, beginning in 30 CE The leading Jewish authority of that time, Yohanan ben Zakkai, declared that this was a sign of impending doom, that the Temple itself would be destroyed.

The Jerusalem Talmud states:

"Said Rabban Yohanan Ben Zakkai to the Temple, 'O Temple, why do you frighten us? We know that you will end up destroyed. For it has been said, 'Open your doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour your cedars' " (Zechariah 11:1)' (Sota 6:3).

Yohanan Ben Zakkai was the leader of the Jewish community during the time following the destruction of the Temple in 70 CE, when the Jewish government was transferred to Jamnia, some thirty miles west of Jerusalem.

Might the doors have opened to also signify that all may now enter the Temple, even to its innermost holy sections. The evidence supported by the miracles described above suggests the Lord's presence had departed from the Temple. This was no longer just a place for High Priests alone, but the doors swung open for all to enter the Lord's house of worship.

4) The Miracle of the Temple Menorah

The fourth miracle was that the most important lamp of the seven candle-stick Menorah in the Temple went out, and would not shine. Every night for 40 years (over 12,500 nights in a row) the main lamp of the Temple lampstand (menorah) went out of its own accord — no matter what attempts and precautions the priests took to safeguard against this event!

Earnest Martin states:

"In fact, we are told in the Talmud that at dusk the lamps that were unlit in the daytime (the middle four lamps remained unlit, while the two eastern lamps normally stayed lit during the day) were to be re-lit from the flames of the western lamp (which was a lamp that was supposed to stay lit all the time — it was like the 'eternal' flame that we see today in some national monuments) . . .

"This 'western lamp' was to be kept lit at all times. For that reason, the priests kept extra reservoirs of olive oil and other implements in ready supply to make sure that the 'western lamp' (under all circumstances) would stay lit. But what happened in the forty years from the very year Messiah said the physical Temple would be destroyed? Every night for forty years the western lamp went out, and this in spite of the priests each evening preparing in a special way the western lamp so that it would remain constantly burning all night!" (The Significance of the Year CE 30, Ernest Martin, Research Update, April 1994, p.4).

Again, the odds against the lamp continually going out are astronomical. Something out of the ordinary was going on. The "light" of the Menorah—representing contact with God, His Spirit, and His Presence—was now removed. This special demonstration occurred starting with the crucifixion of the Messiah!

It should be clear to any reasonable mind that there is no natural way to explain all these four signs connected with the year 30 CE The only possible explanation has to be supernatural.

After 30 CE, and the death of the Messiah, great trouble and awesome trials began to come upon the Jewish nation. Yeshua Himself foretold it. As He was led away to be crucified, Yeshua warned the women of Jerusalem:

But Jesus, turning to them, said, "Daughters of Jerusalem, do not weep for Me, but weep for yourselves and for your children. For indeed the days are coming in which they will say, 'Blessed are the barren, wombs that never bore, and breasts which never nursed!' Then they will begin `to say to the mountains, "Fall on us!" and to the hills, "Cover us!" ' "For if they do these things in the green wood, what will be done in the dry?" (Luke 23:28-31).

When we take an objective look at the events of 30 CE, who can doubt that it was indeed the true year of the crucifixion and resurrection of the true Messiah God sent to Israel? Who can deny that He is the one and only true Messiah? Who else has fulfilled all the prophecies of the Old Testament — including the amazing prophecy of Daniel 9 and the "70 weeks," coming at the very year predicted for the Messiah to appear?

[Editor's note: A detailed study of Daniel, including the prophecy of 70 weeks appears in Chapter 15 of the Creator's Window. This chapter is available as a PDF file to read online or to download for reading offline. The riddle of the 70 weeks is essentially a time line that leads one to the same conclusion drawn above.]

For additional evidence of the Messiah in the Hebrew Scriptures (a.k.a., the Tanach or the Old Covenant) we suggest a reading of Dr. Arnold Fructenbaum's book 'Messianic Christology,' see our book list for reference. This publication is a wonderful study of the numerous Messianic prophecies that were all fulfilled by Yeshua.

History of Ancient Israel

Major Periods in the History of Ancient Israel

Note: There is significant doubt about the dates for the first three periods.

Name of Period	Approximate Dates	Description
Patriarchal Period or Ancestral Period	perhaps as early as c. 1850-1700 BC but possibly later	This period begins with the travels of Abraham and ends with the Hebrew people in slavery in Egypt.
Mosaic Period	perhaps c. 1250-1200 BC	This period begins with the rise of Moses in Egypt, includes the departure of the Hebrew people from Egypt, and ends with the death of Moses on the border of Canaan.
Period of the Judges	perhaps c. 1200-1020 BC	The period of the judges begins with the conquest/infiltration of the land of Canaan and ends with the naming of Saul as Israel's first king.
The United Kingdom	c. 1020-922 BC	The United Kingdom lasted for a very short time. All Israel was united under Saul, then David, then Solomon. At the death of Solomon the nation divided over the choice of Solomon's successor.
The Divided Kingdom	c. 922-721 BC	On the death of Solomon the nation of Israel split. The northern ten tribes kept the name "Israel" and the southern tribes adopted the name "Judah". These two new nations coexisted until 721 BCE when the Assyrians destroyed the northern kingdom.
The Judean Period	c. 721-587 BC	After the destruction of the northern kingdom, Judah existed without its northern neighbor until it was conquered by the Babylonians in 597 BCE and destroyed in 587.
The Babylonian Exile	c. 587-538 BC	Both in 597 and 587 BCE the Babylonians took Judean captives into exile in Babylon. They remained there until freed by Cyrus of Persia in 538 BCE. Some stayed in Babylon even after Cyrus freed them.
The Persian Period	c. 538-333 BC	From 538 to 333 BCE Judah remained under Persian control. The former nation was now a province of the Persian Empire.
The Hellenistic Period	c. 333-63 BC	In 333 BCE Alexander the Great wrested Judah from Persian control and began an aggressive policy of hellenization (imposition of hellenistic culture). [The people that English speakers call Greeks called themselves the Hellens.] From this time forward until the mid 160's BCE Judah was ruled directly by foreign (usually Syrian) Greek rulers. In the 160's Israel (originally only Judah but later the old northern kingdom as well) won its independence. The Greek influence remained strong, though, even in this period of independence.
The Roman Period	63 BC-135 AS	In 63 BCE the Romans responded to a plea for assistance in a dynastic struggle in Israel and took control of the region. They continued the policies of hellenization begun by Alexander.

Israel developed into a united kingdom under the leadership of King David (c.1000-960 BCE) who consolidated the various tribes under his single rule (having taken over from Israel's first king, Saul, who ruled circa 1020 BCE). David chose the Canaanite city of Jerusalem as his capital and is said to have had the Ark of the Covenant moved there. As the Ark was thought to contain the living presence of God, bringing it to Jerusalem would have made the city both a political and religious center of considerable importance. David intended to build a great temple to house the Ark but that task fell to his son, Solomon (circa 960-920 BCE) whose rule corresponds to the height of Israelite grandeur. Solomon consolidated treaties with neighboring kingdoms such as Tyre to the north, Egypt, Sheba and sponsored building projects which made Jerusalem a great and opulent city (including, of course, the First Temple). The reigns of Saul, David, and Solomon (but especially the latter two) have been traditionally characterized as a `golden age' of unity and prosperity.

The Kingdom of Israel, culturally, seems to have been characterized by a strong belief in a fierce desert god (the same who was claimed to have inspired Moses to lead the Israelites out of Egypt) named Yahweh who was considered the only `true god' and the creator Lord of the Universe. David and Solomon, especially, seem to have used this belief to their benefit in unifying the people but, upon Solomon's death (around 920 BCE) the kingdom split in half, Israel occupying the northern region with a capital at Samaria and the Kingdom of Judah in the south with Jerusalem as capital. The two kingdoms would sometimes ally and sometimes war but would never again achieve the strength and wealth of the kingdom under the rules of David and Solomon. The Kingdom of Judah prospered under the reigns of the kings Omri (c.876-869 or 884-872 BCE) and Ahab (c.876-853 BCE) and, later, Jehu's dynasty (842-746 BCE) according to archaeological evidence and the biblical narrative, but seems often characterized by instability.

The Divided Kingdom, 10th - 6th Century BCE

Unable to achieve a lasting, meaningful alliance with each other, Israel fell to the Neo-Assyrian Empire in 721 BCE and the population was deported (replaced by Assyrian settlements) and, in 587 BCE, the Babylonian King Nebuchadnezzar II defeated Judah, sacked Jerusalem (destroying the temple) and deported the aristocracy, scribes and skilled craftsmen back to Babylon (known as the Babylonian Captivity). Following the sack of Samaria, the destruction of Jerusalem and the Diaspora, Israel ceased to exist until the creation of the modern State of Israel in 1947-1948 CE by the United Nations. This link between the ancient Kingdom of Israel and the modern state of the same name has been hotly contested through the years and continues to remain a contentious subject of debate.

The Samaritans

One other consequence of the Assyrian invasion of Israel involved the settling of Israel by Assyrians. This group settled in the capital of Israel, Samaria, and they took with them Assyrian gods and cultic practices. But the people of the Middle East were above everything else highly superstitious. Even the Hebrews didn't necessarily deny the existence or power of other peoples' gods—just in case. Conquering peoples constantly feared that the local gods would wreak vengeance on them. Therefore, they would adopt the local god or gods into their religion and cultic practices.

Within a short time, the Assyrians in Samaria were worshipping Yahweh as well as their own gods; within a couple centuries, they would be worshipping Yahweh exclusively. Thus was formed the only major schism in the Yahweh religion: the schism between the Jews and the Samaritans. The Samaritans, who were Assyrian and therefore non-Hebrew, adopted almost all of the Hebrew Torah and cultic practices; unlike the Jews, however, they believed that they could sacrifice to God outside of the temple in Jerusalem. The Jews frowned on the Samaritans, denying that a non-Hebrew had any right to be included among the chosen people and angered that the Samaritans would dare to sacrifice to Yahweh outside of Jerusalem. The Samaritan schism played a major role in the rhetoric of Jesus of Nazareth; and there are still Samaritans alive today around the city of Samaria.

The Chronicler's Presentation of the Reigns of David and Solomon

In contrast to 1-2 Samuel and 1-2 Kings, the Chronicler focuses overwhelmingly on the religious significance of the united reign of David and Solomon, principally their joint role in establishing the Davidic covenant and the Jerusalem temple. Little attention is paid to the personal and political dimensions of their rule. This difference of focus largely explains why and how the Chronicler has recast his sources, adding or omitting material, and sometimes reordering the narrative.

The Presentation of David's Reign in 1 Chronicles 11-29	Chronicles passes over David's sins against Uriah and Bathsheba, along with his ensuing family and political troubles.	Cf. 2 Samuel 11-24
	The Chronicler's additions and expansions focus on David's activity for the temple. David's wars acquire materials for the temple. Additions to the census account (2 Samuel 24) explain the choice of the temple site in 1 Chronicles 21.	1 Chron 18:8 , 11 ; 21:27-22:1
	Extensive additions focus on David's preparations for the temple and its personnel. David, as much as Solomon, shaped Israel's traditions of worship in the temple.	1 Chronicles 22-29
The Presentation of Solomon's Reign in 2 Chronicles 1-9	Chronicles omits the account of Solomon's forceful rise to power over his enemies (but cf. 1 Kings 2:46; 2 Chron 1:1).	Cf. 1 Kings 1-2
	Chronicles omits reference to Solomon's delay of temple construction in order to build his palace, as well as details of that building.	Cf. 1 Kings 7:1-12
	Chronicles omits reference to Solomon's foreign wives and his culpability for the division of the kingdom.	Cf. 1 Kings 11
	Chronicles moves the account of Solomon's Egyptian wife, placing it after the temple's dedication.	Cf. 1 Kings 3 ; 2 Chronicles 8
	Chronicles omits many of the details of the temple's construction and furnishings found in 1 Kings 7:13-51, concentrating instead on the temple as the place of God's earthly presence, and focusing on the act of dedication.	2 Chronicles 3-7
	Solomon's prayer of dedication sets a pattern for all other royal prayers. The additions in 2 Chron 7:12-16 highlight the temple as the place of repentance.	1 Kings 8 ; 2 Chronicles 6-7

Dating of Kings, esp. David and Solomon

Note: Almost all OT dates assigned by scholars are approximate; and while many significant dates can be pinpointed within a narrow range of likely dates, others can not be as accurately determined, especially where neither scripture nor external corresponding information provides enough details to adequately tighten the likely date range.

For example, this is the case with dates surrounding the Hebrew kings, especially David and Solomon. Following are references highlighting the dating challenges…

History

With the Babylonian exile, Israel ceased to be an independent nation and became a minor territory in a succession of larger empires. Very little is known about the latter years of Persian domination because the Jewish historian Josephus (c. A.D. 37– 100), our primary source for the intertestamental period, all but ignores them.

With Alexander the Great's acquisition of the Holy Land (332 B.C.), a new and more insidious threat to Israel emerged. Alexander was committed to the creation of a world united by Greek language and culture, a policy followed by his successors. This policy, called Hellenization, had a dramatic impact on the Jews.

At Alexander's death (323 B.C.) the empire he won was divided among his generals. Two of them founded dynasties—the Ptolemies of Egypt and the Seleucids in Syria and Mesopotamia—that would contend for control of the Holy Land for over a century.

The rule of the Ptolemies was considerate of Jewish religious sensitivities, but in 198 B.C. the Seleucids took control and paved the way for one of the most heroic periods in Jewish history.

The early Seleucid years were largely a continuation of the tolerant rule of the Ptolemies, but Antiochus IV Epiphanes (whose title means “God made manifest” and who ruled 175 – 164 B.C.) changed that when he attempted to consolidate his fading empire through a policy of radical Hellenization. While a segment of the Jewish aristocracy had already adopted Greek ways, the majority of Jews were outraged.

Antiochus's atrocities were aimed at the eradication of Jewish religion. He prohibited some of the central elements of Jewish practice, attempted to destroy all copies of the Torah (the Pentateuch) and required offerings to the Greek god Zeus. His crowning outrage was the erection of a statue of Zeus and the sacrificing of a pig in the Jerusalem temple itself.

Opposition to Antiochus was led by Mattathias, an elderly villager from a priestly family, and his five sons: Judas (Maccabeus—probably meaning “hammerer”), Jonathan, Simon, John and Eleazar. Mattathias destroyed a Greek altar established in his village, Modein, and killed Antiochus's emissary. This triggered the Maccabean revolt, a 24-year war (166 – 142 B.C.) that resulted in the independence of Judah until the Romans took control in 63 B.C.

The victory of Mattathias's family was a hollow one, however. With the death of his last son, Simon, the Hasmonean dynasty that they founded soon evolved into an aristocratic, Hellenistic regime sometimes hard to distinguish from that of the Seleucids. During the reign of Simon's son, John Hyrcanus, the orthodox Jews who had supported the Maccabees fell out of favor. With only a few exceptions, the rest of the Hasmoneans supported the Jewish Hellenizers. The Pharisees were actually persecuted by Alexander Janneus (102 – 76 B.C.).

The Hasmonean dynasty ended when, in 63 B.C., an expanding Roman empire intervened in a dynastic clash between the two sons of Janneus, Aristobulus II and Hyrcanus II. Pompey, the general who subdued the East for Rome, took Jerusalem after a three-month siege of the temple area, massacring priests in the performance of their duties and entering the Most Holy Place. This sacrilege began Roman rule in a way that Jews could neither forgive nor forget.

Intertestamental Events Timeline

334-330 B.C.	Alexander the Great (356-323 B.C.) sweeps through Asia Minor and conquers the Persian Empire, including Egypt and Mesopotamia (see notes on Dan 7:3; 7:6; 8:5; 8:8; 8:20-22; 11:3; cf. 1 Macc. 1:1-7). Alexander imposes the Greek language and culture on all the nations he conquers, marking the beginning of the Hellenistic Age (ranging approximately from the death of Alexander the Great in 323 to the establishment of Roman Imperial rule around 30 B.C.). As a result of Alexander's imposition of the Greek language on conquered kingdoms, the entire NT will later be written in Greek, and will be understandable throughout the ancient world.
333	Alexander the Great passes through Palestine (comprised of Judea and Galilee), extending the influence of Greek thought and culture throughout the region and also into the Judaism of the period. (“Palestine” derives from a Latin name the conquering Romans later gave to this province [c. 63 B.C.] on the east coast of the Mediterranean Sea, comprising parts of modern Israel, Jordan, and Egypt.)
323-281	In the absence of legitimate heirs, following Alexander the Great's death in 323 B.C. (cf. 1 Macc. 1:5-9) four of his generals (called the Diadochoi , “successors”) divide the conquered territory of his empire into fourths (which then included most of the known world throughout Europe and Asia Minor; see notes on Dan 7:6; 8:8; 8:20-22; 11:4): (1) Antipater (and later Cassander and then Antigonus I Monophthalmus) ruled in Greece and Macedon; (2) Lysimachus took control in Thrace and much of Asia Minor; (3) Seleucus I Nicator assumed power in Mesopotamia and Persia; and (4) Ptolemy I Lagi Soter became sovereign of Egypt and Palestine.
310*	Zeno of Citium (c. 334-262 B.C.) founds Stoicism in Athens, a philosophy which prizes logic, reason, and indifference toward pleasure and pain alike. Paul later encounters Stoics and Epicureans in Athens (see Acts 17:18).
307*	Epicurus (c. 341-270 B.C.) founds the Garden, an egalitarian community based upon friendship, in Athens (see Acts 17:18). The philosophical system of Epicureans stands somewhat opposite Stoicism in its pursuit of pleasure, especially emphasizing the importance of friendships and the luxurious enjoyment of eating, drinking, and other comforts.
277	By 277 B.C. three Hellenistic kingdoms stabilize out of the four divisions of Alexander the Great's kingdom: (1) the Antigonid dynasty in Macedonia (issuing from Alexander's general Antigonus I Monophthalmus, 382-301, and beginning with his son Demetrius I Poliorcetes in 294/293); (2) the Ptolemaic dynasty in Egypt (issuing from the general Ptolemy I Lagi Soter, 367-283); and (3) the Seleucid dynasty in Syria (issuing from the general Seleucus I Nicator, c. 358-281), the latter which also ruled much of Asia Minor from 312 to 64 (see Daniel 11:4-35 and notes there). Though Judea will later become controlled by the Seleucids in 198 B.C., it is initially under Ptolemaic (Egyptian) rule, with little disturbance.
198	The Seleucids gain control over Judea from the Ptolemies after the battle at Panium (see note on Daniel 11:15-16). They are led in victory by their king, Antiochus III the Great (reigned 223-187 B.C.; see notes on Daniel 11:10; 11:11-12; 11:13; 11:15-16; 11:17-19), the father of Antiochus IV Epiphanes (reigned 175-164/163; see notes on Daniel 8:9-10; 8:23; 8:25; 9:24-27; 11:21-23; 11:24; 11:25-27; 11:29-30; 11:33-35; 11:37-38).
190	Antiochus III the Great and the Seleucids are defeated by the Romans at the Battle of Magnesia (fought on the plains of Lydia, in modern Turkey) and forced to pay an indemnity in 12 annual payments. The Seleucids continue to rule over Judea, however.
176*	The Teacher of Righteousness, the founder of the Qumran community (perhaps the Essenes) which produced many of the so-called Dead Sea Scrolls, becomes active.
174	The Seleucid king Antiochus IV Epiphanes (who reigned from 175 to 164/163 B.C. and was the son of Antiochus III the Great and brother of Seleucus IV Philopator, deposes the Zadokite high priest Onias III (2 Maccabees 3:1-4:6), the son of Simon the Just (cf. Sirah 50:1-21). Onias III, who had functioned as the effective head of state for the Jewish people to that time, was replaced with his brother Jason (2 Macc. 4:7-22; see also note on Daniel 8:9-10). Jason in turn would be supplanted by Menelaus (2 Macc. 4:23-26), who was eventually put to death about 162 B.C. following a 10-year reign (2 Macc. 13:1-8). (“Zadokite” refers to the descendants of Zadok, a high priest during King David's reign. Zadokites held a monopoly on the Jerusalem priesthood from the time of Solomon forward.) Antiochus IV takes on the name “Epiphanes,” meaning “[god] manifest” (cf. 1 Macc. 1:10), however his enemies would call him “Epimanes,” meaning “madman.”
168/167	Antiochus IV Epiphanes, led into the sanctuary by the high priest Menelaus, loots and desecrates the temple in Jerusalem (1 Macc. 1:20-24; 1:37-64; 2 Macc. 5:11-26; 6:2-5; see also notes on Dan 11:28; 11:31-32). On Kislev (Nov.-Dec.) 25, 167 B.C. (1 Maccabees 1:59), an idol devoted to Zeus (Jupiter) was erected in the temple (“the abomination that makes desolate"; cf. Dan 11:31; 12:11) and shortly afterwards sacrifices (likely swine) were offered up on the altar in the "Most Holy Place."

167/166	Mattathias, the father of Judas and his brothers, leads the Maccabean Revolt against Seleucid king Antiochus IV Epiphanes (cf. 1 Macc. 2:1-48 ; see also notes on Dan 11:28; 11:31-32; 11:33-35), dies (1 Macc. 2:49-70). See Rulers Foretold in Daniel 11.
164	Judas "Maccabeus," third son of Mattathias and second leader of the revolt and later the Jewish government during 166/165-161/160 B.C. (1 Macc. 3:1-5:68; 6:18-54; 7:26-9:22; cf. 2 Maccabees 8; 10:14-38; 11:1-15; 12; 13:9-22; 14-15) purifies the temple—an event still remembered by Jews at Hanukkah 1 Macc. 4:36-61; see also notes on Dan 8:12-14; 9:24).
161*	The Zadokite priest Onias IV migrates to Egypt and founds a rival temple at Leontopolis.
152	Jonathan (assumed leadership during 160-143/142 B.C.; cf. 1 Maccabees 9-12), brother of Judas Maccabeus, fifth son of Mattathias, and third leader of the revolt, accepts the high priesthood as a gift from Alexander Epiphanes (Balas) (1 Macc. 10:1-21), the son of Antiochus IV Epiphanes and pretender to the Seleucid throne. Three distinct sects within Judaism become active at this time: the Essenes (or perhaps Qumran community—the sect with which the Dead Sea Scrolls are most closely connected), the Pharisees (see note on John 1:24), and the Sadducees (see note on Matt 3:7). See also Jewish Groups at the Time of the New Testament.
142	Jewish independence is recognized by Seleucid king Demetrius II Nicator (d. 125 B.C.; cf. 1 Macc. 13:31-42). Simon, brother of Judas Maccabeus and second son of Mattathias, is named "high priest and commander and leader" of the Judeans (1 Macc. 13:42; cf. 14:35, 41), effectively establishing the Hasmonean Dynasty. Simon rules 142-135 B.C. (cf. 1 Maccabees 13-16). ("Hasmonean" is derived from the name of Hashman [see Josephus, Jewish Antiquities 12.265], great-grandfather of Mattathias.)
135/134-104	John Hyrcanus I, son of Simon, rules following his father's murder (cf. 1 Macc. 16:11-24).
113	The Hasmonean king John Hyrcanus I destroys the Samaritan temple.
104-103	Judah Aristobulus I, oldest son of John Hyrcanus I, rules.
103-76	Alexander Jannaeus, youngest son of John Hyrcanus I, rules.
88	The Seleucid king Demetrius III Eukairos (son of Antiochus VIII Grypus) is invited by the opponents of Alexander Jannaeus to invade Palestine.
76-67	Salome Alexandra, wife of Alexander Jannaeus, rules.
73-71	Spartacus, a gladiator-slave, leads an ultimately unsuccessful slave revolt (known as the Third Servile War) against the Roman Republic.
67	Civil war breaks out in Judea between supporters of Hyrcanus II and Aristobulus II, Hasmonean brothers. Aristobulus II, older son of Alexander Jannaeus, rules from 67 to 63 B.C. Hyrcanus II, younger son of Alexander Jannaeus, rules from 63 to 40 B.C. Herod the Great would eventually marry into the Hasmonean Dynasty through his union with the granddaughter of Aristobulus II, Mariamne I.
64	Syria becomes a Roman province, effectively establishing Roman rule on Palestine's northern boundaries.
63	Aemelius Scaurus leads Pompey's armies into Palestine, leading to Roman control over Palestine and thus marking the definitive end of Jewish political independence.
47	The Library of Alexandria is burned. Once the largest library in the world, probably containing half a million scrolls or volumes, it suffers the loss of many primary sources of ancient Greek literary texts, as well as translations or adaptations of important works written in other languages. According to the Letter of Aristeas, the Greek translation of the OT called the Septuagint (LXX) was begun for the needs of this library. No works housed in this once great library survived antiquity.
44 (March 15)	Julius Caesar is murdered.
43-40	Parthian invasion and interregnum: Phasael, Herod's brother and tetrarch of Judea ("tetrarch" is a ruler of one of four divisions of a Roman country or province), is killed when the last Hasmonean, Antigonus, the son of Aristobulus II and nephew of Hyrcanus II, gains the support of the Parthians to the east and invades Judea.
40-37	Mattathias Antigonus, son of Aristobulus II, rules from Jerusalem.
40	The Roman Senate declares Herod the Great "King of the Jews," giving him vassal rulership over Palestine (comprised of the provinces Judea and Galilee). His rule does not truly begin until 37 B.C., however, when he is able to recapture Jerusalem from Antigonus.
37-4	Herod the Great rules from 37 to 4 B.C. and is the "legitimate" successor to the Hasmonean Dynasty through his marriage to Mariamne I, granddaughter of both Aristobulus II and Hyrcanus II (her parents were first cousins). Herod recaptures Jerusalem from Antigonus and the Parthians in 37 B.C. through the help of Roman forces, to whom he had fled for help three years earlier.

37-31	Herod the Great fortifies Masada, a mountaintop fortress in southeast Israel on the southwest shore of the Dead Sea, as a refuge in case of revolt. (Masada would be the site of the last stand of the Zealot Jewish community against the Romans during the revolt of A.D. 66-73. After a two-year siege, the Zealots chose to commit mass suicide rather than surrender to the Romans.)
31	Octavian (later called Caesar Augustus) defeats Antony and Cleopatra in the Battle of Actium, effectively consolidating his de facto power as the sole ruler of the Roman Empire. His reign lasted until his death in A.D. 14, with Tiberius assuming power after him.
30	Egypt becomes a Roman province.
20/19	Herod the Great begins rebuilding the temple proper in Jerusalem.
5*	Jesus of Nazareth is born within the province of Judea in the town of Bethlehem during the final years of the reign of Herod the Great (cf. notes on Matt 2:1; Luke 1:5-7; 2:2).
4	Herod the Great dies, and his kingdom is divided between his three surviving sons: (1) Herod Archelaus (“Herod the Ethnarch”) became ethnarch of Judea, Samaria, and Idumea (or Edom; ruled 4 B.C. - A.D. 6; “ethnarch” refers to ruler of a people under the Roman Empire); (2) Herod Antipas became tetrarch of Galilee and Perea (ruled 4 B.C. - A.D. 39); and (3) Herod Philip II became tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis (ruled 4 B.C. - A.D. 34).

History from Moses to Alexander the Great

BC 1445 Exodus/10 Plagues/Law Given
God raised up Moses to deliver the people from Egypt and through 10 plagues demonstrates his power and makes a name for himself. The last plague is the execution of the first born unless the house had the blood of a lamb (or goat) on their door posts. The Israelites were expelled after this last plague and made it through the Red Sea and then eventually to the Mountain of Sinai where God gave them the covenant.

BC 1405 Conquest of Canaan
Israel spent 40 years in the wilderness because when they reached the promised land, they refused to enter it. Now under Joshua, the successor of Moses, the people conquer the east side of the Jordan and then make their way into the land via Jericho. This is the first time Israel actually possesses the land promised to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

BC 1391-1050 Judges
The period of the Judges covers a few hundred years during which a cycle repeated itself over and again. (1) The people become oppressed by a foreign nation and call out to God in their despair. (2) God raises a Judge or Deliverer to obtain military victory. (3) The people become complacent and "everyone does what is right in his own eyes" which causes God's protection to be forfeited.

BC 1050-930 United Kingdom
The first king of Israel was from the tribe of Benjamin, called Saul. The kingdom was taken from him and given to David of the tribe of Judah (though David did not rise to the throne until Saul died in battle). Then David's son, Solomon was anointed above his brothers by David to be king over Israel. Each of these first three kings reigned for 40 years. This is called the "Golden Age" because during it Israel enjoyed peace, prosperity, and they worshiped God.

BC 966 First Temple Built
Shortly after the Law was given (BC 1445) Moses was given instruction on building the tabernacle (a tent meticulously designed by God to represent his presence among the people). The center piece of the tabernacle was the Ark of the Covenant containing the tablets of the Ten Commandments and some other items. David wanted to build a "house" for God but was refused because he was a man of war. Solomon used the materials David had laid up for the construction of the temple and dedicated it sacrificing thousands of animals. Then the glory of God visibly came into the temple.

BC 930 Kingdom Splits
Rehoboam, Solomon's son, does not act wisely and instead of reaching out to the northern part of the kingdom alienates them. This causes a rift between the north and the south. Jeroboam is crowned king of the northern ten tribes (called hereafter Israel) and Rehoboam retains control (barely) of the southern two tribes (called hereafter Judah).

BC 930-721 Northern Kingdom of Israel
Jeroboam was the first king (the son of Nebat) and his first acts involved making two golden calves. One was to be installed in the south and one in the north. He appointed a new priesthood to offer sacrifices. The new capital was Samaria. The kings were not descended through one family line and there were often bloody assassinations to gain the throne. The last king was Hoshea the son of Elah. The Assyrians conquered Israel, deported its inhabitants and resettled other people in Samaria (later dubbed the Samaritans).

BC 930-586 Southern Kingdom of Judah
Under David's grandson, Rehoboam the kingdom split but God was merciful to the house of David and providentially saw to it that David's family line continued throughout all the kings of Judah. Jerusalem remained the capital. Hezekiah miraculously survived the vicious attack of Assyria when God sent two angels to defeat Sennacherib's army. The last kings of Judah were Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah. At this point, the Babylonian empire conquered Jerusalem three times, the last of which resulted in the cities complete destruction.
BC 911-612 Assyrian Empire

Historians mark the beginning of the Assyrian empire with the accession of Adad-Nirari II to the throne. Before this Assyria existed but was not very powerful. When Tiglath-Pileser III (also known as Pulu) ascended to the throne, he defeated Babylonia, the Medes, Hittites, Syria, and Phoenicia. He occupied Philistia in BC 738 and subjected Israel to tribute. In BC 727 Tiglath-Pileser III's was succeeded by Shalmaneser V who died in BC 722 while laying siege to Samaria. Sargon II seized the throne and finished off Samaria and carried off 27,000 people into captivity in BC 721. Under Sennacherib (BC 705-681) an unsuccessful attack was made against Jerusalem and her king, Hezekiah. It really ended in BC 612 when the capital of Nineveh was defeated by the Babylonians.

BC 612-539 Babylonian Empire
Nabopolassar successfully rebelled and with the help of the Medes defeated Nineveh (the capital of Assyria) in BC 612. Under Nebuchadnezzar's 43 year reign Babylon was at the peak of its strength. He brought Judah under his control and imposed taxes on them. Judah rebelled, was conquered, then rebelled again, and this time it was destroyed and all the citizens were deported. Nebuchadnezzar was succeeded by Nabonidus who eventually was defeated by Cyrus the king of the Medo-Persian Empire in BC 539 at Opis. Cyrus entered the city of Babylon without fighting.

BC 605 Jerusalem Defeated (First Exile)
During the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim (king of Judah), Jerusalem was defeated and the some of the vessels from the house of God were brought by Nebuchadnezzar into Shinar (another name for Babylon) (Daniel 1:1-2). Daniel, Mishael, Hananiah, Azariah and others who showed promise are brought to Babylon and trained to be able to serve in the royal court there (Daniel 1:3-6). Judah was made to pay taxes to Babylon but soon stopped in defiance to their foreign conquerors.

BC 597 Jerusalem Defeated Again (Second Exile)
In the eighth year of king Jehoiachin, Nebuchadnezzar again defeated Jerusalem and carried away the rest of the treasures of the temple, and the treasures of the king's house, and led away into captivity all the captains, the warriors, the craftsman, and the smiths (2nd Kings 24:8-16). Only the poorest people were left in the land. During the siege, Jehoiachin surrendered and went out to Nebuchadnezzar and was taken back to Babylon. Jehoiachin's uncle, Mattaniah (also called Zedekiah), was put in charge by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kings 24:17). Ezekiel may have been taken during this time. He prophesied extensively about the coming destruction of Jerusalem while living in Babylonia near the river Chebar (Ezekiel 1:1-3).

BC 586 Jerusalem Destroyed/Temple Destroyed (Third Exile)
Jerusalem again rebelled and the army of Babylon once again defeated it in the eleventh year of King Zedekiah (2nd Kings 25:1-2). Zedekiah fled but was captured; both of his sons were slaughtered before his eyes and then his eyes were put out and he was brought in bronze fetters to Babylon where he died. The temple was burned to the ground to such a degree that when it was rebuilt even a new foundation had to be made. The city walls were completely destroyed along with the prominent houses and the gates to the city (2nd Kings 25:1-21). Jeremiah was in the city when this happened and survived.

BC 586-516 Seventy Year Captivity
The land was to lie dormant for seventy years to make up for the Sabbaths that it had not enjoyed (the Israelites were supposed to rest from farming every seventh year, but they did not). There are multiple ways to date this event. Some start in 605 (or 606) and end it in 535 (or 536). Here I have indicated the time from when the temple was destroyed (586) to when it was finally rebuilt (516). However one counts it, the people were able to survive in the foreign regions in which they were transplanted, just as God had prophesied through Jeremiah (Jeremiah 25.1-14). Daniel's prayer undoubtedly ties in with the end of the captivity (Daniel 9).

BC 539-333 Achaemenid Empire (also called Medo-Persia)
Cyrus the Great (also called Cyrus II of Persia) successfully defeated the Median Empire, the Lydian Empire, and the Babylonian Empire between BC 559 and 539. His son, Cambyses II conquered Egypt. Cyrus was politically shrewd, modeling himself as the "savior" of conquered nations. To reinforce this image, he instituted policies of religious freedom, and abolished slavery in the newly acquired cities. Other kings in this empire include Darius I, Xerxes I (Ahasuerus), Artaxerxes I, etc. In BC 334 during the reign of Darius III, Alexander the Great successfully established the Greeks as the new empire.

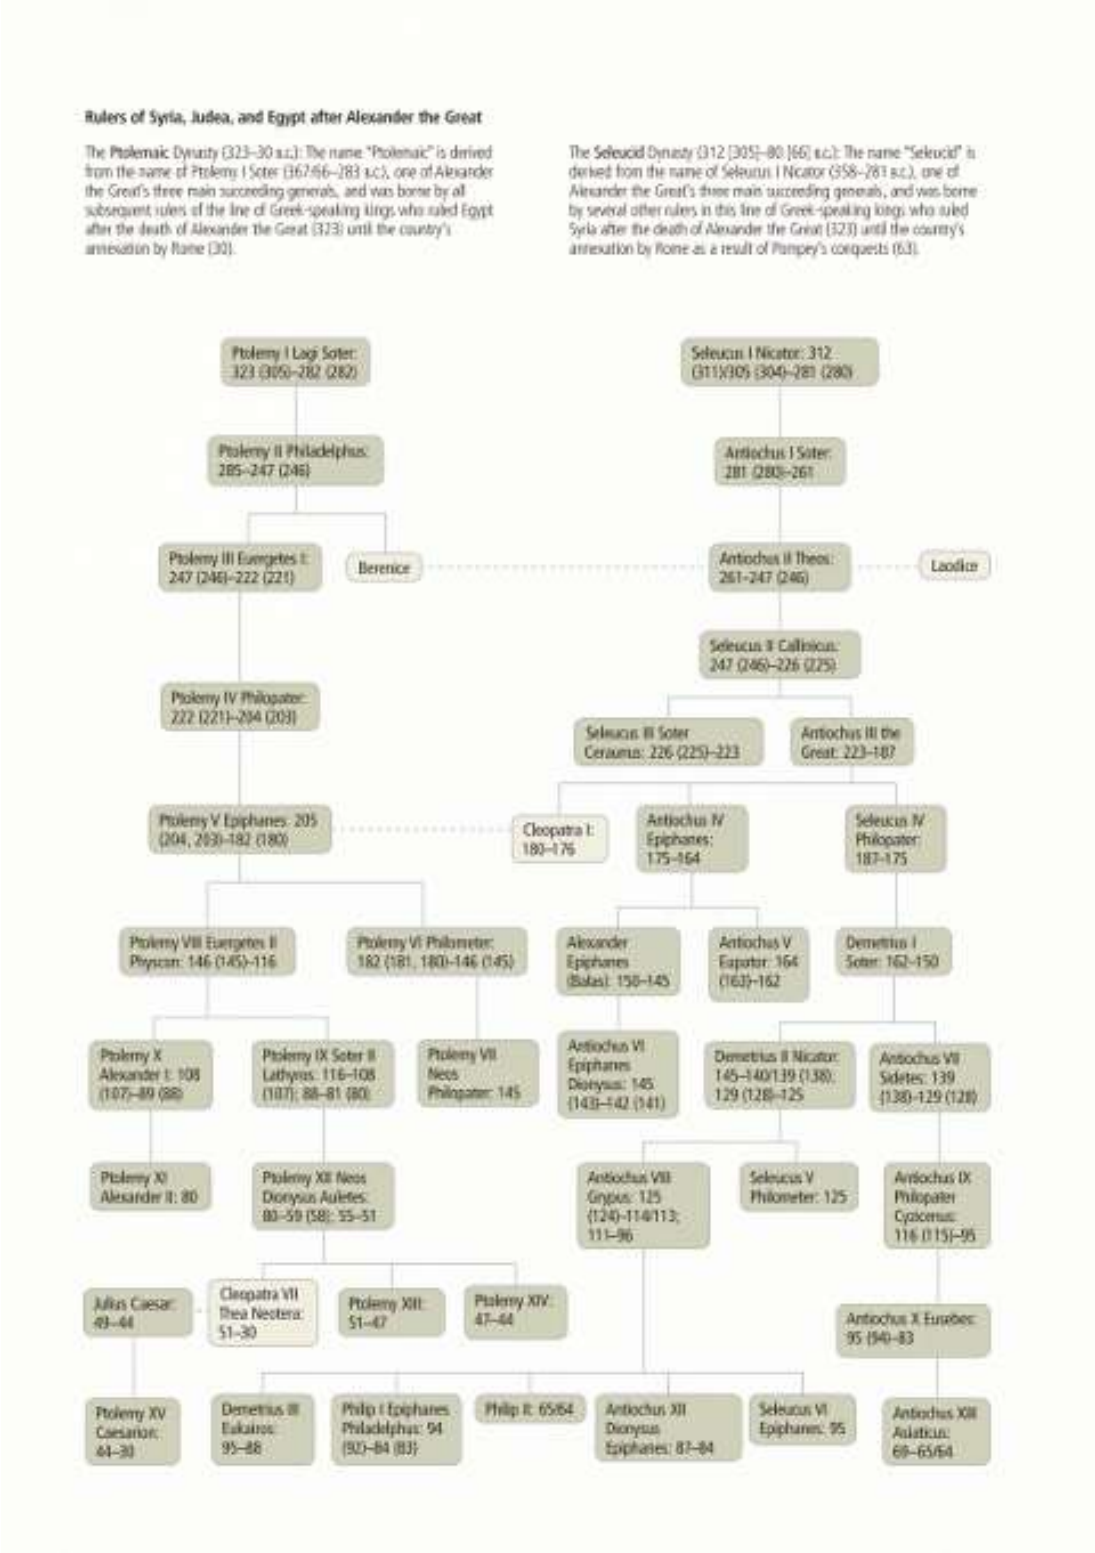
BC 538 Cyrus Issues Decree to Return to Judea
In the fist year that Cyrus was established as the king of the empire he issued a decree that the Jews living throughout his empire could return to Judah and rebuild the temple (Ezra 1.1-4). Zerubbabel & Joshua lead 49,897 people back to Jerusalem (Ezra 2.2, 64-65) and begin work on the temple in BC 536. Zerubbabel was the Persian approved governor and Joshua was the highpriest. Prophets Haggai and Zechariah urged the building of temple through their prophecies.

BC 516 Second Temple Built
The building of the temple was begun in BC 536 but stopped some time before BC 529. The people of the surrounding areas (outside of Judah) discouraged the people of Judah, and frightened them from building, and hired counselors against them to frustrate their work until Darius I became king (Ezra 4.4-5).Then God moved through the prophets Zechariah and Haggai to urge the work to begin again (without permission from the authorities) in BC 520. It was finally completed and dedicated in BC 516.

BC 484-475 Events of Queen Esther
In BC 484 King Ahasuerus (Xerxes I) gave a banquet and his queen (Vashti) publicly disobeyed him. The king sought after a new queen and chose Esther (Hadassah). During this time a man named Haman (who was the right hand man of the king) gained much power and wanted to annihilate the Jews because Mordecai (Esther's Uncle) would not bow to Haman as he passed. In a last minute effort to defend her people Esther succeeds in gaining Xerxes I's approval to reverse Haman's plot and the Jews throughout the Persian Empire were saved. The festival of Purim is celebrated annually (up to this day) as commemoration of this deliverance.

BC 457 Ezra Arrives in Jerusalem
In the seventh year of King Artaxerxes I (BC 464-425), Ezra the scribe was sent to establish Mosaic Law in Jerusalem. His mission was to teach the people how to live. He was given a good deal of silver and gold to get the sacrificial system going. BC 445 Nehemiah Arrives in Jerusalem and Builds Wall Governor Nehemiah was commissioned by Artaxerxes I to rebuild the wall in Jerusalem (Nehemiah 2.1). The work began and it was strongly opposed by Sanballat the Horonite, Tobiah the Ammonite official, and Geshem the Arab (Nehemiah 2.10, 19). Even so, the workers continued with incredible speed holding a weapon in one hand a tool in the other. The wall was finished in 52 days (Nehemiah 6.15).

BC 333 Alexander the Great's Empire
Alexander (son of Philip of Macedon) was king from BC 336 to 323 being only 20 years old. He was one of the most successful military commanders in history, and was undefeated in battle. He defeated Darius III at the Battle of Issus in BC 333. By the time of his death (at only 33 years old), he had conquered most of the world known to the ancient Greeks pressing east into India. In the same year, Alexander took Jerusalem and now Judea was a Greek province instead of a Persian one. He founded Alexandria in Egypt (along with a number of other Alexandrias) which became a major city of trade, education, and culture. In BC 331, Alexander was welcomed as a liberator in Egypt and was pronounced the son of Zeus by Egyptian priests of the god Amun.



From then on, Alexander referred to the god Zeus-Ammon as his true father. Alexander was a brilliant and fearless military strategist (he was undefeated in battle) but was also well educated in general, having Aristotle as his personal tutor. Alexander wasn't just interested in conquering the world and submitting it to Greek rule; he wanted to make the world like Greece, civilizing it. He spread the Greek language, culture, religion, and philosophy to the lands he conquered and encouraged intermarriage. By the time of Jesus Greek was the common international language of the day. Alexander died in BC 323 of unknown causes (speculations include binge drinking, malaria, West Nile virus, typhoid, and viral encephalitis).

Rulers of Syria, Judea, and Egypt after Alexander the Great

The Ptolemaic Dynasty (323-30 B.C.): The name “Ptolemaic” is derived from the name of Ptolemy I Soter (367/66-283 B.C.), one of Alexander the Great's three main succeeding generals, and was borne by all subsequent rulers of the line of Greek-speaking kings who ruled Egypt after the death of Alexander the Great (323) until the country's annexation by Rome (30).

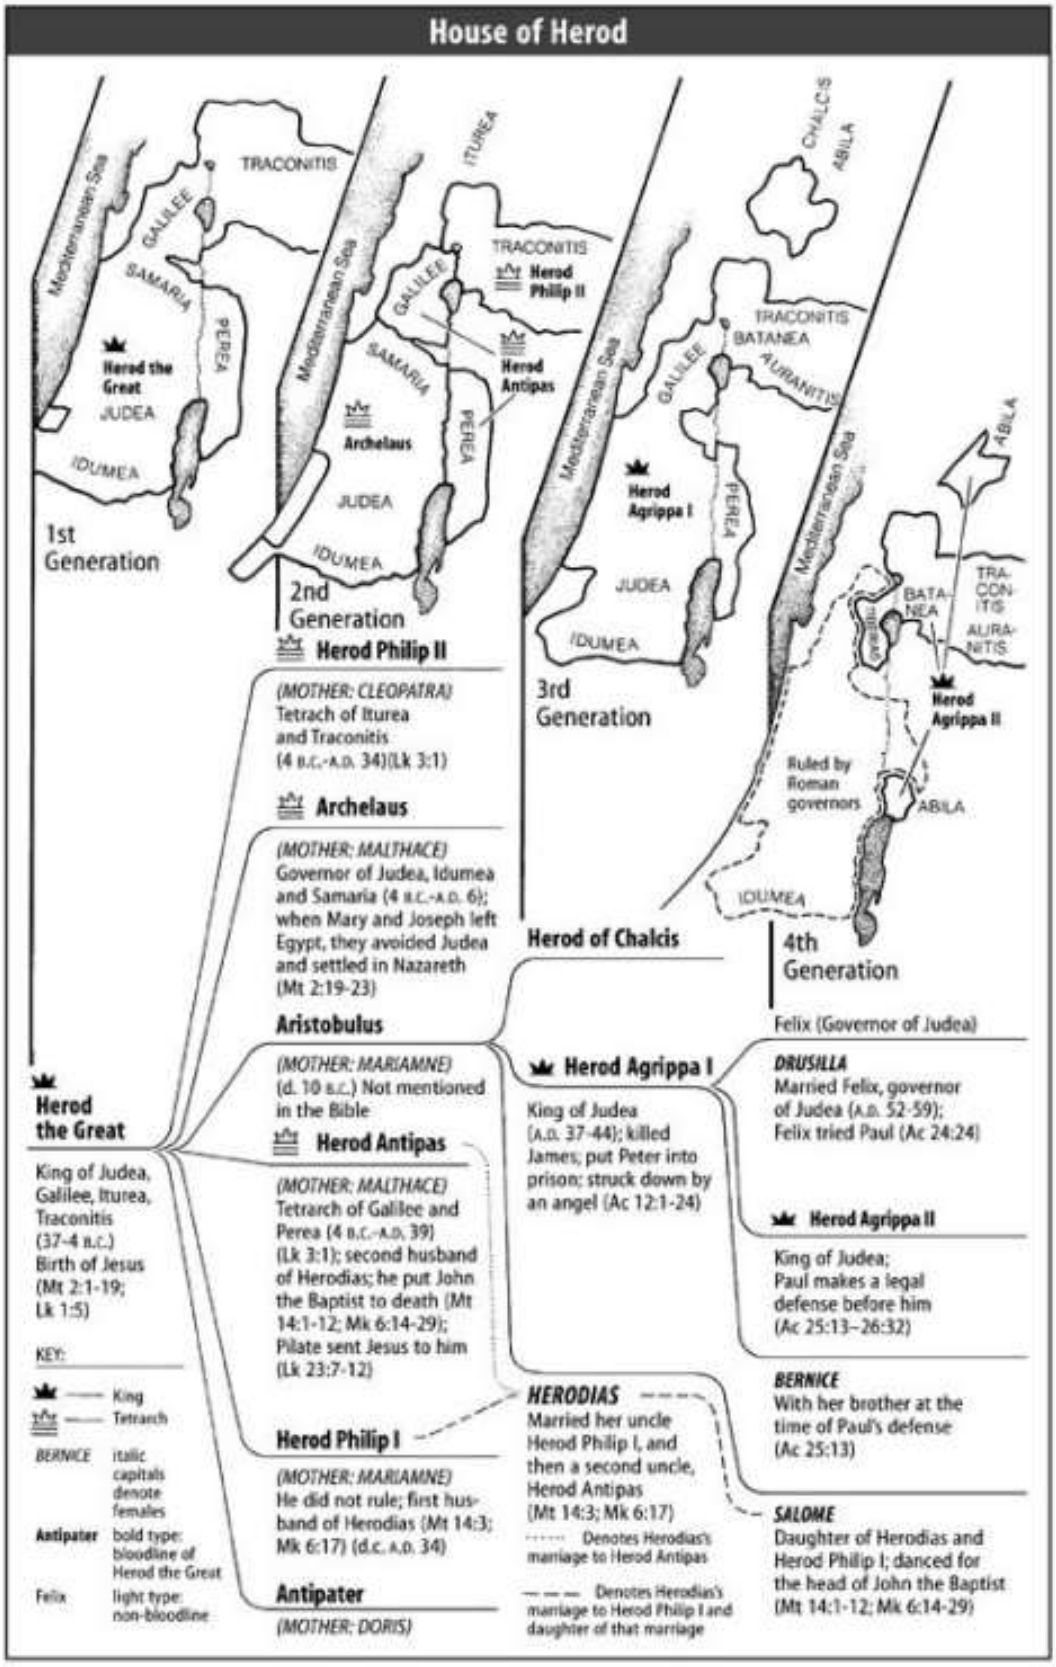
Rulers of Judea/Palestine after the Maccabean Revolt



The Hasmonean (Maccabean) Dynasty (168-63 [37] B.C.): The name “Hasmonean” is now generally thought to derive from a place name, either Heshmon or Hashmonah. However, Josephus says that the name of Hashman (Gk. Asamōnaios; see Josephus, Jewish Antiquities 12.265) belonged to the great-grandfather of Mattathias, suggesting that this is the true derivation of “Hasmonean.” Mattathias was the father of five sons who were (in order): John (surnamed Gaddi), Simon (called Thassi), Judas (called Maccabeus), Eleazar (called Avaran), and Jonathan (called Apphus) (see 1 Macc. 2:1-5). Mattathias initiated the Maccabean Revolt in c. 167 B.C.

The Jews revolted against the Romans in A.D. 66. Before the overthrow of the city and temple in A.D. 70, Jerusalem Christians fled to the Decapolis city of Pella (probably in response to Jesus' warning and instruction, Matt 24:15-16; Mark 13:14; Luke 21:20-24; cf. 19:43). Afterward, Jewish Christian activity during the first century in Jerusalem was limited, but seems to have continued in Galilee.

Roman victory over this Jewish revolt brought “The Time between the Testaments” to its end. The third era of Hebrew history, Rabbinic Judaism, began about A.D. 90, under Roman rule, and continues to this day. (See the article on The Bible and Contemporary Judaism.)

From the second century on, Jerusalem was a Gentile city, and Christianity became largely a Gentile movement.

Pontius Pilate, Roman Prefect (26 C.E. -36 C.E.)

Pilate Washing Hands

Pilot by Giotto

Pontius Pilate was the Roman prefect (governor) of Judea, a subprovince of Syria, who ordered the crucifixion of Jesus.

As prefect, Pilate commanded Roman military units, authorized construction projects, arranged for the collection of imperial taxes, and decided civil and criminal cases.

During his ten-year tenure as prefect, Pilate had numerous confrontations with his Jewish subjects. According to Jewish historian Josephus, Pilate's decision to bring into the holy city of Jerusalem "by night and under cover effigies of Caesar" outraged Jews who considered the images idolatrous. Jews carried their protest to Pilate's base in Caesaria. Pilate threatened the protesters with death, but when they appeared willing to accept martyrdom he relented and removed the offending images. Again according to Josephus, Pilate provoked another outcry from his Jewish subjects when he used Temple funds to build an aqueduct. It seems likely that at the time of the trial of Jesus, civil unrest had again broken out in Jerusalem.

Pilate's lack of concern for Jewish sensibilities was accompanied, according to Philo writing in 41 C.E, by corruption and brutality. Philo wrote that Pilate's tenure was associated with "briberies, insults, robberies, outrages, wanton injustices, constantly repeated executions without trial, and ceaseless and grievous cruelty." Philo may have overstated the case, but there is little to suggest that Pilate would have any serious reservations about executing a Jewish rabble-rouser such as Jesus.

Although Pilate spent most of his time in the coastal town of Caesaria, he traveled to Jerusalem for important Jewish festivals. While in Jerusalem, he stayed in the praetorium, which--there is a debate about this--was either a former palace of Herod the Great or a fortress located at the northwest corner of the Temple Mount. (Josephus reported that Pilate resided at the palace.)

… It is clear that prefects had a variety of options available for dealing with a potential source of trouble such as Jesus. These options included flogging, sending the matter back to the Sanhedrin, or referring the case to Herod Antipas, ruler of Galilee.

Given what is known about Pilate's concern with crowd control, it is hard to imagine that he would not have willingly acceded to a request from high Jewish officials to deal harshly with anyone who proclaimed himself "King of the Jews." Pilate undoubtedly knew that past messianic claims had led to civil unrest. It seems likely that he would have been eager to end the potential threat to the existing order presented by the subversive theology of Jesus. The form of execution used--crucifixion-- establishes that Jesus was condemned as a violator of Roman, not Jewish, law.

Pilate's repeated difficulties with his Jewish subjects was the apparent cause of his removal from office in 36 C.E. by Syrian governor Vitellius. Following his removal from office, Pilate was ordered to Rome to face complaints of excessive cruelty. He was exiled in Vienne, France.

Religious Contribution -- Jews, Romans, Greeks

The Jews made an important religious contribution to preparing the world for Christ by establishing synagogues throughout the Mediterranean area. Usually considered to have originated among Jewish exiles in Babylonia during the Exile, synagogues later proliferated wherever Jews lived in substantial numbers. Jewish districts existed in all the major cities of the Roman Empire at the time of Christ, with possibly 150 synagogues scattered across the empire early in the first century. Whatever the number, these institutions served as lighthouses of monotheism in a polytheistic world. Moreover, they stood for high ethical standards in a world without moral absolutes. And they usually possessed the Scriptures in Greek rather than Hebrew, in a translation known as the Septuagint, produced in Alexandria, Egypt, between 250 and 150 B.C.

As a result, many Gentile seekers after truth became “God-fearers” or “proselytes" to the Hebrew faith and later to Christianity. Hints of their number and their receptivity to the Gospel appear in the New Testament. Some came to Jerusalem for the great feast of Pentecost (Acts 2:10). One rose to a position of leadership in the church at Antioch of Syria (Acts 6:5). An Ethiopian eunuch, highly placed in the court of his land, had also heard about the Hebrews' God and eagerly responded to the gospel (Acts 8:26-39). Numerous proselytes seem to have embraced the gospel at Antioch of Pisidia (Acts 13:43), and a “great multitude” of proselytes or “God-fearing Greeks” at Thessalonica believed in Christ and became members of the church there (Acts 17:4).

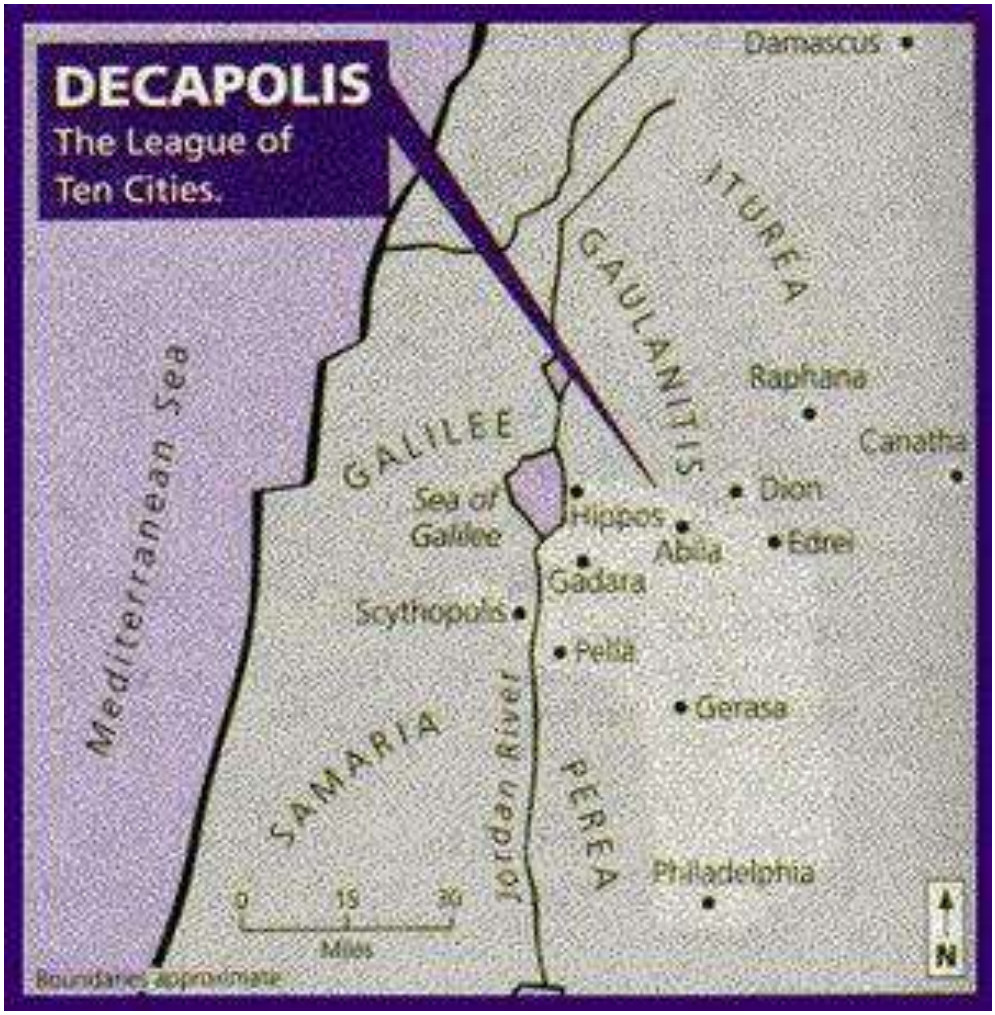
A Roman milestone that stood along a major Roman highway at Iconium in Asia Minor. The marker told the traveler the distance to various cities along the highway.

Augustus brought peace and order to the Roman Empire and launched the Pax Romana (the Roman Peace).

The Jewish expectation of a Messiah also prepared the way for the coming of Christ.

The Old Testament is shot through with the anticipation of a Messiah who would deliver God's people Israel. The Scriptures present Him as Moses' Prophet “like unto me,” Isaiah's “suffering Servant,” Jeremiah's “Branch,” Daniel's “Son of Man,” and as the coming of God Himself to deliver His people.

During the later intertestamental period, after Israel fell under the domination of Rome, the Jewish community interpreted the setting up of Messiah's kingdom in largely political terms. Even Christ's disciples had a hard time conceiving of Jesus' kingdom as a spiritual one. James and John and their mother thought of it as a literal or political entity soon to occur and one in which they might sit on His right hand and His left (Mt 20:20-22; Mk 10:35-39).



Yet one more way in which Judaism prepared for the coming of Christ involved a concern for salvation. The Law of Moses was doing its work. All the Law could really do was condemn. More and more it became evident that men and women could not live up to the standards of God. They became increasingly impressed with their own sinfulness. The Law had indeed become a tutor or pedagogue to lead them to Christ (Ga 3:24-25). As is clear from the New Testament, nothing in official Judaism—that of the Sadducees, Pharisees, or scribes—brought heart satisfaction. That created an openness to a new way, the way of God's grace through faith in Christ.

How Many Jews in Jesus' Day?

Abba Eban concludes that during the first century some three million Jews lived in Palestine, four million in the Roman Empire outside Palestine, and one million in Babylonia, for a total of possibly eight million. In the eastern part of the empire Jews constituted about twenty percent of the population, and in the west about ten percent. All major cities contained a significant number of them. In Alexandria, for example, at least 40 percent of the population was Jewish. * Eban makes the claim that “at no time in history, before or since, have Jews formed so large a part of the known population of the civilized Occidental world.” *

Decapolis

Although God primarily used the Jews in religious preparation for the coming of Christ, and though the Son of God became incarnate as a Jew, the Romans and Greeks also made religious preparations for His coming. The Romans did this by their conquests. In defeating various peoples they contributed to a loss of faith in their gods, who were perceived as unable to protect them. Thus the Romans, unwittingly, helped to create a spiritual vacuum.

The Greeks contributed the speculations of their philosophers. These philosophers generally undermined the older polytheistic religions by their skepticism, but failed to provide a satisfactory alternative. Positively, Plato and his followers taught that reality existed not in this present temporal world of the senses but in the world of the spirit, where the highest ideals of the good, the beautiful and the true exist. Some philosophers concluded that behind all the multiplicity of gods there must be a monotheistic being. Zeno and the Stoics developed a high ethic that in many ways approached the New Testament ethic.

So philosophers generally repudiated the old polytheistic cults. Some were discovering a monotheistic being behind the welter of gods that people worshiped. Others taught the immortality of the soul. Yet others were developing elevated ethical systems. And some, such as Epicurus and Zeno (the Stoics), sought a more personal relationship to God, or Being, in the universe. Each in their way both reflected and helped to create a hunger for a personal relationship with a God who could provide eternal life and inner strength to live out an ethic that would embrace all human relationships.

Herod's kingdom at Jesus' birth

All this preparation came together in a meaningful way at the birth of Christ. History, it seems, was ripe for the coming of Christ and His birth in Bethlehem. The apostle Paul declared, “When the fullness of the time had come,” or, “When the right time finally came,” “God sent forth His Son, born of a woman” (Ga 4:4). Not only did Paul speak by inspiration, but, living in that time, he understood from experience, as we cannot fully, how everything fit together to provide a proper context, or “right time,” or “fullness of time,” for Christ to be born. Jesus Christ made the impact He did because to some degree the world was ready for Him and what He had to offer.

The Land

Of course the physical landscape of Palestine during the Roman period remained essentially as it had been for millennia. Yet the climate had changed because of the cutting down of forests and of olive trees, especially around Jerusalem, during the First and Second Jewish Revolts. And new studies have shown that the climate of the whole Mediterranean basin was colder and more humid during the Roman period (beginning about 300 B.C.) than today. The level of the Dead Sea was many feet higher then, and southern Judea and the Negev produced myrrh, frankincense, and quality wines under Nabatean cultivation. In fact, the whole eastern end of the Mediterranean and North Africa were much more agriculturally productive during the height of the Roman Empire than before that time and currently. * The political landscape changed considerably under the Romans as well.

Under Pompey

With Pompey's conquest (63 B.C.), completed by Gabinius, who was proconsul of Syria 57–55 B.C. , Rome divided Palestine into numerous units. Pompey freed the Greek cities (e.g., Gaza, Joppa) that had been controlled by Jews since the days of John Hyrcanus (135–104) and made them autonomous enclaves under the supervision of the Roman proconsul in Syria. Most of those east of the Jordan he joined in a new “League of Ten Cities” or the Decapolis (Mt 4:25; Mk 5:20; 7:31). Some of the better known cities of this group were Philadelphia (Amman), Gerasa (Jerash), Pella, Scythopolis (Beth Shan), and Gadara. Samaria became independent, while Judea, Perea, and Galilee were ruled by the Jews (also under the supervision of the Roman proconsul in Syria). The government of the Jewish territories is described in the next section.

Under Herod the Great

During the Roman civil wars Antipater, father of Herod the Great, won the favor of Julius Caesar and became the actual ruler of Palestine. He appointed his young son Herod to be governor of Galilee. When Antipater was murdered in 43 B.C. , Herod and his brother Phasael were appointed rulers over all Judea. The subsequent invasion of the Parthians (40 B.C.) is a subject of later discussion. Herod fled to Rome, where Octavian and Mark Antony persuaded the Senate to appoint him king of the Jews, giving him Judea, Idumea, Perea, and Samaria. But when Herod went to Palestine, he had to fight to take the granted territory. By 37 B.C. he was successful in conquering Judea, Idumea, Perea, Samaria, Galilee, and the port of Joppa.

After Augustus became master of the Roman world (31 B.C.), he confirmed Herod in his rule of the territories he now controlled and gave him several cities in the coastal plain. Later he added the Golan (Gaulanitis) and Panias (the area of Caesarea Philippi) and gave him the task of pacifying the region to the east of Gaulanitis. So Herod's kingdom at its height included almost all the territory between the Dead Sea and the Jordan rift and the Mediterranean, and nearly all the east bank of the Jordan as well.

Under Herod's Sons

After Herod died (4 B.C.), Augustus divided his kingdom among his three living sons, as the dead king had wished. Archelaus received Judea, Idumea, and Samaria. Herod Antipas got Galilee and Perea. Philip, the area east and northeast of the Sea of Galilee. Herod's sister, Salome, won the cities of Azotus and Jamnia on the Mediterranean and Pasaelis in the Jordan Valley.

Under Kings and Procurators

Archelaus proved to be a dismal failure in his rule. The Romans banished him in A.D. 6 and handed his lands over to a Roman procurator. Herod Antipas continued to rule until A.D. 39, when he fell out of favor with the emperor Caligula. Philip died a natural death in A.D. 34.

Caligula granted the lands of Philip to Agrippa I in 37, and of Antipas in A.D. 39. Then in A.D. 41 the emperor Claudius gave Agrippa the territory that Archelaus had ruled. Thus, from A.D. 41 to 44 he controlled almost all of the kingdom of Herod the Great. When Agrippa died in A.D. 44 (Acts 12), the Romans decided to return to the procurators lands they had controlled earlier (Idumea, Judea, Perea, Samaria), plus Galilee. Agrippa II ruled the tetrarchy of Philip, A.D. 50–c. 100 (cf. Acts 25-26).

Government

End of the Hasmoneans

The reign of Queen Salome Alexandra (76–67 B.C.) was a time of quiet before the storm. As a woman she could not serve as high priest and so appointed her son Hyrcanus to that post. In that position he supervised the Sanhedrin and controlled the domestic policy of the kingdom. She kept her hand on foreign affairs and put her younger son Aristobulus in charge of the army. She sent him off to take Damascus, but he failed to add that region to the Hasmonean state.

The Parthian Kingdom, controlling the area of Persia in the east, posed a threat to the Romans in the days of Herod and greatly complicated Roman affairs.

After Salome's death, her two sons engaged in a fratricidal conflict for control of the kingdom. Finally, both appealed to the Roman general Pompey, who was then fighting in the East, for his support. This appeal gave Rome an excuse to interfere in Palestine, though it was just a matter of time before she would have done so anyway.

The complicated story of what happened with Pompey's involvement is beyond our present purposes. It is enough to say that Pompey confirmed Hyrcanus as high priest, defeated Aristobulus by force of arms in the Temple Mount and carried him in chains to Rome, and added Palestine to the Roman domains in 63 B.C. Ominously, the Idumean Antipater, father of Herod the Great, now held the real power in the Jewish state.

As high priest, Hyrcanus had the right to administer the Jewish nation's internal affairs according to the laws of Israel. Of course the government in Palestine was affected by events of the Roman civil wars. When Julius Caesar defeated Pompey at Pharsalus in 48 B.C. , he had to reorder affairs in the East. The following year he went to Syria, where he confirmed Hyrcanus as high priest and appointed him Ethnarch (“ruler of the nation”), with the right to try capital cases. This right continued in Jewish hands until the appointment of the procurators in A.D. 6. Thus it was no longer in force when Jesus was put to death. Caesar also confirmed the special privileges of the Jews of the Diaspora or Dispersion in Asia Minor and Alexandria—the right to live according to their ancestral laws. Importantly, later Roman rules confirmed those privileges. Antipater was granted Roman citizenship and the office of “Custodian of Judea” (with vague duties). Antipater made his elder son Phasael governor of Jerusalem and his younger son Herod ruler of Galilee.

With the assassination of Julius Caesar (44 B.C.) a new instability occurred in Judea. Caesar's murderers, Brutus and Cassius, ransacked the treasuries of eastern lands to finance their war effort against Caesar's heirs. Antipater and his sons did their best to please the new Roman administration and ignored Hyrcanus and the Jewish aristocracy. A plot started to form to assassinate Antipater and he was poisoned at a banquet.

While Hyrcanus and the Jewish aristocracy contested with Herod and the Idumeans for the mastery in Palestine, news came of Mark Antony's victory over Caesar's assassins at Philippi (42 B.C.). Herod headed a delegation that went to Bithynia (in Asia Minor) to meet Antony. After Herod had generously greased Antony's palms, and after Antony on his own decided that the Idumeans would be more loyal to Rome than Hyrcanus and his allies, he confirmed Herod and Phasael in their official posts. But Hyrcanus remained as Ethnarch and high priest, with diminished powers.

While Mark Antony and Octavian (later Augustus) were slugging it out for control of the Roman Empire, the Parthians took advantage of Roman weakness in the East. And Antigonus, the youngest son of Hyrcanus' brother Aristobulus, saw a chance to take over in Palestine. Antigonus joined with the Parthians, and enemies of the Romans everywhere received both with open arms (40 B.C.). When Phasael and Hyrcanus went off to negotiate with the Parthians, they killed Phasael and disfigured Hyrcanus so he would be ineligible to continue as High Priest. Herod stashed his family at Masada, and he fled to Rome for support.

There Herod convinced the Senate to make him king over Judea as a tributary of Rome. But when he returned to Palestine to claim his kingdom, initially he had to depend on his own efforts to raise an army and gain control of the countryside. Eventually, however, Rome did put troops in the field. The Roman legions under the command of the Roman governor of Syria took Jerusalem, executing Antigonus at Antioch of Syria on the command of Mark Antony. Hasmonean rule had come to an end. The Parthians lost any enthusiasm for continuing the struggle. Beginning in 37 B.C., Herod was in a position to establish his rule in Judea.

The Reign of Herod the Great

In his early years as king (37–30 B.C.), Herod allied himself to Rome, and his rule was maintained by Mark Antony. Like the kings of Pontus, Cappadocia, and Galatia, Herod was important for his support of Roman policy—and as a ruler who knew how to maintain order in his domain. As a result Rome did not need to annex those states. Herod, however, could not keep the lid on by himself, so the Romans stationed a legion in Judea to maintain the stability of his rule.

One of Herod's greatest problems was that Cleopatra, now married to Mark Antony, wanted to bring Palestine back under the control of Egypt. Fortunately for Herod, Antony was neither willing nor able to agree to such a course of action. But he did give some chunks of Herod's domain to Cleopatra. Cleopatra continued to give Herod grief by friendly contacts with the Hasmonean faction in Judea.

The Hasmonean faction continued to be a problem for Herod. First he negotiated with the Parthians for the return of Hyrcanus, the former high priest still held there. If he remained at the Parthian court, he could stir them up to attack Judea. But when Hyrcanus returned to Jerusalem, the question of the high priesthood became acute. Hyrcanus could not serve because he had been mutilated (Levitus 21:17-20). Alexandra, daughter of Hyrcanus and mother-in-law of Herod (he had married Alexandra's daughter Mariamne), demanded that Herod appoint her young son Aristobulus III (brother of Mariamne) as high priest.

Herod feared that as high priest the young man would ultimately unseat him. His fears turned out to be justified, for when Aristobulus began to officiate he became immensely popular with the masses. Herod then decided to do away with Aristobulus. He had his servants drown Aristobulus while swimming in a pool in Jericho (35 B.C.). At the time Herod was a guest of Alexandra in the Hasmonean palace at Jericho; the pool was one of the palace's swimming pools. This pool has now been excavated and any tourist to Jericho may see it there (see accompanying picture). The uproar after this murder cost Herod dearly, but he was able to defend himself with Antony, who had no one to replace Herod in Judea. Presumably a good part of Herod's defense was that a popular Hasmonean threatened Roman power in the region.

After Octavian's defeat of Antony at Actium in 31 B.C., Herod, like other kings of the East (of Judea, Galatia, Cappadocia, Paphlagonia, and Bosphorus), found himself in a new world. Herod went to Rhodes to meet Octavian. He made no secret of his support for Antony but frankly stated that as he had been loyal to Antony, he would be faithful to Octavian if he would let him. Octavian had the good sense to know that these kings had no choice but to support Antony and believed they would be loyal to him too. Herod welcomed Octavian as he marched along the Palestinian coast on his way to Egypt and presented him with a very large gift and supplies of water and wine for the journey. Octavian later reciprocated with considerable gifts of land (see previous discussion).

Pools at the Hasmonean palace at New Testament Jericho, where Herod drowned the high priest, Aristobulus III

While Herod ruled, his subjects understood his dependence on Octavian (now Augustus) and the emperor's ultimate authority over them. Octavian expected Herod to send troops when Rome needed them, and pay annual taxes to Rome out of his revenues, as well as making special gifts. Because Rome did not collect those taxes directly, there was less friction between the people and Rome. In matters of major importance Herod was expected to seek the advice of the Roman governor of Syria, but Herod had a free hand in the internal affairs of his kingdom. The main check on his power lay in a fear of driving his subjects into rebellion and thereby destroying Rome's confidence in his ability to keep order and to pacify the region. He even had the right to nominate his successor, though such action was subject to the emperor's confirmation.

Herod had great influence within the Roman Empire because of his personal relationship with Augustus and other heads of the Roman government. He built cities and named them for the emperor. The two outstanding examples were Caesarea and Sebaste (Samaria) — Sebastos is the Greek equivalent of Augustus. In both cities he erected statues and temples in the emperor's honor. At Caesarea, the Roman capital of Palestine, games were held in honor of the emperor every fourth year. In the province of Syria he built temples to Augustus in several cities.

Herod developed a friendship with Marcus Agrippa, Augustus' right hand man who was married to Augustus' daughter Julia. A significant result of that friendship was Agrippa's impressive visit to Judea in 15 B.C., when he received a warm welcome from king and people. He made a large number of sacrifices at the temple in Jerusalem. Herod also secured a reaffirmation of the rights of Jews in many cities of Asia Minor.

Herod sought to make a name for himself all over the empire. He made gifts to several Greek cities for the construction of buildings and the development of their institutions. Just outside his borders at Ascalon he built a colonnaded street, fountains and public baths. At Acre-Ptolemais he built a gymnasium, at Sidon a theater, at Damascus a gymnasium and theater. At Antioch he paved the main street with marble along its entire length and lined it with colonnades.

In Greece he made generous contributions to the Olympic Games. In Rhodes he rebuilt the temple to Apollo which had been destroyed by fire. He gave gifts to Pergamon, Samos, and the towns of Cilicia, Pamphylia, and Lycia. And this is only a partial list of his benefactions. It would be tedious to note them all.

Herod's Building Activities

*Caesarea **

Along with the rebuilding of the temple in Jerusalem (see next section on Religion), Caesarea ranks as Herod's most spectacular building project. He constructed it on the site of Straton's Tower, a small town twenty-five miles north of Tel Aviv (22–9 B.C.) and named it for Augustus Caesar. When the Romans removed Herod Archelaus in A.D. 6 and appointed procurators to rule Palestine, they made Caesarea the capital of the province. Caesarea became a prosperous city, half the size of Manhattan Island.

This inscription from the theater at Caesarea mentions Pontius Pilate, prefect of Judea, who ruled at the time of Jesus' death. (Gustav Jeeninga)

Herod laid out the streets of his city in a checkerboard pattern. At least the main north-south street was paved with limestone blocks. He had the sewer system constructed in such a way that it would be constantly flushed by action of the sea—unique for a Mediterranean city. At the south end of the main street stood a theater that could probably hold about 4,000 spectators. In the theater excavators found a block with an inscription mentioning Pontius Pilate as the prefect of Judea in the reign of Tiberius, providing extra-biblical evidence of his existence. Just west of the theater on a little promontory stood a sumptuous building which excavators increasingly believe was Herod's palace. We can still see fine mosaic floors there.

Herod provided an adequate water supply by means of a high-level aqueduct that brought good fresh water from springs on Mount Carmel, some six miles to the north. There was also a low-level aqueduct that brought water from the Zarqa River, about three miles away. Its date is uncertain, but it may have functioned as early as Herod's day to provide water for irrigation.

For his port Herod constructed a breakwater made of huge blocks of concrete and enclosing a harbor area of forty acres. * Caesarea had the first protected harbor along the Palestinian coast. And the object of all of Herod's efforts here was to provide a safe harbor along this stretch of the Mediterranean coast. Overlooking the harbor to the east he erected a huge platform on which he built a temple to Augustus and the goddess Roma. South of the temple stood warehouses. Judging from objects found in them, trade was carried on with North Africa, Spain, Italy, and the Aegean. Herod also built an amphitheater northeast of the city. Its arena measured some 290 by 190 feet and compared favorably with the arena of the Colosseum in Rome (281 by 177 feet).

The Herodium

Herod built the Herodium on a spot (7.5 miles south of Jerusalem) where he enjoyed one of his most important victories over the Parthians and Hasmoneans in 40 B.C. Near the end of his life he gave orders that he be buried there. Josephus' account in the accompanying sidebar describes Herod's funeral procession.

The Herodium was a hill some two hundred feet high, on which a round building was erected. This consisted of two parallel circular walls (diameter of the outer one 200 feet) with four towers extending from the outer wall at the points of the compass. Herod built three of them semicircular and the fourth round. Then he surrounded the walls with earth and stone, so the completed structure looks like a truncated cone.

He divided the inside of the palace- fortress into two parts, the eastern half occupied by a garden surrounded by columns and the western half by a bathhouse and various rooms. This eastern sector may have had three upper stories. The bath was a typical Roman bath with a dressing room and warm, hot, and cold rooms. It had mosaic floors and wall frescoes similar to some of those found in Pompeii. The hot bath had the usual form, with hot air passing under the floor and through pipes in the walls. A network of huge cisterns provided water for the site. A rectangular room about 35 by 50 feet was slightly remodeled for use as a synagogue during the first or second Jewish revolt (A.D. 67–70 or A.D. 132–135). Thus it ranks with the synagogue at Masada as among the earliest known.

Herod's Burial

‘‘Archelaus omitted nothing of magnificence… but brought out all the royal ornaments to augment the pomp of the deceased. There was a bier all of gold, embroidered with precious stones, and a purple bed of various contexture, with the dead body upon it, covered with purple; and a diadem was put upon his head, and a crown of gold above it, and a sceptre in his right hand; and near to the bier were Herod's sons, and a multitude of his kindred; next to which came his guards, and the regiment of Thracians, the Germans also and Gauls, all accoutred as if they were going to war; but the rest of the army went… armed, and following their captains and officers in a regular manner; after whom five hundred of his domestic servants and freed-men followed, with sweet spices in their hands: and the body was carried… to Herodium, where he had given order to be buried.” —Josephus, Wars of the Jews, 1.23.9

The Herodium

The Lower Herodium sprawled at the foot of, and to the north of, the palace-fortress. There can be seen a large pool—a kind of artificial lake, possibly for swimming or sailing small boats. Adjacent to the pool lay an ornamental garden, and several buildings stood nearby. One of these was a bathhouse, but the use of most of them has yet to be decided. To date Herod's tomb has not been found.

Herodian Jericho

The Hasmoneans built the first aqueducts in the western Jordan Valley. And later, after date palm and other cultivation prospered, they and King Herod built winter palaces there. The Hasmoneans constructed a winter palace (probably two stories high) about 165 by 165 feet and dug two small swimming pools adjacent to it. As noted earlier, Herod had the young Aristobulus III drowned in one of them.

Early in his reign (c. 35–30 B.C.) Herod built a rectangular winter palace nearby, just south of the Wadi Qelt. This had a central peristyle or colonnaded court, a bathhouse, and a pair of small pools. Later Herod created an enlarged winter palace on both sides of the Wadi Qelt and connected the two units with a bridge. On the north side of the Wadi stood a five-room bathhouse, two peristyle courts and several other rooms.

On the south side lay a sunken garden with an impressive facade holding statuary niches. At the end of the facade he had built a pool for swimming and water games. Behind the facade stood an artificial mound with a building on it. Herod also built a hippodrome and a theater south of ancient Jericho.

Jerusalem

Of course pride of place among Herod's building activities in Jerusalem goes to the temple (discussed in the section “Herod’s Temple” in this Appendix). But while Herod may have sought to win favor with the Jews by rebuilding the temple, he alienated many of them by erecting structures that offended their religious sensitivities. Some of his construction also served merely to assure his hold on the city or to provide for his creature comforts.

Chief among the latter were his barracks and palace. He located these on the west of the city in an area enclosed by its own separate wall, just south of where the Jaffa Gate now stands. At the north of the compound he built three great towers to protect the palace. The biggest of the three was called Phasael after his brother. Its base still stands inside the Old City and is commonly called “David's Tower.” The lower part of it was a fortification, and the upper part was outfitted like a palace. It was 148 feet high. The second tower (named Hippicus for a friend of the king) was 132 feet high. The third was called Mariamne after his queen. A total of 74 feet high, it had luxurious residential quarters.

The eastern half of the Herodium consisted of a garden surrounded by columns.

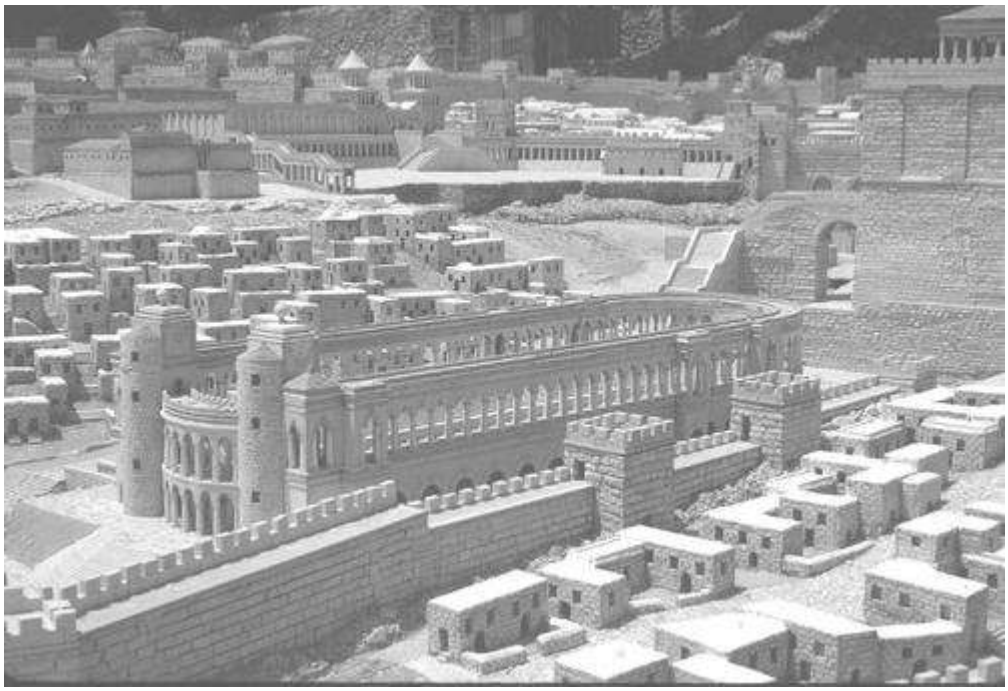
The “Tower of David” in Jerusalem, which Herod the Great built and named for his brother Phasael. (Willem A. VanGemeren)

Between these towers and the palace stood barracks for Herod's soldiers. The palace itself consisted of two great buildings, each with banquet halls, baths, and bedrooms for hundreds of guests. Around the palace were groves of trees and ponds and bronze figures discharging water.

Offensive to the Jews were Herod's theater and hippodrome. The theater stood on the eastern edge of the hill of the upper city on what is now Mount Zion. Like all ancient Greco-Roman theaters, it was open to the sky and had seats arranged in step-like fashion in a semicircle and facing the stage. Players performed Greek and Roman plays there.



South of the Temple Mount in the Tyropoeon Valley Herod built a hippodrome or stadium. This served primarily as a place for chariot races. Shaped like a giant hairpin, it had a rounded end and a straight end. Spectators sat on stair-like seats, and chariots raced around a spina or divider that ran down the middle of the structure.

Machaerus

Herod Antipas imprisoned and then executed John the Baptist on the demands of Herodias (Mt 14:3-10; cf. Josephus, Antiquities XVIII.5.2) at Machaerus (about 38 miles south of Amman). Initially the Hasmoneans had erected the fortress there on the southern border of Perea to defend against the Nabateans. The site consists of ruins of the fortress and of the adjacent Roman-Byzantine village.

Alexander Jannaeus (103–76 B.C.) built the fortress, and the Roman Gabinius destroyed it in 57 B.C. Herod the Great rebuilt it after he consolidated his hold on Palestine (37 B.C. ff.), and it served the Jewish rebels as an important bastion during the war that resulted in the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70.

The most important excavations at the site took place in 1978–1981 under the direction of Virgilio Corbo of the Franciscan order. The Herodian palace-fortress measured about 360 feet east-west and 195 feet north-south. A north-south corridor divided the palace into two blocks. The eastern section had a paved courtyard in the center flanked by baths on the south. The western part had a small court surrounded by columns. Several of the rooms showed traces of mosaic floors. The lower city, that provided housing for the palace personnel, has yet to be excavated. *

Mamre and Hebron

The walled enclosure at Mamre (2 miles north of Hebron), sacred to the memory of Abraham (see Ge 13:18; 23:19; 35:27), seems to date to the reign of Herod the Great.

The monumental structure at Hebron (now a mosque), covering what is commonly identified as the Cave of Machpelah (where some of the Patriarchs were buried, beginning with Abraham's wife Sarah, Ge 23:19), is commonly attributed to Herod the Great.

Masada

"Herod… built a wall around the entire top of the hill… there were also erected upon that wall thirty-eight towers…. Moreover, he built a palace therein at the western ascent…. He also had cut many and great pits, as reservoirs for water, out of the rocks." (Josephus , Wars of the Jews, VIII.3 )

Herod the Great fortified Masada, a wonderful, almost impregnable bastion, as a defense against internal Jewish opposition and the Romans—especially Cleopatra and her designs on him. It rose some 1,500 feet above the sea on an isolated mesa about two-thirds of the way down the western shore of the Dead Sea. Its summit of twenty-three acres gave space for palaces, barracks for soldiers, and storerooms for military equipment and supplies of food. Yigael Yadin of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem led an excavation team of professionals and thousands of volunteers there for two years, in 1963 to 1965. They accomplished an almost total excavation of the site. The exciting account appears in Yadin's Masada (1966).

The monumental structure at Hebron (now a mosque) is commonly attributed to Herod the Great.

Masada, with the Roman ramp built up during the siege

The hot bath room or sauna in the bath complex at Masada had a hollow floor supported by stone pillars; hot air could pass under the floor and through flues in the wall.

Though the Hasmoneans had built some fortifications at Masada, and Herod had left his future wife Mariamne and members of her family there when he fled to Rome, Herod must have dismantled the earlier construction. Yadin found that almost everything on the site dated to Herod's day or later.

A casemate wall about 4,250 feet long surrounded the boat-shaped rock, and had an abundance of defense towers. A casemate wall is a double wall with the area between divided into rooms or compartments. The excavators found about 110 rooms or casemates inside the wall and towers. The enclosed area provided space for four palaces—three small ones and a large one next to the western gate. The large western palace had four blocks of rooms: royal apartments, workshops, storerooms and an administrative section with what the excavators identified as a throne room with a colored mosaic.

At the northernmost point of Masada, at the cliff's edge, stood a palace-villa built in three tiers. On the top level Herod built living quarters with a semicircular porch. The middle terrace, about 65 feet below the upper terrace, contained a circular building and was connected with the upper terrace by a staircase. The lower terrace lies some fifty feet below the middle terrace, and contains a small bathhouse with a mosaic floor and plastered walls.

Samaria

Herod renamed Samaria (thirty-five miles north of Jerusalem) Sebaste, the Greek equivalent of the Latin Augustus (meaning "the revered one") and built extensively there. But we need to be careful not to give him credit for the work of others during the Roman period. The provincial governor Gabinius (57–55 B.C.) seems to have rebuilt the walls, almost two miles long, which surrounded an irregular area of some 160 acres. He also appears to have been largely responsible for the Roman Forum and the adjacent basilica. However, Josephus gives Herod credit for the city wall (Wars, I.21–2). Perhaps the truth is that those projects were too ambitious for Gabinius' brief tenure and Herod finished what Gabinius had started.

Steps up to Herod's temple to Augustus at Samaria

But Herod does deserve credit for the round towers of the west gate of the city and the stadium (some 750 by 195 feet). He definitely built the great temple to Augustus on a height overlooking the city. The complex included the temple building proper (114 by 78 feet) and a large forecourt (on a platform 270 by 234 feet). A wide staircase led from the forecourt to the temple. The emperor Septimius Severus (193–211) rebuilt the temple complex, according to its original plan, and the stairs and other remains the modern tourist can see there today date from this later period.

Remains of the theater to be seen there today date to about A.D. 225. And the colonnaded covered bazaar street that seems to have run the length of the city evidently dates to about the same time. So the New Testament student should not include either in an imaginary recreation of the city in the days of the apostles. *

Summary of Herod's Building Activities

Through Herod the Great's constant construction in Palestine and all over the eastern part of the Roman Empire he sought to play up to the emperor or the official family (e.g., Caesarea, Samaria). He also sought to improve his standing with the governments and peoples of the East, in part so they would not hinder Jews from sending the annual temple tax to Jerusalem. Some of his building was done to placate the Jews (e.g., the temple in Jerusalem); some to provide his defense needs (e.g., Herodium, Masada); and some to indulge his own vanity and to impress observers with the splendor of his kingdom (e.g., his palace in Jerusalem).

Richardson in his new 1996 biography of Herod lists eighteen building projects in Jerusalem, twenty-seven outside Jerusalem but within his territories, ten in Phoenicia and Syria, and fifteen in Asia Minor and Greece. *

Succession to the Throne

After Herod's murder of the young Aristobulus III, it became increasingly easy for him to destroy others of whom he was jealous and whom he suspected of plotting against him. Ultimately he disposed of his wife Mariamne and her mother; her two sons Alexander and Aristobulus; Antipater, his firstborn; many of his loyal courtiers; army officers; three hundred soldiers suspected of supporting Alexander and Aristobulus; and others. Ultimately he suspected treachery in every corner, and a poisoned atmosphere invaded the court that reflected Herod's declining powers and judgment and made it increasingly hard for him to govern. Herod's execution of Mariamne and subsequent grief temporarily cost him his sanity. Eventually he remarried and finally had a total of nine wives.

Tiberias was once the capital of Herod Antipas.

When we look at the state of Herod's mind and the atmosphere at his court in his last years, it is easy to imagine him looking over his shoulder at the birth of a Jewish child in Bethlehem who was supposed to become king of the Jews. And when we see how many had become expendable during the previous few years, we can understand why he could give the order for the mass murder of infants in Bethlehem to be sure he had disposed of Jesus (Mt 2:16-18).

With all of these executions and Herod's suspicions, he changed his will several times. Five days before his death he changed his will for a final time, appointing Archelaus king of Judea, leaving Galilee and Perea to Herod Antipas, and the territories northeast of the Sea of Galilee to Philip (son of Cleopatra of Jerusalem). Archelaus and Herod Antipas were sons of Malthace, a Samaritan. Of course Augustus had to approve these arrangements.

Government Under the Herodian Family

With Herod's body entombed at the Herodium (southeast of Bethlehem), his sons or their representatives went off to Rome to make their case before Augustus. Meanwhile, revolts flared in all the Jewish sections of Palestine. Evidently these were spontaneous, independent of each other, and had no concerted plan. Varus, governor of Syria, required large forces of legionnaires and auxiliaries to put them down. When the smoke blew away, Augustus essentially approved Herod's will but made Archelaus the ethnarch instead of king of Judea. Some of the Hellenistic towns he made directly subject to the governor of Syria.

Archelaus

Archelaus proved to be totally incompetent and aroused the anger of both Jews and Samaritans. When the Samaritans sent a delegation to Augustus in A.D. 6 to accuse Archelaus of cruelty to their people against the specific orders of Augustus, the emperor removed Archelaus and banished him to Vienne in Gaul (France). We shall return to Augustus' arrangements for Archelaus' lands after a quick look at the administration of the rest of Palestine.

Herod Antipas

Herod Antipas appears more often in the New Testament than the other Herods because he ruled Galilee and Perea when Jesus and John the Baptist spent much of their time in those territories. A builder like his father, he rebuilt Sepphoris (about four miles northwest of Nazareth), which served as his capital until he transferred it to the newly-constructed Tiberias on the Sea of Galilee. He named Tiberias for the reigning emperor and completed construction there about A.D. 25. He had great difficulty populating Tiberias because during construction the workmen uncovered a cemetery, so Jews considered the site to be ritually unclean. He also rebuilt Livias and named it in honor of Augustus' wife Livia.

The execution of John the Baptist marred Antipas' rule. John's denunciation of Antipas for his marriage to his brother's wife Herodias precipitated this murderous act. Antipas' first wife was the daughter of the Nabatean king Aretas IV, whom he divorced to marry Herodias, wife of his brother Herod Philip. The reason for John's opposition to Antipas' second marriage was that Mosaic law forbade marriage to a brother's wife except to raise up an heir for a childless brother who died prematurely (levirate marriage, Lev 18:16; 20:21; Dt 25:5). Antipas' brother was still alive and had an adult daughter. John's condemnation won Herodias' undying hatred, and she saw her chance to do away with John at Antipas' birthday party, when her daughter Salome's dance won Antipas' approval (see Mt 14:1-12; Mk 6:14-29).

Antipas also had a brush with Jesus. While Jesus was beginning his final journey to Jerusalem but was still in Galilee, some Pharisees told him that he ought to leave because Antipas wanted to kill him (Lk 13:31-33). Jesus declared that this threat would not stop him. Later, as part of Jesus' trial, Pilate sent Jesus to Herod Antipas because he had come from Herod's province of Galilee (Lk 23:6-12). But Antipas refused to take action and left Pilate to stew in his own juice as he sought to get out of the responsibility of deciding Jesus' fate.

Later Antipas suffered military defeat at the hands of king Aretas of the Nabateans for the treatment of his daughter. In A.D. 39 accusations against Antipas resulted in his exile to southern France and Augustus gave his lands to Agrippa I.

Herod Philip

Augustus appointed Herod's son Philip tetrarch over the northern part of Herod's domain—the region northeast of the Sea of Galilee. Because the population was largely non-Jewish, he was the only Herodian to mint coins with the emperor's image on them. He rebuilt two cities: Paneas which he renamed Caesarea Philippi (joining the emperor's name with his) and Bethsaida as Julias, in honor of Augustus' daughter Julia. Near the first, Peter made his great confession of Jesus' messiahship (Mt 16:13-20) and near the second the feeding of the 5,000 and the 4,000 took place. A generally successful ruler, Philip was well liked by his subjects. When he died in A.D. 34 Tiberius annexed his territory to Syria and in 37 gave it to Agrippa I.

Herod Agrippa I (A.D. 37-44)

“So on a set day Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat on his throne and gave an oration to them. And the people kept shouting, ‘The voice of a god and not of a man!' Then immediately an angel of the Lord struck him, because he did not give glory to God. And he was eaten by worms and died.” (Ac 12:21-23 NKJV)

Herod Agrippa I was the son of Aristobulus, who was the son of Herod the Great and Mariamne I. Though rather incompetent and inept, especially in handling finances, Agrippa happened to be in the right place at the right time. Thus, because he had sufficiently flattered Caligula before he became emperor, Caligula gave him the territory of Philip and bestowed on him the title of king. When Caligula was murdered in 41, Agrippa helped Claudius ascend the throne. Claudius not only confirmed him in his rule but added Judea and Samaria to his domain. Thus he gained control of all the land Herod the Great had ruled.

To gain favor with the Jews Agrippa persecuted the early Christians (Ac 12:1-19), killing James the son of Zebedee and jailing Peter. After Peter's release by divine intervention, Agrippa ordered the death of the guards.

Ultimately Agrippa's sins caught up with him. As Ac 12:20-23 states, he was struck down with a fatal and loathsome disease while he was playing god at Caesarea. Josephus (Antiquities XIX.8.2) gives a roughly similar account.

A tribute denarius of the emperor Tiberius

Herod Agrippa II (A.D. 50-100)

"Therefore, King Agrippa, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." (Acts 26:19 NKJV)

When Agrippa I died in A.D. 44, he left behind a seventeen-year-old son also named Agrippa. He was judged to be too young to take over the reins of his father. But in 50, after the death of Agrippa's uncle, the emperor Claudius gave him his uncle's territory of Chalcis in northern Syria and three years later the emperor exchanged that for the tetrarchy of Philip (northeast of the Sea of Galilee). To that holding Nero later added some towns in Galilee and Perea. Agrippa also had control over the vestments of the high priest and the right to appoint the high priests (Josephus, Antiquities XV.11.4; XX.1.1–3), so the Romans tended to consult him on religious matters. Probably for this reason the procurator Festus asked him to hear Paul's case at Caesarea (Acts 25-26).

Agrippa evidently had an incestuous relationship with his sister Bernice, which was the subject of gossip in Rome. She appeared with Agrippa during the interview with Paul (Acts 25:23; see also Josephus Antiquities XX.7.3). When the Jewish revolt broke out in A.D. 66, Agrippa sided with the Romans, and the emperor Vespasian confirmed him in his kingship. As for Bernice, she became for a time Titus' mistress during the Jewish revolt (66–70) and again in Rome after 75. But Roman revulsion against the idea of an Oriental queen (as with Mark Antony and Cleopatra) led Titus to send her away. With Agrippa's death about A.D. 100, the Herodian family came to an end.

Rule of the Procurators

"And when they had bound Him [Jesus], they led Him away and delivered Him to Pontius Pilate the governor." (Matthew 27:2 NKJV)

When the New Testament speaks of a Roman ruler of Judea in Jesus' day, it calls that official a hegemon (Greek) or chief man (e.g., Matthew 27:2). Officially he bore the title of Prefect. Later the Roman historian Tacitus and others called him a procurator. Modern students of the New Testament commonly follow that practice. Actually procurators in the empire during the first century dealt primarily with imperial finances in their districts or ran departments of the government, such as the mint or the mines. A few of them ruled minor provinces such as Thrace or Judea. And they had the power of life and death in their jurisdictions. The taxes and tolls or customs duties they collected flowed directly into the imperial treasury, not that under senatorial control. Thus when Jesus said to “render… to Caesar” (Matthew 22:21) it had a literal meaning in Judea.

Procurators (prefects) ruled Judea from the deposition of Archelaus until the kingship of Agrippa I (6–37) and from the death of Agrippa (44) until the Jewish revolt in 66. A listing of all of them would be tedious and they have no direct bearing on Scripture. But the New Testament mentions three: Pontius Pilate (26–36), Felix (52–58; Acts 23:24-26, etc.), and Festus (58–62; Acts 24:27; Acts 25:1-12).

The primary responsibility of procurators in Judea was to maintain public order, but they normally did not manage the government on a day-to-day basis. In Jerusalem the high priest and the council or Sanhedrin did that. In legal or criminal cases the governor heard accusations leveled by provincial individuals and had the power to impose any form of punishment: death, hard labor, exile, etc., as in the case of Pilate's trial of Jesus. A Roman citizen, such as the apostle Paul, could demand a trial at Rome by using the formula “I appeal to Caesar” (see Acts 25:11f., 25).

The western wall or the Wailing Wall is part of the remains of Herod's temple complex.

The Roman prefects generally proved quite inept in handling the Jews. Pilate, for example, came across as harsh, stubborn, and insensitive. He smuggled military insignia bearing the emperor's image into Jerusalem by night, but when Jews declared themselves ready to die rather than tolerate this violation of the Ten Commandments, he removed them. On another occasion he attacked and dispersed a crowd protesting the use of temple moneys to pay costs of an aqueduct in Jerusalem. Scripture mentions other instances of his ruthless massacres. When he fell on crowds of Samaritans gathered to witness the discovery of sacred objects allegedly hidden by Moses on Mount Gerizim, the governor of Syria (Vitellius) sent him to Rome to justify himself. The emperor ordered his removal in A.D. 36.

From the time of Felix constant tension and open hostility increasingly strained the relationship between Jews and Romans, leading to the first Jewish revolt in A.D. 66. The spark that lit this fire rose from friction between Jews and Gentiles in Caesarea. Subsequently the Roman prefect took seventeen talents from the temple treasury. The Jewish war party stopped sacrifices in behalf of Nero in 66. Meanwhile Masada fell into the hands of the rebels, who butchered its Roman garrison. Shortly thereafter in Jerusalem zealots took Herod's palace and massacred the Roman troops there. Riots spread to other cities and full-scale conflict was under way.

Literature

During these unhappy years of oppression and internal strife, the Jewish people produced a sizable body of literature that both recorded and addressed their era. Three of the more significant works are the Septuagint, the Apocrypha and the Dead Sea Scrolls.

Septuagint. Jewish legend says that 72 scholars, under the sponsorship of Ptolemy Philadelphus (c. 250 B.C.), were brought together on the island of Pharos, near Alexandria, where they produced a Greek translation of the OT in 72 days. From this tradition the Latin word for 70, "Septuagint," became the name attached to the translation. The Roman numeral for 70, LXX, is used as an abbreviation for it.

Behind the legend lies the probability that at least the Torah (the five books of Moses) was translated into Greek c. 250 B.C. for the use of the Greek-speaking Jews of Alexandria. The rest of the OT and some noncanonical books were also included in the LXX before the dawning of the Christian era, though it is difficult to be certain when.

The Septuagint quickly became the Bible of the Jews outside the Holy Land who, like the Alexandrians, no longer spoke Hebrew. It would be difficult to overestimate its influence. It made the Scriptures available both to the Jews who no longer spoke their ancestral language and to the entire Greek-speaking world. It later became the Bible of the early church, frequently quoted by the NT writers. Also, its widespread popularity and use contributed to the retention of the Apocrypha by some branches of Christendom.

Apocrypha. Derived from a Greek word that means "hidden," Apocrypha has acquired the meaning "false," but in a technical sense it describes a specific body of writings. This collection consists of a variety of books and additions to canonical books that, with the exception of 2 Esdras (c. A.D. 90), were written during the intertestamental period. Their recognition as authoritative in Roman and Eastern Christianity is the result of a complex historical process.

The limits of the Hebrew canon of the OT, also accepted by most Protestants today, were very likely established for most Jews by the dawn of the Christian era. In spite of disagreements among some of the church fathers as to which books were canonical and which were not, the Apocryphal books (which were included in the Septuagint) continued in common use by most Christians until the Reformation. During this period most Protestants decided to follow the Hebrew canon while Rome, at the Council of Trent (1546) and more recently at the First Vatican Council (1869–70), affirmed the larger Alexandrian canon that includes the Apocrypha.

The Apocryphal books have retained their place primarily through the weight of ecclesiastical authority, without which they would not commend themselves as canonical literature. There is no clear evidence that Jesus or the apostles ever quoted any Apocryphal works as inspired Scripture. The Jewish community that produced them repudiated them, and the historical surveys in the apostolic sermons recorded in Acts completely ignore the period they cover. Even the sober, historical account of 1 Maccabees is tarnished by numerous errors and anachronisms.

There is nothing of theological value in the Apocryphal books that cannot be duplicated in canonical Scripture, and they contain much that runs counter to its teachings. Nonetheless, this body of literature does provide a valuable source of information for the study of the intertestamental period.

Dead Sea Scrolls. In the spring of 1947 an Arab shepherd chanced upon a cave in the hills overlooking the southwestern shore of the Dead Sea that contained what has been called "the greatest manuscript discovery of modern times." The documents and fragments of documents found in those caves, dubbed the "Dead Sea Scrolls," included OT books, a few books of the Apocrypha, apocalyptic works, pseudepigrapha (books that purport to be the work of ancient heroes of the faith), and a number of books peculiar to the sect that produced them.

Approximately a third of the documents are Biblical, with Psalms, Deuteronomy and Isaiah—the books quoted most often in the NT — occurring most frequently. One of the most remarkable finds was a complete 24-foot-long scroll of Isaiah.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

The Scrolls have made a significant contribution to the quest for a form of the OT texts most accurately reflecting the original manuscripts; they provide copies 1,000 years closer to the originals than were previously known. The understanding of Biblical Hebrew and Aramaic and knowledge of the development of Judaism between the Testaments have been increased significantly. Of great importance to readers of the Bible is the demonstration of the care with which OT texts were copied, thus providing objective evidence for the general reliability of those texts.

Social Developments

The Judaism of Jesus' day is, to a large extent, the result of changes that came about in response to the pressures of the intertestamental period.

Diaspora. The Diaspora (dispersion) of Israel begun in the exile accelerated during these years until a writer of the day could say that Jews filled “every land and sea.”

Jews outside the Holy Land, cut off from the temple, concentrated their religious life in the study of the Torah as the chief guide for their daily living within the Gentile world and in the activities centered in the synagogue (see below). The missionaries of the early church began their Gentile ministries among the Diaspora, using their Greek translation of the OT (the Septuagint).

Sadducees. In the Holy Land, the Greek world made its greatest impact through the party of the Sadducees. Made up of aristocrats, it became the temple party. Because of their position, the Sadducees had a vested interest in the status quo.

Relatively few in number, they wielded disproportionate political power and controlled the high priesthood. They rejected all religious writings except the Torah, as well as any doctrine (such as resurrection from the dead) not found in those five books.

Synagogue. During the Babylonian exile, Israel was cut off from the temple, divested of nationhood and surrounded by pagan religious practices. The nation's faith was threatened with extinction. Under these circumstances, the exiles turned their religious focus from what they had lost to what they retained—the Torah and the belief that they were God's people. They concentrated on the law rather than nationhood, on personal piety rather than sacramental rectitude, and on prayer as an acceptable replacement for the sacrifices denied to them.

When they returned from the exile, they brought with them this new form of religious expression, as well as the synagogue (its center), and Judaism became a faith that could be practiced wherever the Torah could be carried. The emphases on personal piety and a relationship with God, which characterized synagogue worship, not only helped preserve Judaism but also prepared the way for the Christian gospel.

Pharisees. As the party of the synagogue, the Pharisees strove to reinterpret the law. They built a “hedge” around it to enable Jews to live righteously before God in a world that had changed drastically since the days of Moses. Although they were comparatively few in number, the Pharisees enjoyed the support of the people and influenced popular opinion if not national policy. They were the only party to survive the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70 and were the spiritual progenitors of modern Judaism.

Essenes. An almost forgotten Jewish sect until the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls, the Essenes were a small, separatist group that grew out of the conflicts of the Maccabean age. Like the Pharisees, they stressed strict legal observance, but they considered the temple priesthood corrupt and rejected much of the temple ritual and sacrificial system. Mentioned by several ancient writers (including Josephus and Pliny), the precise nature of the Essenes is still not certain, though it is generally agreed that the Qumran community that produced the Dead Sea Scrolls was probably an Essene group.

Because they were convinced that they were the true remnant, these Qumran Essenes had separated themselves from Judaism at large and devoted themselves to personal purity and preparation for the final war between the “Sons of Light and the Sons of Darkness.” They practiced an apocalyptic faith, looking back to the contributions of their “Teacher of Righteousness” and forward to the coming of two, and possibly three, Messiahs. The destruction of the temple in A.D. 70, however, seems to have delivered a death blow to their apocalyptic expectations.

Attempts have been made to equate aspects of the beliefs of the Qumran community with the origins of Christianity. Some have seen a prototype of Jesus in their “Teacher of Righteousness,” and both John the Baptist and Jesus have been assigned membership in the sect. There is, however, only a superficial, speculative base for these conjectures.

Rabinnic Judaism

Rabbinc Judaism Background: Hellenistic Judaism, Hillel, Messianic Judaism

Starting from the establishment of the Seleuceid Kingdom in 325 BC, Hellenistic culture had a profound impact on the customs and practices of Jews, both in Judea and in the Diaspora. These inroads into Judaism gave rise to Hellenistic Judaism in the Jewish diaspora which sought to establish a Hebraic-Jewish religious tradition within the culture and language of Hellenism.

During this time currents of Judaism were influenced by Hellenistic philosophy developed from the 3rd century BCE, notably among the Jewish diaspora in Alexandria, culminating in the compilation of the Septuagint. An important advocate of the symbiosis of Jewish theology and Hellenistic thought is Philo.

Hellenistic Judaism spread to Ptolemaic Egypt from the 3rd century BCE, and became a notable religio licita throughout the Roman Empire, until its decline in the 3rd century concurrent with the rise of Gnosticism and Early Christianity.

The decline of Hellenistic Judaism is obscure. It may be that it was marginalized by, absorbed into or became Early Christianity (see the Gospel according to the Hebrews). The Acts of the Apostles at least report how Paul of Tarsus preferredly evangelized communities of proselytes and Godfearers, or circles sympathetic to Judaism: the Apostolic Decree allowing converts to forgo circumcision made Christianity a more attractive option for interested pagans than Rabbinic Judaism which instituted a more stringent circumcision procedure in response, see Brit milah. See also Circumcision controversy in early Christianity. The attractiveness of Christianity may, however, have suffered a setback with its being explicitly outlawed in the 80s CE by Domitian as a "Jewish superstition", while Judaism retained its privileges as long as members paid the Fiscus Judaicus (“Jewish Tax”). However, from a historical perspective, Persecution of Christians seemed only to increase the number of Christian converts, leading eventually to the adoption of Christianity by the Roman emperor Constantine and the subsequent development of the Byzantine Empire.

On the other hand, mainstream Judaism began to reject Hellenistic currents, outlawing use of the Septuagint, see also Council of Jamnia. Remaining currents of Hellenistic Judaism may have merged into Gnostic movements in the early centuries CE.

In the later part of the Second Temple period (2nd century BC), the Second Commonwealth of Judea (Hasmonean Kingdom) was established and religious matters were determined by a pair (zugot) which led the Sanhedrin. The Hasmonean Kingdom ended in 37 BC but it's believed that the "two-man rule of the Sanhedrin" lasted until the early part of the 1st century AD during the period of the Roman province of Iudaea. The last of the zugot, Hillel and Shammai, were the most well-known of the Sanhedrin leaders. Both were Pharisees, but the Sadducees were actually the dominant party while the Temple stood. Since the Sadducees did not survive the First Jewish–Roman War, their version of events has perished. In addition, Hillel's views have been seen as superior to Shammai's by Rabbinic Judaism. The development of an oral tradition of teaching called the "tanna" would be the means by which the faith of Judaism would sustain the fall of the Second Temple.

Jewish messianism has its root in the apocalyptic literature of the 2nd to 1st centuries BC, promising a future "anointed" leader or Messiah to resurrect the Israelite "Kingdom of God", in place of the foreign rulers of the time. This corresponded with the Maccabean Revolt directed against the Seleucids. Following the fall of the Hasmonean kingdom, it was directed against the Roman administration of Iudaea Province, which, according to Josephus, began with the formation of the Zealots during the Census of Quirinius of 6 AD, though full scale open revolt did not occur till the First Jewish–Roman War in 66 AD. Historian H. H. Ben-Sasson has proposed that the "Crisis under Caligula" (37–41) was the "first open break" between Rome and the Jews even though tension already existed during the census in 6 and under Sejanus (before 31).

Judaism at this time was divided into antagonistic factions. The main camps were the Pharisees, Saducees, and Zealots, but also included other less influential sects. This led to further unrest, and the 1st century BC and 1st century AD saw a number of charismatic religious leaders, contributing to what would become the Mishnah of Rabbinic Judaism, including Yochanan ben Zakai and Hanina Ben Dosa. The ministry of Jesus, according to the account of the Gospels, falls into this pattern of sectarian preachers or teachers with devoted disciples (derived from the Greek word for students).

Development of Rabinnic Judaism

Rabbinic Judaism or Rabbinism has been the mainstream form of Judaism since the 6th century, after the codification of the Talmud. Rabbinic Judaism gained predominance within the Jewish diaspora between the 2nd to 6th centuries, with the development of the oral law and the Talmud to control the interpretation of Jewish scripture (specifically the Masoretic Text) and to encourage the practice of Judaism in the absence of Temple sacrifice and other practices no longer possible, while waiting for the Third Temple.

In 70 the Temple was destroyed. The destruction of the Second Temple was a profoundly traumatic experience for the Jews, who were now confronted with difficult and far-reaching questions:[14]

- How to achieve atonement without the Temple?
- How to explain the disastrous outcome of the rebellion?
- How to live in the post-Temple, Romanized world?
- How to connect present and past traditions?

How people answered these questions depended largely on their position prior to the revolt. But the destruction of the Second Temple by the Romans not only put an end to the revolt, it marked the end of an era. Revolutionaries like the Zealots had been crushed by the Romans, and had little credibility (the last Zealots died at Masada in 73). The Sadducees, whose teachings were so closely connected to the Temple cult, disappeared. The Essenes also vanished, perhaps because their teachings so diverged from the issues of the times that the destruction of the Second Temple was of no consequence to them; precisely for this reason, they were of little consequence to the vast majority of Jews.

Two organized groups remained: the Early Christians, and Pharisees.

At the time of the destruction of the Second Temple, Judaism was divided into antagonistic factions. The main camps were the Pharisees, Saducees, and Zealots, but also included other less influential sects. This led to further unrest, and the 1st century BC and 1st century AD saw a number of charismatic religious leaders, contributing to what would become the Mishnah of Rabbinic Judaism.

Of all the major Second Temple sects, only the Pharisees remained. Their vision of Jewish law as a means by which ordinary people could engage with the sacred in their daily lives, provided them with a position from which to respond to all four challenges, in a way meaningful to the vast majority of Jews.

Following the destruction of the Temple, Rome governed Judea through a Procurator at Caesarea and a Jewish Patriarch. A former leading Pharisee, Yohanan ben Zakkai, was appointed the first Patriarch (the Hebrew word, Nasi, also means prince, or president), and he reestablished the Sanhedrin at Javneh under Pharisee control. Instead of giving tithes to the priests and sacrificing offerings at the Temple, the rabbis instructed Jews to give money to charities and study in local Synagogues, as well as to pay the Fiscus Iudaicus (or Judaicus), the “Jewish Tax”.

In 132, the Emperor Hadrian threatened to rebuild Jerusalem as a pagan city dedicated to Jupiter, called Aelia Capitolina. Some of the leading sages of the Sanhedrin supported a rebellion (and, for a short time, an independent state) led by Simon bar Kozeba (also called Bar Kochba, or "son of a star"); some, such as Rabbi Akiba, believed Bar Kochbah to be messiah, or king. Up until this time, a number of Christians were still part of the Jewish community. However, they did not support or take part in the revolt. Whether because they had no wish to fight, or because they could not support a second messiah in addition to Jesus, or because of their harsh treatment by Bar Kochba during his brief reign, these Christians also left the Jewish community around this time.

This revolt ended in 135 when Bar Kochba and his army were defeated. The Romans then barred Jews from Jerusalem, until Constantine allowed Jews to enter for one day each year, during the holiday of Tisha B'Av.

After the suppression of the revolt the vast majority of Jews were sent into exile; shortly thereafter (around 200), Judah haNasi edited together judgments and traditions into an authoritative code, the Mishnah. This marks the transformation of Pharisaic Judaism into Rabbinic Judaism.

Although the Rabbis traced their origins to the Pharisees, Rabbinic Judaism nevertheless involved a radical repudiation of certain elements of Pharisaism—elements that were basic to Second Temple Judaism. The Pharisees had been partisan. Members of different sects argued with one another over the correctness of their respective interpretations (Hillel and Shammai). After the destruction of the Second Temple, these sectarian divisions ended. The term "Pharisee" was no longer used, perhaps because it was a term more often used by non-Pharisees, but also because the term was explicitly sectarian. The Rabbis claimed leadership over all Jews, and added to the Amidah the birkat haMinim (see Council of Jamnia), a prayer which in part exclaims, "Praised are You O Lord, who breaks enemies and defeats the arrogant," and which is understood as a rejection of sectarians and sectarianism. This shift by no means resolved conflicts over the interpretation of the Torah; rather, it relocated debates between sects to debates within Rabbinic Judaism

The survival of Pharisaic or Rabbinic Judaism is attributed to Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai, the founder of the Yeshiva (religious school) in Yavne, (see also Council of Jamnia). Yavneh replaced Jerusalem as the new seat of a reconstituted Sanhedrin, which reestablished its authority and became a means of reuniting Jewry.

The destruction of the Second Temple brought about a dramatic change in Judaism. Rabbinic Judaism built upon Jewish tradition while adjusting to new realities. Temple ritual was replaced with prayer service in synagogues which built upon practices of Jews in the Diaspora dating back to the Babylonian exile.

As the Rabbis were required to face two shattering new realities—Judaism without a Temple (to serve as the center of teaching and study) and Judea without autonomy—there was a flurry of legal discourse and the old system of oral scholarship could not be maintained. It is during this period that Rabbinic discourse began to be recorded in writing. The theory that the destruction of the Temple and subsequent upheaval led to the committing of Oral Law into writing was first explained in the Epistle of Sherira Gaon and often repeated.

The oral law was subsequently codified in the Mishnah and Gemarah, and is interpreted in Rabbinic literature detailing subsequent rabbinic decisions and writings. Rabbinic Jewish literature is predicated on the belief that the Written Law cannot be properly understood without recourse to the Oral Law (the Mishnah).

Much Rabbinic Jewish literature concerns specifying what behavior is sanctioned by the law; this body of interpretations is called halakha* (the way).

Originally, Jewish scholarship was oral. Rabbis expounded and debated the law (the written law expressed in the Hebrew Bible) and discussed the Tanakh without the benefit of written works (other than the Biblical books themselves), though some may have made private notes (megillot setarim), for example of court decisions. This situation changed drastically, however, mainly as the result of the destruction of the Jewish commonwealth in the year 70 CE and the consequent upheaval of Jewish social and legal norms. As the Rabbis were required to face a new reality—mainly Judaism without a Temple (to serve as the center of teaching and study) and Judea without autonomy—there was a flurry of legal discourse and the old system of oral scholarship could not be maintained. It is during this period that Rabbinic discourse began to be recorded in writing.

Note: Orthodox Judaism does not accept the scholarly view that Rabbinic Judaism only came into being in the post Second Temple era. Rather, it sees the Judaism of this period as continuing organically from the religious and cultural heritage of the Israelites, stemming from the Revelation at Sinai onwards. According to this view, while the title "Rabbi" was not used earlier, Moses was the first rabbi (and is commonly referred to by Orthodox Jews as "Moses our Rabbi"), with the knowledge and laws received at Sinai being passed down from teachers to students through the era of the Judges, and the prophets (most of whom are seen as the "rabbis" of their time), through the Sages of the late Second Temple period, and continuing until today. Orthodox Jews believe that the Torah given at Sinai consisted of a written component (the Pentateuch) and an oral component.

(Some Orthodox Jewish sects also believe that a “hidden” / mystical oral component was also given, the Book of Zohar and it’s Kabbalistic offshoots. The Zohar is mostly written in what has been described as an exalted, eccentric style of Aramaic. Aramaic, the day-to-day language of Israel in the Second Temple period (539 BCE – 70 CE), was the original language of large sections of the biblical books of Daniel and Ezra, and is the main language of the Talmud)

The earliest recorded oral law may have been of the midrashic form, in which halakhic discussion is structured as exegetical commentary on the Pentateuch. But an alternative form, organized by subject matter instead of by biblical verse, became dominant about the year 200 CE, when Rabbi Judah haNasi redacted the Mishnah (משנה).

The Oral Law was far from monolithic; rather, it varied among various schools. The most famous two were the School of Shammai and the School of Hillel. In general, all valid opinions, even the non-normative ones, were recorded in the Talmud.

The Talmud has two components: the Mishnah (c. 200 CE), the first written compendium of Judaism's Oral Law; and the Gemara (c. 500 CE), a discussion of the Mishnah and related Tannaitic writings that often ventures onto other subjects and expounds broadly on the Tanakh.

The rabbis of the Mishnah are known as Tannaim (sing. Tanna תנא). The rabbis of the Gemara are referred to as Amoraim (sing. Amora אמורא).

The Mishnah does not claim to be the development of new laws, but merely the collection of existing oral laws, traditions and traditional wisdom. The rabbis who contributed to the Mishnah are known as the Tannaim, of whom approximately 120 are known. The period during which the Mishnah was assembled spanned about 130 years, and five generations.

Most of the Mishnah is related without attribution (stam). This usually indicates that many sages taught so, or that Judah haNasi (often called "Rebbi") who redacted the Mishnah together with his academy/court ruled so. The halakhic ruling usually follows that view. Sometimes, however, it appears to be the opinion of a single sage, and the view of the sages collectively (Hebrew: חכמים, hachamim) is given separately.

The Talmud records a tradition that unattributed statements of the law represent the views of Rabbi Meir (Sanhedrin 86a), which supports the theory (recorded by Rav Sherira Gaon in his famous Iggeret) that he was the author of an earlier collection. For this reason, the few passages that actually say "this is the view of Rabbi Meir" represent cases where the author intended to present Rabbi Meir's view as a "minority opinion" not representing the accepted law.

Rebbi is credited with publishing the Mishnah, though there have been a few edits since his time (for example, those passages that cite him or his grandson, Rabbi Yehuda Nesi'ah; in addition, the Mishnah at the end of Tractate Sotah refers to the period after Rebbi's death, which could not have been written by Rebbi himself). According to the Epistle of Sherira Gaon, after the tremendous upheaval caused by the destruction of the Temple and the Bar Kochba revolt, the Oral Torah was in danger of being forgotten. It was for this reason that Rebbi chose to redact the Mishnah.

One must also note that in addition to redacting the Mishnah, Rebbi and his court also ruled on which opinions should be followed, though the rulings do not always appear in the text.

As he went through the tractates, the Mishnah was set forth, but throughout his life some parts were updated as new information came to light. Because of the proliferation of earlier versions, it was deemed too hard to retract anything already released, and therefore a second version of certain laws were released. The Talmud refers to these differing versions as Mishnah Rishonah ("First Mishnah") and Mishnah Acharonah ("Last Mishnah"). David Zvi Hoffman suggests that Mishnah Rishonah actually refers to texts from earlier Sages upon which Rebbi based his Mishnah.

One theory is that the present Mishnah was based on an earlier collection by Rabbi Meir. There are also references to the "Mishnah of Rabbi Akiva", though this may simply mean his teachings in general. It is possible that Rabbi Akiva and Rabbi Meir established the divisions and order of subjects in the Mishnah, but this would make them the authors of a school curriculum rather than of a book.

Authorities are divided on whether Rebbi recorded the Mishnah in writing or established it as an oral text for memorisation. The most important early account of its composition, the Epistle of Sherira Gaon, is ambiguous on the point, though the "Spanish" recension leans to the theory that the Mishnah was written.

The Gemara is the part of the Talmud that contains rabbinical commentaries and analysis of the Mishnah. In the three centuries following the redaction of the Mishnah by Rabbi Judah the Prince (c. 200 CE), rabbis throughout Palestine and Babylonia analyzed, debated and discussed that work. These discussions form the Gemara (גמרא). Gemara means "completion" (from the Hebrew gamar גמר: "to complete") or "learning" (from the Aramaic: "to study"). The Gemara mainly focuses on elucidating and elaborating the opinions of the Tannaim. The rabbis of the Gemara are known as Amoraim (sing. Amora אמורא).

Much of the Gemara consists of legal analysis. The starting point for the analysis is usually a legal statement found in a Mishnah. The statement is then analyzed and compared with other statements used in different approaches to Biblical exegesis in rabbinic Judaism (or—simpler—interpretation of text in Torah study) exchanges between two (frequently anonymous and sometimes metaphorical) disputants, termed the makshan (questioner) and tartzan (answerer). Another important function of Gemara is to identify the correct Biblical basis for a given law presented in the Mishnah and the logical process connecting one with the other: this activity was known as talmud long before the existence of the "Talmud" as a text.[

	Biblical Period
Patriarchs	God created the heavens and the earth and mankind in 6-days and rested on the 7th day. God created the first man and woman, Adam and Eve. They had "Free Will" to obey or disobey God. They choose to reject God's command and listen to Satan, a fallen angel. By rejecting God's command, mankind became fallen and corrupt. God however promised a Messiah who would redeem man and restore him. (Genesis 3;15). Man's corrupt nature caused God to bring judgment on the whole human race, causing a flood to kill human and animal life. Noah, his family and all the living animals who entered the arc (the boat Noah built) were spared from God's judgment. Everybody alive today is a descendent of Noah and his family. Following the flood, The arc landed in the mountains of Ararat (Armenia), from there, man as one tribe traveled to the lands of the future Babylon,(Shunar, Summer). As one people, humanity again began to rebel against God, building the tower of Babel, so God caused a confusion in language between Noah's descendents. This confusion caused humanity to be dispersed over the earth forming the different nations. Abraham, a descendent of Shem, the second son of Noah, left Ur, a city in Babylon, for Mt. Moriah (Jerusalem) at God's instruction. God promised Abraham, to make him into a great nation. Isaac, Abraham's son, had two sons Jacob and Esau. Jacob had 12 sons, who would later become the nation of Israel. Jacob lived in the land of current day Israel, but would live in Egypt for a time, before being buried in Hebron with Abraham and Issac. Joseph, Jacob's second youngest son was sold by his brothers into Egypt. In Egypt, he became prime minister. Famine struck the land of Canaan (Israel) forcing his brothers to come to Egypt for food. There, they met their brother who was sold as a slave years earlier. Joseph forgave his brothers and they settled in the land of Egypt in an area known as Goshen with Joseph.
Egyptian Captivity 1800-1400 B.C.	Over the next 400 years they multiplied to over 1,000,000 souls and subsequently became oppressed in the land of Egypt as slaves of a new Pharaoh.They cried out to God for rescue, and God sent them Moses, a Hebrew raised in Pharaoh house. Moses, representing God to Pharoh, delivered plagues on Egypt, Pharaoh agreed to release Israel from Egyptian slavery. Moses led the descendents of Jacob (Israel) back to the land of Canaan. On the way, Israel rebelled against Moses and wanted to return to Egypt. For rejecting God's leadership at the hand of Moses, Israel was forced to wander in the wilderness of Sinai. Under Moses' leadership for the next 40 years, the descendents of Jacob lived in the wilderness of Sinai, until the rebellious generation died.
Period of Judges 1400-1000 B.C.	Joshua, would succeed Moses and lead Israel into Canaan. Israel conquered and settled a portion of land and established a confederacy of tribes after the 12 sons of Jacob. God ruled the tribes through judges. Over the next 400 years judges such as Samson, Gideon, Jephthah, and Deborah would come to lead the tribes of Israel against their enemies. The people requested a king like the other nations, and God gave them Saul as their first king, followed by David. David conquered the city of Jerusalem from the Jebusites, making it the City of David. Through prophets, God established David's throne as an eternal throne later to be ruled by his descendent, the Messiah, who would one day rule the world with Jerusalem as the capital city of the earth. Solomon, David's son would build the Temple on Mt. Moriah, becoming known as Solomon's Temple
First Temple 960- 586 B.C.	Eventually Israel tuned away from the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and started worshipping the idols in the land of Canaan, Baal, Ashtorah, Chemosh, etc. God warned Israel through prophets, letting Israel know these practices would result in destruction. The people rejected these messeages through Isaiah, Jeremiah, Hosea, Micah and others, and continued their idol worship.

	God responded by sending the armies of Assyria in 722 B.C. to take the northern part of Israel captive to the lands of Assyria. From 605-586 B.C. the Babylonians, estroyed Jerusalem and Solomon's Temple taking those who were left into Babylon for a period of 70 years. At the end of 70 years, the Persians defeated Babylon under Cyrus the Great, he allowed the Jews to return to the land of Israel.
Second Temple 516-70 A.D.	In Babylon, Israel was humbled becoming servants of the Babylonians. However in Babylon, God raised up prophets like Daniel who became the prime minister of Babylon under king Nebuchadnezzar. Through Daniel, God revealed his future plans for Israel and the world, and the coming of His Messiah. Giving the exact month, year and day of his death (Daniel 9;24-27) In 539 B.C. Cyrus the Great, head of a Persian-Median kingdom defeated Babylon. He allowed the Jews to return to the land of Israel and rebuild their Temple. In 516 B.C., seventy years after the Temple was destroyed, the Second Temple was completed. During this period God spoke through the prophets, Zechariah, Haggai, and Malachi to encourage Israel about the coming plan of redemption through the Messiah. Malachi was the last prophet of the age, writing about 425 B.C.
	Hellenistic Judaism
Greek Period 331-63 BC	Alexander the Great, as foretold in the book of Daniel, conquered the Persian kingdom in 331 B.C., the Greeks took control of Israel. After Alexander death, his kingdom was divided between his 4 generals. The generals Ptolemy and Seleucid became the progenitors of two kingdoms which fought for control of Israel, the Selucids and Ptolemies. The Ptolemies gave the Jews freedom to worship as they like. In 198 B.C. Antiochus III, defeated the Ptolemies and allowed the Jews even more liberty. The Greek culture and influenece in Jerusalem stated to grow amongst the people of Israel. In 175 B.C. a Hellenizing Jew named Jason came in control of the High-Priesthood. An even more extreme Hellenizer name Menalaus ousted him causing a civil war. Antiochus IV Epiphanies interveined on Menalaus side, and tried to set up an image of Zeus in the Second Temple. Antiochus Epiphanies, a Seleucid, sacrificed a pig in the Second Temple on Mt. Moriah, he forced the Jews to adopt Greek customs, hoping to unify his kingdom as a Greek Kingdom to stop the Roman armies. This caused an old priest, Mattathias, and his five sons—the so-called Maccabees or Hasmoneans to revolt. They defeated the Greek forces and rededicated the Temple in Jerusalem. This event is celebrated at Hanukkah every year. The Jews had an independent Jewish state for about 100-years, the Maccabean Kingdom. Feuding between Jewish rulers caused them to invite Roman arbitration, General Pompey conquered Jerusalem in 63 B.C. During this period we see the rise in the groups known as the Pharisaic and Sadducees. These two groups were at odds with each other. The Pharisees maintained and oral tradition and were loyal to the Torah and the prophets. The Sadducees were allied with the pro-Greek Jews and were in control of the High-Priest.
Roman Period 63 BC- A.D. 135	When Pompey entered the Temple in 63 BCE as an arbiter both in the civil war between Hyrcanus and Aristobulus and in the struggle of the Pharisees against both Jewish rulers, Judea in effect became a puppet state of the Romans. This would lead to the destruction of the Temple, which was completed in 516 B.C., by the Romans in A.D. 70. When Civil war erupted between Ceaser and Pompey, Antipater the Edomite, supported Julius Ceaser. He was rewarded by being appointed governor of Judea. His son Herod the Great would succeed him. In 37 B.C., Herod became ruler of Judea, he was a friend of Augustus received numerous favors. Herod later in life was a paranoid ruler, who would kill his wife Mariamne and his own children. After his death, the Romans divided his kingdom among his sons: Archelaus should be king of Judaea and Samaria, with Philip and Antipas sharing the remainder as tetrarchs. It's at this point Joseph returned from Egypt with Mary and the young child Jesus. After Herod's sons died, Pontius Pilate (26-36 A.D.) would be appointed procurator in Jerusalem. In A.D. 37 Roman Emperor Caligula attempted to have his statue put in the Temple, this was delayed until he died in 41 A.D. Jews vowed to die to prevent his statue from being placed in the Temple. As animosity with Rome grew, rebellion against Rome would lead to civil war and the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70. The walls and Temple in Jerusalem were destroyed. Titus as general left for Rome and celebrated the destruction of Jerusalem along with his father the Emperor Vespasian. The Arch of Titus was built to celebrate the victory of the Roman armies over Jerusalem. According to Josephus over 1,000,000 Jews were killed in this battle for Jerusalem. In 131 A.D., the Emperor Hadrian built a Temple to Jupiter on the Temple Mount, this caused the Jews again to Rebel against Rome. Simeon bar Kosba, later hailed as the Messiah, defeated the Roman Egyptian Legion. The greatest Rabbi of the day, Akiva ben Yosef, also gave him the title Bar Kokhba ("Son of the Star"), a messianic allusion. Bar Kokhba took the title nasi ("prince") and struck his own coins, with the legend "Year 1 of the liberty of Jerusalem." The Emperor Hadrian took charge of the battle and defeated*Bar Kokhba*, after a bloody fight. According to records 580,000 Jews were killed following the Roman victory. Jerusalem was renamed Aelia Capitolina and the land name was changed to Palestine to erase the memory of Judea. Jews were forbidden to enter the new city. The defeat of Jewish resistance to Rome led to the next period of Judaism, Rabbinical Judaism and the progenitors of Modern Judaism.

	Rabbinic Judaism
The age of the Tannaim (135–c. 200)	Following the defeat of Bar Kokhba and the destruction of the Temple, the world of Judaism changed. Jews were forbidden to enter the city built on the ruined Jerusalem, Aelia Capitolina. The area was called Palestine after the Philistines, the name Judea was banned. Hadrian's policy was to erase the history of the Jewish people. Entire Jewish populations were scattered throughout the Roman Empire. Some Jews were allowed to remain. The Romans accepted the submissive Rabbi's who rejected the idea of rebellion and who could control the people. They were allowed to stay in Galilee area. There the Oral Law was compiled as the Mishna.
Palestine (c. 220–c. 400) Babylonia (200–650)	The Making of the Talmuds Although the Jews were scattered throughout the Roman and Persian worlds, the need to have questioned answered required the Mishna. The area of Galilee and Babylon became centers of Jewish thought and learning. Jews remained in Babylon, from the time of the captivity and flourished under Persian rule (Sassanid Rule). The commentaries on the Mishna in Palestine became known as the Palestine Talmud. This was completed about 400 A.D. In the east, in Babylon another group of Rabbis and scholars completed the Babylonian Talmud about 100 years after the Palestinian Talmud. This was another commentary on the Mishna. The Babylonian Talmud was more extensive and through then the Palestinian, and more highly regarded. These two works would give direction the Diaspora, the scattered Jewish community, over the coming centuries. With the spread of Christianity, the Roman empire under Constantine in 325 declared itself as officially a Christian kingdom, resulting in periods of persecution for Jews. Jewish communities in the east under Persia fared better, in Arabia, the city of Yathrob, later called Medina was founded by three Jewish tribes. Here portions of the Talmud would find its way into the Quran as Mohammed interacted with these Jewish Tribes.

The age of the geonim (c. 640–1038)	Talmudic schools became the center of focus in the Jewish world, especially in Babylon. The heads of these schools were known as Geonim, they received questions from the Jewish community abroad and their comments were published as the responsa. Some groups rejected the authority of the Rabbi's and the Talmud, one group became known as the Karaites (Scripturalists). They looked to the scripture alone the Tanakh (Hebrew Bible) as their source of authority. The Karaites settled in Palestine, where they challenged the authority of the Rabbinical schools. At this time also, the Masorites came into being. They were located in Tiberus and Babylon. They added vowel symbols to the Tanakh for proper transmission of scripture. Both the Karaites and Rabbinical Jews used their Bibles, for teaching and reference. All translations today of the Old Testament are based on the*Masoretic Texts.* As time passed, the authority of the Babylonian Rabbi's became less and less as wealthy Jewish communities in North Africa and Spain established their own schools and relied less on Babylon.
Medieval European Judaism (950–1750)	Two Rabbinic schools of thought developed in the Jewish world, one based in Babylon the other in Palestine and Europe. The Ashkenazic were had a Palestinian and Roman basis the Sefardic a Babylonian. The European Jews wrote mainly for internal use amongst themselves, while the Sefardic Jews engaged in Arabic writing, poetry and discourse. The European Ashkenaz were less inclined to interact with European Christianity as the result of experiences with the Crusades and persecution. Hasidism (piety) started to emerge in German Jewish populations, stressing piety, holiness and martyrdom. Jews looked to the Bible, Talmud and Rabbinic commentators such as Rashi (1040-1105 A.D.) who commented on faith and Messianic redemption. In southern France, the area of Provence, in the 13th century, a new mystical study known as Kabbala (literally, "Tradition") was introduced, spreading to Northern Spain. Kabbala was a Gnostic type doctrine in rabbinic guise, they reinterpreted the Bible and rabbinic law as allegories in which God was manifested in a spiritual universe, only initiates into Kabbala had acces. They used their own vocabulary which they devised to special dictionary, which they alone understood.The most renowned literary product of this new circle was the Zohar ("The Book of Splendour"). In 1391 there was a wave of anti-Jewish riots and the Pope issued a Bull forbidding the study of Talmud. In Spain, Jews were required to attend Christian sermons, causing Jews to outwardly convert to Christianity, but keep their Jewish identity a secret, they became known as Maranno Jews. In Europe the Jews faced persecution. In the 1300's, Edward I expelled the Jews from England, in 1492, Jews were expelled from Spain, in 1497 and 1506 they were expelled from Portugal. With all these troubles, Jews looked for the coming of the Messiah. Inspired by the Jewish tradition that the messianic era—when the messiah would come to bring in the rule of God—would be preceded by horrendous catastrophes, a group of single-minded rabbis established a community in á°"efat (Safed), Palestine. The group was largely Kabbalic in its nature. Such phenomena, however, were decidedly in the minority and contrary to the dominant trend. Dogmatic Kabbalism spread progressively and finally came to social expression in 1666, with the widespread acceptance of the views of the pseudo-messiah Shabbetai Tzevi (Sabbatai Zevi). Most of European and Ottoman Jewry was swept into a hysterical pitch in the belief that the end was now finally at hand. This ended when Shabbetai was forced to convert to Islam and served as the doorman to the Ottoman Sultan. The reaction to Shabbetai forced Jews to seek out heretical elements within Judaism, and develop a more rigid view. Massacres of Jews in Poland and persecutions caused more problems for Jews

	Modern Judaism
1750 to Present	Following the depressing times of Shabbetai Tzevi, came the rise of what is modern Judaism. The rationalist Jewish philosopher Benedict de Spinoza, (1632-1677) a descendent of Morano Jews, was born in Amsterdam. In Amsterdam, Spinoza was influenced by European philosophers, such as Descartes and others, and he introduced concepts contrary to historical Judaism. As a result, of his questioning rabbinical concepts; he was expelled from the Amsterdam Synagogue. European Jews along with the French Revolution, were gradually being accepted and integrated into European society, as monarchies started to weaken and democratic values began. Haskala (Reason) European Jews integration into European society gave rise to a movement that waited less for national redemption through the messiah and more towards European integration. Moses Mendelssohn ((1729-1786), an orthodox Jew in Berlin, introduced into European Jewry, European Enlightenment and rationalism while still maintaining a Jewish identity. Naphtali Wessely rallied the Jewish community in 1781, establishing Jewish schools to teach secular subjects along with the Bible. German eventually replaced Hebrew in Jewish schools, and the Bible rather then the Talmud was taught. In Russia, the Enlightenment focused on making Jews part of Russian society and being Jewish a matter of personal idiosyncrasy. The Russian pogroms (massacres) of 1881, was to prove how vain the hopes of the Haskala had been. In France in 1807, Napoleon convoked a Sanhedrin (Jewish legislative council) to create a new, modern definition of Judaism. The new definition forced Judaism, to renounce a quest for nationhood, limited Rabbinic authority to spiritual issues, and to recognize civil authority over religious, in matters of intermarriage.
	Reform Judaism The modern Reform movement can trace its origins to Reform temple established in Seesen Brunswick (Germany), by the pioneer German reformer Israel Jacobson. In 1810, he introduced an organ, sermon, and prayers in German, in place of Hebrew, using the protestant churches as a template, his goal was to create an uplifting spiritual experience. Changes included, men and women sitting together and the inclusion of organ and choir music. A confirmation service replaced the Bar Mitzvah ceremony for both boys and girls. The liturgy omitted all references to a personal messiah who would restore Israel as a nation. Reform services spread from Seesen to Berlin in 1815. From there Reform practices spread to Denmark, Hamburg, Leipzig, Vienna, and Prague.

	Rabbi Abraham Geiger (1810–74) a the leading ideologists of the Reform movement, taught the essence of Judaism is belief in the one true God of all mankind, the practice of eternally valid ethical principles, and the communication of these truths to all nations of the world. Rabbi Isaac Mayer Wise (1819–1900), emigrated from Germany and established the first Reform Synagogue in 1841 in CharlestonS.C. He also established the Union of American Hebrew Congregations (1873) and The Hebrew Union College in 1875, to educate Reform rabbis. David Einhorn (1809-79) and Samuel Hirsch (1815-89) created the foundations of American Reform rabbis. In 1869, led by Samuel Hirsch, the conference of American Reform rabbis, declared Jews should no longer look forward to a return of Palestine and rejected a belief in bodily resurrection after death. By 1880, there were almost 200 Reform synagogues in the Untied States. The issue of Zionism was a controversial issue in the Reform movement until the establishment of Israel in 1948.
	Conservative Judaism Zacharias Frankel (1801-75) broke with the Reform conferences in Germany (1844-46). He rejected the modernizing efforts, holding that Judaism is bound with Jewish culture and national identity. He refused to abandon traditions and customs as nonessentials. Frankel taught historical studies could help update Written (Bible) and Oral Law (Mishna) for a more modern understanding. Mirroring Orthodoxy, Conservative Judaism upholds the Sabbath and Dietary laws with modifications when needed. In 1985, Conservative Judaism began to ordain women, causing a further break with Orthodox Judaism. Conservative Judaism stresses the study of Hebrew and Jewish nationalism as an inseparable part of Jewish culture. Conservative views vary from liberal to orthodox regarding theology and various issues. They are represented in the United States by the United Synagogue of America, the Jewish Theological Seminary, in New York City, which educates future rabbis for the Conservative movement.
	Orthodox Judaism The neo-orthodox movement responded to the Reform movement's challenge. Samson Raphael Hirsch, (1808-1881), an orthodox Rabbi led the challenge. First, he established the need for secular education along with Torah to withstand the Reform movement. Second, he established the need to break with Jewish movements, which deviated to far from Orthodoxy. There are several branches of Orthodox Judaism, including the Hasidim, meaning "pious ones". Their Charismatic leaders known as Rebbe, serve as teacher, confessor, wonder-worker, God's vicar on earth, and occasionally as atoning sacrifice. The most famous of recent years, being the Lubavich sect headed (1950–94) by the Russian-born Menachem Mendel Schneerson. The sect numbers about 200,000 in the late 20th century, and some proclaimed Menachem Schneeron as messiah. While others in the Orthodox, movement denounced him as a false-Messiah.

Jewish Movements of Today:

Terms to Know:

Jewish Diaspora are categorized as three main ethnic groups:

· Ashkenazim, the Jews of Germany and Northern France (in Hebrew, Ashkenaz)
Although strictly speaking, “Ashkenazim” refers to Jews of Germany, the term has come to refer more broadly to Jews from Central and Eastern Europe.
Although the first American Jews were Sephardic, today Ashkenazim are the most populous ethnic group in North America. The modern religious denominations developed in Ashkenazic countries, and therefore most North American synagogues use the Ashkenazic liturgy.
The Yiddish language which many speak developed from a combination of German and Hebrew.
https://www.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/jsource/Judaism/Ashkenazim.html

· Sephardim, the Jews of Iberia (in Hebrew, Sepharad) and the Spanish diaspora
Wherever Sephardim traveled, they brought with them their unique ritual customs (minhagim), language, arts, and architecture. Sephardic synagogues often retain the influence of Islam in their architecture by favoring geometric, calligraphic, and floral decorative motifs. Although they may align with the Ashkenazic religious denominations (usually Orthodoxy), the denominational identity of Sephardic synagogues is, in most cases, less strong than their ethnic identity.
Ladino, the Judeo-Spanish language, unified Jews throughout the peninsula in daily life, ritual, and song. Ladino, a blend of medieval Spanish with significant loan words from Hebrew, Arabic, and Portuguese, had both a formal, literary dialect, and numerous daily, spoken dialects which evolved during the immigrations of Sephardic Jews to new lands.

· Mizrahim, or Oriental Jews
Although often confused with Sephardim (because they share many religious customs), Mizrahim have a separate heritage. Mizrahi (in Hebrew, “Eastern” or “Oriental”) Jews come from Middle Eastern ancestry. Their earliest communities date from Late Antiquity, and the oldest and largest of these communities were in modern Iraq (Babylonia), Iran (Persia), and Yemen.
Today, most Mizrahi Jews live either in Israel or the United States. In their new homes, Mizrahim are more likely than other Jews to maintain particularly strong ties with others from their family’s nation of origin. Thus, it is not uncommon to find a specifically Persian or Bukharan synagogue. Likewise, Mizrahim are not united by a single Jewish language; each subgroup spoke its own tongue.

In Israel, political tensions continue to exist because of feelings on the part of many Sephardim that they have been discriminated against and still don’t get the respect they deserve. Historically, the political elite of the nation have been Ashkenazim; however, this is gradually changing.

When we refer to “Judaism”, we refer to the Written Torah (Five Books of Moses) and the Oral Law (the Mishna). Judaism is then synonymous with the Written and Oral Laws. We call this system “Torah”. On this point, there is no confusion or doubt.

[Source: http://www.mesora.org/FrankelConservativism.htm]

Reform and Conservative are relatively recent interpretations of Jewish tradition. Orthodox is the term the Reform movement used to describe those who refused to adapt their interpretation.

At first, there was just Torah. Jews were those who held to a tradition that their ancestors had witnessed an awesome revelation at Mount Sinai, something that changed the way they perceived the world and dealt with it. They had a written account, copiously preserved to the detail, as well as a vast oral tradition that explained that written document.

Occasionally, there were detractors who questioned the authority of the oral tradition and of the rabbis who made decisions based on Torah tradition. But the foundation of Judaism, unanimously for three thousand years, was that revelation and its implications.

With the rise of the middle class in Europe, many Jews felt a need to not look so distinct from their neighbors. In 19th century Germany, the Reform movement was born. Its leaders eventually disavowed belief in the divinity of the Torah. When in America, much of the leadership was aghast with the Reform movement’s rejection of the kosher food laws, circumcision, cessation of work on Shabbat and many other precepts of Torah, they formed the Conservative movement. They called it that because their stated goal was to conserve certain rituals they felt were characteristic elements of Judaism, while at the same time allowing those reforms necessary to make it palatable to the Jew of their times.

All along, there were those stubborn Jews who refused to change. They adopted several strategies to meet the challenges of modernity: Some took an even stricter stance than before, others made adaptations that they felt did not affect the divinity of the Torah. Still others looked for deeper meaning in Torah, turning to the mystical or spiritual aspects. All these were lumped by the break-off movements of Reform and Conservative as "orthodox"—meaning, those who won’t turn from the straight path and adapt. To this day, many Jews refuse to be labelled with this term, preferring to describe themselves as "Torah observant" or simply "Shomer Shabbos."

Since the Second World War, the Reform movement has made many major thrusts back towards tradition. In more recent years, they have re-embraced ritual and spirituality.Has orthodoxy really been unbending? Better put, is there really such a thing as Orthodox Judaism?

The best answer is that the Torah itself, being an eternal document, provides for change with built-in adaptability. Great leaders, such as Rabbi Schneur Zalman of Liadi (Chabad Chassidism), Rabbi Samson Rafael Hirsch (German Orthodoxy), Rabbi Yisroel Salanter (Mussar Movement) and Sarah Schneurer (Torah education for girls) were able to see those aspects of Torah that apply to a different era. They highlighted those areas and demonstrated their application, rather than making radical changes that challenge the foundations of Jewish faith.

Conservative Judaism believes that the Torah was revealed by God. Most Conservative Jews do not believe that every letter in the Torah is literally the word of God, in contrast with the Orthodox community that believes this to be so. That does not take any authority away from the Torah, since it has been sanctified by the Jewish people for thousands of years and therefore the Written Torah, as interpreted by the Oral Torah, lays the foundation for the development of halakhah. (Jewish Law). This authority is what Rabbi Joel Roth calls the "grundnorm"…

Read Seymour Siegel's introduction to Conservative Judaism in Jewish Law (published by the Rabbinical Assembly, N.Y.,1977) in which he stresses various aspects of the Conservative approach to halakhah, which include:

1) taking into account the historical context in which laws were codified and the historical circumstances and sociological differences that applied to each ruling;

2) the use of all the sources from the Talmud, without being limited by the Shulhan Arukh;

3) taking into account moral perspectives; and

4) recognizing halakhic pluralism, where more than one ruling may be valid if they are all grounded in halakhah.

You might also wish to consult booklet by Rabbi David Golinkin, Halakhah for our Time. It includes a chapter on "The Principles which Guide Conservative Rabbis in their Halakhic Decisions." In this chapter, Golinkin stresses Conservative Judaism's "attempt to preserve tradition as much as possible" and its recommendation for change only when the need is urgent. He also points out Conservative Judaism's preference for lenient rulings if possible, so that the Jewish people can live a life according to Jewish Law, as well as its historic -scientific analysis of the sources. Golinkin states that we are not necessarily bound by the Shulhan Arukh, yet we are committed to halakhic pluralism and to take into account the moral component of halakhah.

Conservative Judaism loosened the stringencies on Torah observance, as its founder Zechariah Frankel said, “Judaism must adapt to each cultural era”. The teachings of Zacharias Frankel (1801-75) form the foundation of Conservative Judaism. Frankel broke away from the Reform movement in Germany in the 1840s. He opined that Judaism had developed in response to the different conditions of Jewish life in various civilizations. [Source: http://www.mesora.org/FrankelConservativism.htm]

In very broad terms, I would define Conservative Judaism as a movement committed to halakhah (Jewish Law) and change (this is what Zechariah Frankel called historical positivism).

People often think that egalitarianism is at the core of Conservative Judaism, because it is a very visible change. In fact, responsa have been written on counting women in a minyan, letting her be a Shlihat Tzibur, reading the Torah, performing weddings, being ordained a rabbi, etc., but every congregation is at liberty (with the local rabbi's support) to adopt some changes, no changes or all changes, according to the convictions and feelings of that particular congregation. Therefore, some of our congregations are not fully egalitarian.

The subject of kosher cheeses is very relevant outside Israel, since there aren't kosher cheeses everywhere. This is also based on careful analysis, the responsa by Rabbi Isaac Klein z"l proves that rennit is "davar hadash" (it is like a completely new substance having undergone many chemical changes by the time it is used), which is a Talmudic concept, and therefore there would be no problem eating non hechshered hard cheeses.

No Conservative rabbi has the right to decide without halakhic backing for his decision. If he does so, it is against Conservative ideology. He/she usually decides on the basis of Conservative responsa of the Committe on Jewish Law and Standards in New York or the Va'ad Hahalakhah here in Jerusalem (or according to the classical sources and their analysis).

Having said all this, I will give you the basic distinctions regarding the other movements: Orthodox Judaism is much more conservative in its willingness to develop halakhah. In most circles the sixteenth century Shulchan Aruch is the final word, if it deals with the subject, unless faced with very urgent situations in which other considerations must be taken into account. When new issues arise, Orthodox poskim (decisors) must inevitably develop answers which use rabbinic precedents to arrive at an accepted halakhic answer (according to their understanding). The distance between rightwing Conservative and leftwing or liberal Orthodox is sometimes not too great.

Reform (Progressive) Judaism is not committed to halakhah. A Reform rabbi might want to consider what the sources have to say, but if he/she considers that a different answer is required due to ethical, sociological other reasons, he/she will be able to do so and this will be completely consistent with Reform ideology.

CONSERVATIVE IDEOLOGY differs from current Orthodox ideology as follows:

• Emphasis of actions over belief system

Conservative does not require that its adherents espouse one common, singular belief in the origin of Torah. Whether it was given to the Israelites at Mount Sinai by God's hand, or written by Moses, or authored by various prophets, or divinely inspired by founding elders, or whether it serves as the historical record of the early Israelites, or is the literary chronicle of how a small band of people attempted to be in relationship with an ineffable God – it does not matter how one finds meaning in the Torah, but that one finds the Torah meaningful.

In other words, it matters most that a person is engaged and observant of Jewish practice regardless of the motivation to do so, be that motivation any of the following: being commanded by God; being commanded by Jewish Peoplehood; wanting to feel part of a community; believing that it helps to refine character; wanting to be part of the chain that links past to future generations; because it stimulates intellectual passions; because one finds it psychologically, emotionally and physically sensible and worthy; because it provides a vehicle for societal improvement; because one's grandparents were observant; and so on.

Accordingly it does not matter why one is observant, but that one is observant.

• Embracing the human desire to question

It is not taboo to question traditional assumptions, theological claims or halachic positions – inquisitiveness is desired and welcomed, and challenges to assumptions and the status quo are neither punished nor impugned nor ostracized.

Scholars make halachic decisions, but the right – and even the responsibility – to raise the questions belongs to the community of practitioners.

• Social responsibility without borders

Traditional communities are wonderful about caring for their members' needs, whether for food/material goods, health, education, comfort, solace or celebration.

As the Western world has changed in a way that allows a greater platform for Jews, Conservative ideology advocates channeling some of our focus into leading humanity in the direction of the pursuit of justice and a sense of responsibility toward different populations.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

• The halachic nexus between tradition and modernity

Conservative allows for a robust interface of Jewish tradition with modernity to utilize the elasticity of Halacha and ensure its evolving appropriateness – a flexibility that was the hallmark of Judaism until the 17th century and that has nearly disappeared in the mainstream Orthodox world. This interface finds form in areas as relevant as kashrut, the role of women, human health, the environment, modern technologies, engagement with all the world's populations, political and social policies.

This element of Conservative ideology is grounded in the understanding that the Oral Law – the how and what of understanding the Five Books of Moses – is the partnership of the Sages with God's written law, who employ the tools God gave to humans – the instruments of intellect, emotion, psychology, wisdom, understanding, experience, precedence, skills of argumentation and of observation, the powers of analysis and of empirical evidence – and apply them to the Torah to decipher what God is telling us of how to be a Jew in the world. For this reason, unlike mainstream Orthodox colleagues, I will stand in public and proclaim that God gave the Written Law at Mount Sinai with the instruction of necessitating and requiring that there be an accompanying Oral Law whose ongoing process remains intact for every generation (precisely in keeping with Rashi's elucidation of Deuteronomy 17:9-11; with the "Oven of Achnai" episode in Baba Metzia 59b; with Moses's visit to Rabbi Akiva's class in Menahot 29b; and volumes more).

[Source: http://www.jpost.com/Opinion/Columnists/Orthodox-or-Conservative]

Orthodox Judaism holds that both Conservative and Reform Judaism have made major and unjustifiable breaks with historic Judaism, both by their skepticism of the verbal revelation of Written and Oral Torah, and by their rejection of halakhic (Jewish legal) precedent as binding (though to varying degrees). It views Pluralism as a construct of the liberal movements and does not see their ideology as rooted in historic Jewish norms.
[Source: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Relationships_between_Jewish_religious_movements]

The single most distinguishable factor that determines their differences is each movement's relationship to halachah (Jewish Law). Halachah is the system which determines how to observe the mitzvot (biblical commandments). Each of the movements embraces the mitzvot; they differ in their approach to halachah. Orthodox Judaism follows a defined set of halachot, determined by the rabbis, which are incumbent upon each individual Jew to observe in the manner prescribed by their rabbis. Conservative Judaism is also bound by halachah. However, Conservative Judaism follows a more lenient halachah determined by a committee of modern rabbis who have studied and interpreted the texts and laws for the present day. Progressive (Reformed) Judaism views halachah as a guideline rather than Divine Law, thus Progressive Jewish observance of halachah is a choice rather than an obligation. All movements call upon Jews to study and inform themselves as to what Judaism requires.

Some Features of Jewish Movements

Denominations within Judaism are referred to as movements.

In most Orthodox services, men and women sit in separate areas of the synagogue, separated by a divider called a mekhitza. The service is conducted primarily in Hebrew. Women and men have different roles in traditional Judaism: men have more public roles in religious services, whereas women have primary influence in the home and in the raising of children.

The Enlightenment in the 18th century influenced European Jews who were relatively free of persecution. This new sense of freedom spawned the beginnings of the Reform movement, which was started by Jews who wanted a modern view of their religion that would fit more easily into the world. Reform Judaism opened opportunities for women to participate in public religious rituals as men's equals. By the 1970s, the Reform Movement in the U.S. welcomed women as rabbis and cantors. English was added to the prayer service and long Hebrew prayers were shortened.

The most central shift was in theology. Reform Judaism viewed the Torah as "divinely inspired" rather than the actual word of God. As such, the laws themselves were not as important as the values they were trying to teach. Religious practices were viewed as a menu of opportunity: each person could choose for him or herself how observant to be. In recent years, there has been a return to more ritual observances.

Reform Judaism is committed to the themes of social justice in Jewish tradition and turned its energy to making these ethical views a reality. Reform Jews put an emphasis on community service and service to others as a foundation of ethically-based Judaism.

The Conservative Movement was a reaction to the dramatic changes of the Reform movement. It began in the 19th century with the feeling among some Jews that Reform Judaism had gone too far. Too many rituals had been thrown out, the Conservative Movement argued; there was virtue in the old.

Conservative Jews believe that Jewish law is, indeed, the law by which people should live. The Conservative Movement believes in taking change slowly, and with great caution, guided by Jewish law but open to modernity. Theologically, Conservative Jews believe God gave the Torah to the Jews, who interpret God's word in the context of history and contemporary society.

Conservative Judaism allows innovations in Jewish law. Services include some English. Although most of the members of this movement have accepted women as rabbis and cantors since 1985, it has been a divisive issue within the movement.

The Reconstructionist Movement began in the United States in 1922. Its founder, Rabbi Mordecai Kaplan, was for many years a prominent rabbi in the Conservative Movement. He broke away because he felt Judaism needed a new definition. To his way of thinking, Judaism was an evolving civilization based in religion. He saw Judaism as the sum of its ethical teachings, literature, history, ideals, and ways of life. Kaplan rejected the idea of the Jews being chosen by God. He also rejected the notion of a Messiah who would come to save the Jews. The entire idea of God needed to be reworked, he said: God was not an all-powerful being, but the power of our ethics and beliefs for good.

Even though the Reconstructionists are few in number, they have had a powerful intellectual impact on the Jewish community. They introduced the idea of a Bat Mitzvah for girls, the idea of Jewish community centers, and the idea of Havurot, which are small Jewish fellowships.

In some ways, though, the Reconstructionists are more traditional in practices than some members of the Reform movement. The Reconstructionists believe that ritual can help knit a community together, and connect it to the larger Jewish community.

Humanistic Judaism embraces a human-centered philosophy that combines the celebration of Jewish culture and identity with an adherence to humanistic values and ideas. Humanistic Judaism offers a nontheistic alternative in contemporary Jewish life. It was established by Rabbi Sherwin T. Wine in 1963 in Detroit, Michigan, to provide a home for humanistic, secular, and cultural Jews. Today, Humanistic Judaism is a worldwide movement.

Jewish renewal is a worldwide, transdenominational movement grounded in Judaism's prophetic and mystical traditions. Jewish renewal seeks to bring creativity, relevance, joy and an all embracing awareness to spiritual practice, as a path to healing our hearts and finding balance and wholeness - tikkun halev. Jewish renewal acts to fully include all Jews and to respect all peoples. Jewish renewal helps to heal the world by promoting justice, freedom, responsibility, caring for all life and the earth that sustains all like - tikkun olam.

Orthodox Judaism is largely defined by a firm belief that the Torah and the laws contained within it are of divine authority, and therefore should be subjected to a strict interpretation and observance. Members believe that the Torah comprises the laws that shall govern the covenant made by God with the Children of Israel. Orthodox Judaism is a large branch of Judaism, and until fairly recently, most Jews could be said to be Orthodox.

It wasn't until the Reform movement that large numbers of Jews departed from more traditional Orthodox teachings. Reform Jews, who focus on the concept of ethical monotheism, believe that only the ethical laws of the Torah are binding. Additionally, they believe that other laws, like those laws in the Talmud, were products of their time and place, and so it was not necessary to treat them as absolute.

In the late-19th and early-20th century, the Orthodox movement itself underwent some changes. Newer Orthodox Jews tried to integrate the teachings of the Torah into modern life, making some concessions and adaptations to better mesh with contemporary technologies and practices. At the same time, other Orthodox Jews rejected most modern movements, and looked warily on any reinterpretations of Jewish law to make it fit into a modern context.

These "Ultra-Orthodox" Jews became known as Haredi Jews, although both of these terms are considered negative in some circles. The term is also sometimes spelled Charedi or Chareidi in English. It is important to note that members of this group do not reject the modern world or technologies entirely, but they treat adaptations of Jewish law to fit that world as very serious. Most of the differences between Haredi and Orthodox perspectives have to do with decisions of oral law as to how the Torah should be applied to a modern situation. In many broad senses, the two groups tend to agree, and it is more in the specifics that things begin to diverge.

Hasidic Judaism is a movement within Haredi Judaism that focuses on the study of the spiritual and joyful elements of the Talmud. It has its roots in the anti-Kabbalah movements of the 13th century. Hasidim focus on a loving and joyful observance of the laws laid out in the Torah, and a boundless love for everything God created. Members live in small, separate communities, and are often noted for their distinctive clothing.

This movement began in the 18th century by Rabbi Israel ben Eliezer, later known as Baal Shem Tov, the Master of the Good Name. Hasidic Judaism sets aside the earlier emphasis on studying the Torah from an academic perspective, and instead exalts the experience of it at all moments. Within the movement there are a number of sects, including the Satmar, Belz, Ger, Sanz, Puppa, Spinka, and Lubavitch.

Rejecting Reform

The actual term "Orthodox" is derived from Christian theology and was, at first, a term of reproach hurled against the traditionalists by the early Reformers at the beginning of the nineteenth century, to imply that those who failed to respond to the modernist challenge were hidebound. Eventually, however, the term was used by the traditionalists themselves as a convenient shorthand for the attitude of complete loyalty to the Jewish past, although some traditionalists prefer the term "Torah-true" to describe their religious position. In any event, Orthodoxy came to mean for Jews faithfulness to the practices of Judaism, to the halakhah (Jewish law) in its traditional formulation.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Orthodox Judaism rejects the notion introduced by Reform that, in the light of modern thought and life in Western society, Judaism required to be "reformed." Granted that the Torah is of divine origin, as the Orthodox affirm, to attempt to reform is to imply that God can change his mind, to put it somewhat crudely.

Orthodoxy also takes issue with Conservative Judaism which, unlike Reform, does accept halakhah but perceives it in a more dynamic fashion, according to which changes are legitimate if they are in the spirit of halakhah. Naturally, the Orthodox disagree with the notion that there is a halakhic spirit, in obedience to which the letter of the law can be set aside where it is considered necessary. Ultimately, the differences between the Orthodox and Conservative approach depend on whether or not there is a human element in the Torah.

There are, in fact, a variety of Orthodox approaches, from the ultra-Orthodox to neo-Orthodoxy, and it by no means follows that every Jew who belongs to an Orthodox synagogue is fully Orthodox in theory and practice. Yet all who subscribe, at least nominally, to Orthodoxy have in common that they believe the Torah is unchanging, so that while, here and there, minor changes take place in the wake of new social and economic conditions, for the Orthodox these are not really "changes" at all, but simply the application of traditional law to new situations.

To give a simple illustration of how the Orthodox attitude differs from those of Reform and Conservative Judaism, Reform maintains that the conditions of modern life demand a relaxation of the traditional Sabbath laws, Orthodoxy that no relaxation is possible, while Conservative Judaism allows those relaxations which can be defended on halakhic grounds if halakhah itself is treated in a more flexible way than it was in the past.

A Reform Jew will not usually be bothered by such prohibitions as that of producing light and fire on the Sabbath. A Conservative Jew will accept that the biblical prohibition of lighting a fire on the Sabbath is still binding but will not (necessarily) accept that to switch on an electric light involves lighting a fire. An Orthodox Jew will hold not only that the biblical prohibition still applies but also that it embraces switching-on of electric lights.

The Ultra-Orthodox

This rather ridiculous term is often used, nowadays, to denote the attitude of strict adherence to all of the details of the traditional law. A term preferred by the "ultra-Orthodox" themselves is Haredim ("those who fear God") based on the verse: "Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble [ha-haredim] at his word (Isaiah 66:5)."

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

In the ranks of the Haredim belong all of the Hasidic groups (Hasidism is a pietist movement founded by Israel Ba'al Shem Tov in the first half of the 18th century.); the Yeshiva world; Ashkenazi Jews who try to preserve intact the way of life followed in (pre-modern) eastern Europe; and Oriental and other Sephardi Jews who follow faithfully the pattern of life in the pre-modern communities of the East.

The actual pattern of life differs of course, among the Haredim. The Hasidic ideal is different from that of the Yeshiva world, an Oriental Jew hardly resembles a typical Jew of Eastern European background. But all the Haredim have in common a total dedication to Torah in its traditional form and believe that the secular world is best kept at arm's length.

Neo-Orthodoxy

The basic difference between neo-Orthodoxy and the Haredim is the attitude taken toward modern culture. The founder of Neo-Orthodoxy, Samson Raphael Hirsch, though strictly observant, held that Western culture and other details of Western society should not be embraced solely in order to earn a living and the like, but welcomed as good in themselves.

Neo-Orthodoxy, or Modern Orthodoxy as it is called in the US, is represented in the majority of Orthodox synagogues in the US and England, with its major institutions for the training of Modern Orthodox rabbis being Yeshiva University in New York and Jews' College in London.

Orthodox Self-Definition

Orthodoxy is less an organized movement than a reaction to other groups. There is much internecine feuding, for example, among the Orthodox, and there is nothing like any official world organization for Orthodox Judaism.

It is probably true to say that, for most of its adherents, Orthodoxy means simply that one's own true religious traditions are followed, whether Hasidic or Mitnagdic (that of opponents of Hasidism in the eighteenth century and beyond), Ashkenazi or Sephardi.

The real issue on the level of practice between the Orthodox and the non-Orthodox is whether the tradition needs to be revised in some respects. The Orthodox rightly claim that theirs is the Judaism of tradition as followed in the pre-modern era. But this is precisely the question. Is the pre-modern tradition true to the tradition as it is now required to be interpreted? To what extent, in other words, is "traditional" Judaism traditional?

Jewish Orthodox Movements:

Orthodox vs Haredi vs Hassidic vs …
Haredi Judaism, Hasidic Judaism, and Orthodox Judaism are all names for different religious movements within the Jewish faith. The three can be looked at as a family, with Haredi Judaism existing as a subset of Orthodox Judaism, and Hasidic Judaism existing as a further subset of the subset. The difference is really one of specific beliefs, and a matter of degree, rather than any sweeping large generalization. All three sects agree on the importance of God's word and laws, but they choose to adhere to those laws in slightly different ways.

Orthodox Judaism is largely defined by a firm belief that the Torah and the laws contained within it are of divine authority, and therefore should be subjected to a strict interpretation and observance. Members believe that the Torah comprises the laws that shall govern the covenant made by God with the Children of Israel. Orthodox Judaism is a large branch of Judaism, and until fairly recently, most Jews could be said to be Orthodox.

Orthodox Judaism believes that both the Written and Oral Torah are of divine origin, containing the exact words of God without any human influence. Orthodox Judaism is the only movement that has preserved the mystical foundations of Jewish theology, referred to as Kabbalah.

It wasn't until the Reform movement that large numbers of Jews departed from more traditional Orthodox teachings. Reform Jews, who focus on the concept of ethical monotheism, believe that only the ethical laws of the Torah are binding. Additionally, they believe that other laws, like those laws in the Talmud, were products of their time and place, and so it was not necessary to treat them as absolute.

Jewish -> Orthodox -> [Ultra-Orthodox -> Haredi (Charedi)] -> Hassidic (Chassidic)

Hasidism comprises part of contemporary Haredi Judaism, alongside the previous Talmudic Lithuanian-Yeshiva approach and the Sephardi and Mizrahi traditions. [Source: Wikipedia]

Haredi Judaism is the most theologically conservative form of Judaism. Haredi Judaism is often translated as ultra-orthodox Judaism, although Haredi Jews themselves object to this translation. They simply refer to themselves as Jews, and they consider more liberal forms of Judaism to be unauthentic.

Haredi is a Modern Hebrew adjective derived from the Biblical verb hared which appears in the Book of Isaiah (66:2; its plural haredim appears in Isaiah 66:5) and is translated as "[one who] trembles" at the word of God. The word connotes an awe-inspired fear and anxiety to perform the will of God and is used to describe staunchly Orthodox Jews (similar to the definition used by the Christian Quakers) and to distinguish them from other Orthodox Jews. The word Haredi is increasingly being used in the Jewish diaspora in place of the term "ultra-Orthodox", which some view as inaccurate or offensive, it being seen as a derogatory term suggesting extremism; English-language alternatives that have been proposed include "fervently Orthodox" and "strictly Orthodox" [Source: Wikipedia]

Hasidic Judaism (Hasidim) is one movement within Haredi Judaism.

Now, what are Hasidim? The Hasidic movement started in Eastern Europe in the late 1700s. It stressed joy in worship – Hasidic men dance in a circle for hours in festivals – and the study of mysticism, of seeking union with God. The founder of the Hasidim, the Baal Shem Tov, found holiness everywhere, especially in nature. Many of the Ultra-Orthodox of that era bitterly opposed the Hasidim, because they thought that the Hasidim de-emphasized the study of sacred texts and were undignified in their celebrations. Also, Hasidim tend to be more devoted to their “rebbes,” sometimes believing that they have almost-supernatural powers.

In New York, the Hasidim are the most visible Ultra-Orthodox Jews, although there are others, such as the Breuers in Washington Heights. There are significant distinctions between the Hasidic sects in Brooklyn. For example, the Satmar in Williamsburg are very anti-Israel, while the Lubavitchers in Crown Heights are pro-Israel. Also, the Lubavitchers actively engage in outreach to non-Orthodox Jews, seeking to educate them about religious observance, while the Satmar and many other sects basically separate themselves from outsiders.

http://www.brooklyneagle.com/articles/opinion-ultra-orthodox-jews%E2%80%99-who-are-they-2013-03-28-163000

The Hasidic movement is unique in its focus on the joyful observance of God’s commandments (mitzvot), heartfelt prayer and boundless love for God and the world He created. Many ideas for asidism derived from Jewish mysticism (Kabbalah).

Chasidism, founded in Europe by the Baal Shem Tov, believes that acts of kindness and prayer could be used to reach God, as opposed to the older view that one could only become a righteous Jew through rigorous learning. The word Chasid describes a person who does chesed (good deeds for others). Chasidic Jews dress distinctively, live separately from modern society, and are dedicated to strict observance of Jewish Law.

Hasidism arises in the 18th cent in Poland as a revivalist folk movement. It is more emotional than intellectual, honors charismatic leaders more than rabbis, and emphasizes a joyful spirit and moral living. Hasidism centers around the claim that all people can have an experiential connection with God and can involve themselves with tikkun ha-olam "repairing the world" or recovering the sparks. Hasidism is sometimes called "kaballah for the people" not just the elite.

New Age religion has absorbed certain aspects of kabbalah and even produced its own versions of this form of Jewish mysticism. Indeed, many forms of kabbalah exist today in the West. More truly "Jewish" versions are pitched as a renewal movement within the faith, targeted to non-traditional Jews. The mystical notion of tikkun ha-olam permeates contemporary Judaism, and many see mystical versions of the faith as the best way to keep vitality and energy in the religion.

There is Modern Orthodox, which is abiding the laws of the Torah while still living in the current, secular world.
Going off from Orthodox, there are Chassidic groups, who came off from the teachings of Baal Shem Tov, often seen as the 'father of Hasidim". He passed it on to the Maggid (Reb. Dov Ber Friedman), and then broke off into many different Hasidic dynasties, such as Chabad, Breslov, Carlebach, etc.
Chassids usually live in Chassidic comunities, and uphold the laws very strictly. They are more insular than Modern Orthodox Jews.
Chassidic Judaism is also more 'mystical' (I guess), many with their own books about Kabbalah (real Kabbalah, not Madonna + Hollywood's Kabbalah), such as the Tanya (Chabad).

Conservative is deliberately non-fundementalist, less strict, but still upholds many of the laws.
Reform - less strict than Conservative - the mitzvot (commandments) are left to the individual to determine who they fit into one's life (some, of course are firm - worship of G-d and G-d alone). They drive to synagogue on the Sabbath and men and some women wear the kippah at synagogue and prayer but it's optional (most of the Jewish males I know where the kippah)

The Samaritans regard themselves as direct descendants of the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh in the northern Kingdom of Israel, which was conquered by Assyria in 722 BCE.

Properly, Samaritans are inhabitants of Samaria. The name is now restricted to a small tribe of people living in Nablus (Shechem) and calling themselves "Bene Yisrael," or sometimes שמרים. Their history as a distinct community begins with the taking of Samaria by the Assyrians in 722 B.C.

From the fifth century B.C. onward the relations between the Jews and the Samaritans were, as shown above, undoubtedly hostile. The opposition was, however, essentially political, the old rivalry between Israel and Judah persisting; personal relations must have been mutually tolerant, as appears from the Gospels, where, in spite of their contemptuous attitude, the disciples buy food in a Samaritan city (John iv. 8). Later on, when misfortune befell Jerusalem, when the Temple was destroyed, and the temporal hopes of Judah were shattered, political opposition ceased to have any reason for existence. In the Mishnah it is evident that the differences have already become purely religious. The grounds for them are clear.

[Source: http://www.jewishencyclopedia.com/articles/13059-samaritans]

The Samaritans were people who lived in what had been the Northern Kingdom of Israel. Samaria, the name of that kingdom's capital, was located between Galilee in the north and Judea in the south. The Samaritans were a racially mixed society with Jewish and pagan ancestry. Although they worshiped Yahweh as did the Jews, their religion was not mainstream Judaism. They accepted only the first five books of the Bible as canonical, and their temple was on Mount Gerazim instead of on Mount Zion in Jerusalem (John 4:20 [v19-23]).

> JOHN: [19] The woman said to Him, "Sir, I perceive that You are a prophet. [20] "Our fathers worshiped on this mountain, and you Jews say that in Jerusalem is the place where one ought to worship." [21] Jesus said to her, "Woman, believe Me, the hour is coming when you will neither on this mountain, nor in Jerusalem, worship the Father. [22] "You worship what you do not know; we know what we worship, for salvation is of the Jews. [23] "But the hour is coming, and now is, when the true worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and truth; for the Father is seeking such to worship Him. [24] "God is Spirit, and those who worship Him must worship in spirit and truth."
> [NJKV]

The Samaritans of Jesus' day were strict monotheists. In some respects they were more strict than Jews about the commands of the Mosaic law, especially the Sabbath regulations, but they did not share the Jewish stricture against pronouncing the divine name Yahweh in their oaths.

Karaite: Karaites consider themselves to be part of the oldest branch of Judaism.
[see: http://www.karaite-korner.org/history.shtml]

Most streams of modern Judaism developed from the Pharisee movement, which became known as Rabbinic Judaism (in Hebrew Yahadut Rabanit - יהדות רבנית) with the compilation of the oral law into Mishna. After the destruction of the Second Temple and the Bar Kokhba revolt, the other movements disappeared from the historical record.

Karaite Judaism or Karaism (/ˈkærə.aɪt/ or /ˈkærə.ɪzəm/; Hebrew: יהדות קראית , Modern Yahadut Qara'it, Tiberian Qārāʾîm ; meaning "Readers (of the Hebrew Scriptures)")[a] is a Jewish movement characterized by the recognition of the Tanakh alone as its supreme legal authority in Halakha (Jewish religious law) and theology. It is distinct from mainstream Rabbinic Judaism, which considers the Oral Torah, as codified in the Talmud and subsequent works to be authoritative interpretations of the Torah. Karaites maintain that all of the divine commandments handed down to Moses by God were recorded in the written Torah without additional Oral Law or explanation.

As a result, Karaite Jews do not accept as binding the written collections of the oral tradition in the Midrash or Talmud. When interpreting the Tanakh, Karaites strive to adhere to the plain or most obvious meaning ("peshat") of the text; this is not necessarily the literal meaning, but rather the meaning that would have been naturally understood by the ancient Israelites when the books of the Tanakh were first written. In contrast, Rabbinic Judaism relies on the legal rulings of the Sanhedrin as they are codified in the Midrash, Talmud, and other sources to indicate the authentic meaning of the Torah. Karaite Judaism holds every interpretation of the Tanakh to the same scrutiny regardless of its source, and teaches that it is the personal responsibility of every individual Jew to study the Torah, and ultimately decide for themselves its correct meaning. Therefore, Karaites may consider arguments made in the Talmud and other works without exalting them above other viewpoints.

Karaite Judaism (Hebrew: Kara'im – קראים – "readers") started in the 9th Century when Anan Ben David and his followers rejected the oral law. Modern Karaites accept only the Tanakh as divinely inspired, not recognizing the authority of the Talmud and the Midrashim.

In the 10th century, the Karaites were believed to have comprised about 10% of the world's Jewish population. At the time of the traveler Benjamin of Tudela in the 12th century, Karaites were widely dispersed around the eastern Mediterranean, both in Islamic areas and the Byzantine Empire. Benjamin describes Karaite communities in many of the places he visited.

In the early 20th century, small Karaite communities remained in Egypt, Turkey, the Crimea, and Lithuania. Today, there are about 50,000 Karaite Jews in the world, most of whom live in Israel. Traditionally, Rabbinic Judaism has regarded the Karaites as Jewish, but with an incorrect philosophical understanding of the Torah.

(Source: Wikipedia)

The Karaites (בני מקרא ,בעלי מקרא ,קראים) = "Followers of the Bible") were a Jewish sect, professing, in its religious observances and opinions, to follow the Bible to the exclusion of rabbinical traditions and laws. But Karaism in fact adopted a large part of rabbinical Judaism, either outright or with more or less modification, while at the same time it borrowed from earlier or later Jewish sects—Sadducees, Essenes, 'Isawites, Yudghanites, etc.—as well as from the Mohammedans. The founder of the sect being Anan, his followers were at first called Ananites, but as the doctrines of the sect were more fully developed, and it gradually emancipated itself from Ananism, they took the name of "Karaites," a term first used by Benjamin al-Nahawendi ("Ba'ale Miḳra" at the end of his "Sefer Linim") and in a quotation in "Yefet."

Mizrahi Jews or Mizrahim (Hebrew: מזרחים) or Mashriqiyyun (Arabic: المشرقيون), also referred to as Edot HaMizrach (עֲדוֹת-הַמִּזְרָח; Communities of the East; Mizrahi Hebrew: ʿEdot(h) Ha(m)Mizraḥ), Ben ha-Mizraḥ; Bene ha-Mizraḥ ("Sons of the East") or Oriental Jews are Jews descended from local Jewish communities of the Middle East (as opposed to those from Europe, Africa and other places). The term Mizrahi is most commonly used in Israel to refer to Jews who trace their roots back to Muslim-majority countries. This includes descendants of Babylonian Jews from modern Iraq, Syria, Bahrain, Kuwait, Dagestan, Azerbaijan, Iran, Lebanon, Uzbekistan, Kurdistan, Afghanistan and Pakistan. Yemenite and Georgian Jews are usually included within the Mizrahi Jews group. Some also expand the definition of Mizrahim to Maghrebi and Sephardic. Furthermore, some even reclassify the whole Israeli Jewish society as "Mizrahi" as compared with the Western Jews of Europe and the Americas.

The use of the term Mizrahi can be somewhat controversial. Before the establishment of the state of Israel, Mizrahi Jews did not identify themselves as a separate ethnic subgroup. Instead, Mizrahi Jews generally characterized themselves as Sephardi, because they follow the traditions of Sephardic Judaism (although with some differences among the minhagim of the particular communities). This has resulted in a conflation of terms, particularly in Israel, and in religious usage, where "Sephardi" is used in a broad sense to include Mizrahi Jews and Maghrebi Jews as well as Sephardim proper. Indeed, from the point of view of the official Israeli rabbinate, any rabbis of Mizrahi origin in Israel are under the jurisdiction of the Sephardi Chief Rabbi of Israel. Today those of Sephardic rite make up more than half of Israel's Jewish population, and Mizrahi Jews proper are a major part of them. Before the mass immigration of over one million people from the former Soviet Union, mostly of Ashkenazi descent, followers of the Sephardic rite made up over 70% of Israel's Jewish population. Mizrahi Jews make up the largest ethnic group in Israel. As of 2005, 61% of Israeli Jews are of Mizrahi ancestry

Chasidim and Mitnagdim

In the 1700s, the first of the modern movements developed in Eastern Europe. This movement, known as Chasidism (Hasidism), was founded by Israel ben Eliezer, more commonly known as the Baal Shem Tov or the Besht. Before Chasidism, Judaism emphasized education as the way to get closer to G-d. Chasidism emphasized other, more personal experiences and mysticism as alternative routes to G-d.

Chasidism was considered a radical movement at the time it was founded. There was strong opposition from those who held to the pre-existing view of Judaism. Those who opposed Chasidism became known as mitnagdim (opponents), and disputes between the Chasidim and the mitnagdim were often brutal. Today, the Chasidim and the mitnagdim are relatively unified in their opposition to the liberal modern movements. Orthodoxy and even the liberal movements of Judaism today have been strongly influenced by Chasidic teachings.

Chasidic sects are organized around a spiritual leader called a Rebbe or a tzaddik, a person who is considered to be more enlightened than other Jews. A Chasid consults his Rebbe about all major life decisions.

Chasidism continues to be a vital movement throughout the world. The Lubavitcher Chasidim are very vocal with a high media presence (see their website, Chabad.org), but there are many other active Chasidic sects today. For example, Breslov, Satmar and Bobover.

Jewish Movements in the United States Today

Approximately 5 million of the world's 13 million Jews live in the United States. There are basically three major movements in the U.S. today: Reform, Conservative and Orthodox. Some people also include a fourth movement, the Reconstructionist movement, although that movement is substantially smaller than the other three. Orthodox and sometimes Conservative are described as "traditional" movements. Reform, Reconstructionist, and sometimes Conservative are described as "liberal" or "modern" movements.

Orthodoxy is actually made up of several different groups. It includes the modern Orthodox, who have largely integrated into modern society while maintaining observance of halakhah (Jewish Law), the Chasidim, who live separately and dress distinctively (commonly, but erroneously, referred to in the media as the "ultra-Orthodox"), and the Yeshivish Orthodox, who are neither Chasidic nor modern. The Orthodox movements are all very similar in belief, and the differences are difficult for anyone who is not Orthodox to understand. They all believe that G-d gave Moses the whole Torah at Mount Sinai. The "whole Torah" includes both the Written Torah (the first five books of the Bible) and the Oral Torah, an oral tradition interpreting and explaining the Written Torah. They believe that the Torah is true, that it has come down to us intact and unchanged. They believe that the Torah contains 613 mitzvot binding upon Jews but not upon non-Jews. This web site is written primarily from the modern Orthodox point of view. The 2000 National Jewish Population Survey (NJPS) performed by the Council of Jewish Federations found that 10% of American Jews identify themselves as Orthodox, including 21% of those who belong to a synagogue.

Reform Judaism does not believe that the Torah was written by G-d. The movement accepts the critical theory of Biblical authorship: that the Bible was written by separate sources and redacted together. Reform Jews do not believe in observance of commandments as such, but they retain much of the values and ethics of Judaism, along with some of the practices and the culture. The original, basic tenets of American Reform Judaism were set down in the Pittsburgh Platform. Many non-observant, nominal, and/or agnostic Jews will identify themselves as Reform when pressed to specify simply because Reform is the most liberal movement, but that is not really a fair reflection on the movement as a whole. There are plenty of Reform Jews who are religious in a Reform way. The NJPS found that 35% of American Jews identify themselves as Reform, including 39% of those who belong to a synagogue. There are approximately 900 Reform synagogues in the United States and Canada. For more information about Reform Judaism, see The Union for Reform Judaism.

Conservative Judaism grew out of the tension between Orthodoxy and Reform. It was formally organized as the United Synagogue of Conservative Judaism in by Dr. Solomon Schechter in 1913, although its roots in the Jewish Theological Seminary of America stretch back into the 1880s. Conservative Judaism maintains that the truths found in Jewish scriptures and other Jewish writings come from G-d, but were transmitted by humans and contain a human component. Conservative Judaism generally accepts the binding nature of halakhah, but believes that the Law should change and adapt, absorbing aspects of the predominant culture while remaining true to Judaism's values. In my experience, there is a great deal of variation among Conservative synagogues. Some are indistinguishable from Reform, except that they use more Hebrew; others are practically Orthodox, except that men and women sit together. Some are very traditional in substance, but not in form; others are traditional in form but not in substance. This flexibility is deeply rooted in Conservative Judaism, and can be found within their own Statement of Principles, Emet ve-Emunah. The NJPS found that 26% of American Jews identify themselves as Conservative, including 33% of those who belong to a synagogue. There are approximately 750 Conservative synagogues in the world today.

Reconstructionist Judaism is theoretically an outgrowth of Conservative, but it doesn't fit neatly into the traditional/liberal, observant/non-observant continuum that most people use to classify movements of Judaism. Reconstructionists believe that Judaism is an "evolving religious civilization." They do not believe in a personified deity that is active in history, and they do not believe that G-d chose the Jewish people. From this, you might assume that Reconstructionism is to the left of Reform; yet Reconstructionism lays a much greater stress on Jewish observance than Reform Judaism. Reconstructionists observe the halakhah if they choose to, not because it is a binding Law from G-d, but because it is a valuable cultural remnant. Reconstructionism is a very small movement but seems to get a disproportionate amount of attention, probably because there are a disproportionate number of Reconstructionists serving as rabbis to Jewish college student organizations and Jewish Community Centers. Everyone I know seems to have had a Reconstructionist rabbi at college or in a community center, yet according to the NJPS, only about 2% of the Jews in America identify themselves as Reconstructionist. Reconstructionist numbers are, in fact, so small that the NJPS advises caution in interpreting the statistics. There are about a hundred Reconstructionist synagogues world-wide. See the homepage of the Jewish Reconstructionist Movement.

Though most Jews do not have any theological objections to praying in the synagogues of other movements, liberal services are not "religious" enough or "Jewish" enough for traditional Jews, and traditional services are too long, too conservative, and often basically incomprehensible to liberal Jews (because traditional services are primarily, if not exclusively, in Hebrew). Some Orthodox will not attend liberal services because of the mixed seating arrangements and because the liberal prayer book cuts many required prayers.

I have been to services in Reform, Conservative, and Orthodox synagogues, and I have found that while there are substantial differences in length, language, and choice of reading materials, the overall structure is surprisingly similar. See Jewish Liturgy for more information about prayer services.

Movements in Israel Today

Approximately 5 million Jews live in Israel. Orthodoxy is the only movement that is formally and legally recognized in Israel. Until very recently, only Orthodox Jews could serve on religious councils. The Orthodox rabbinate in Israel controls matters of personal status, such as marriage, conversion and divorce.

The other American movements have some degree of presence in Israel, but for the most part, Israelis do not formally identify themselves with a movement. Most Israelis describe themselves more generally in terms of their degree of observance, rather than in terms of membership in an organized movement.

More than half of all Israelis describe themselves as hiloni (secular). About 15-20 percent describe themselves as haredi (ultra-Orthodox) or dati (Orthodox). The rest describe themselves as masorti (traditionally observant, but not as dogmatic as the Orthodox). It is important to remember, however, that the masorti and hiloni of Israel tend to be more observant than their counterparts in America. For example, the hiloni of Israel often observe some traditional practices in a limited way, such as lighting Shabbat candles, limiting their activities on Shabbat, or keeping kosher to some extent, all of which are rare among American Reform Jews, and unheard of among American Jews who describe themselves as secular. It has been said that most Israelis don't belong to a synagogue, but the synagogue they don't belong to is Orthodox.

The Meaning of "Semitic"

The word Semitic describes the people who came from the Middle East and their languages. Arabs and Jews are both Semitic. Christianity is a Semitic religion because it originated in the Middle East. When we speak about the Semitic religions, we are referring to Judaism, Islam, and Christianity.

Jewish Practices and Rituals [Today]

In Judaism, rituals and religious observances are grounded in Jewish law (halakhah, lit. "the path one walks." An elaborate framework of divine mitzvot, or commandments, combined with rabbinic laws and traditions, this law is central to Judaism.

Halakhah governs not just religious life, but daily life, from how to dress to what to eat to how to help the poor. Observance of halakhah shows gratitude to God, provides a sense of Jewish identity and brings the sacred into everyday life.

In addition, the Jewish religion recognizes several significant occasions in a person's life. While many times the individual is the focus of the festivities, the family, and in many cases the entire community, participate in the commemoration. These special events are some of the most important practices of Judaism.

The Mitzvot

The Hebrew word mitzvot means "commandments" (mitzvah is its singular form). Although the word is sometimes used more broadly to refer to rabbinic (Talmudic) law or general good deeds ("It would be a mitzvah to visit your mother"), in its strictest sense it refers to the divine commandments given by God in the Torah.

The 613 Commandments

The important Jewish philosopher Maimonides made a list of the 613 commandments he found in the Jewish Bible, and here they are.

Rabbinic Law

In addition to the 613 mitzvot, Jewish law incorporates a large body of rabbinical rules and laws. These are considered just as binding as the mitzvot, although the punishments for violating them are less severe. Another difference is that it is possible, though unlikely, for the rabbinical laws to be changed, but no rabbi can change the Torah mitzvot. The rabbinical portion of halakhah falls into three groups: a gezeirah, takkanah, and minhag.

The Synagogue

The Jewish house of worship is a synagogue. The synagogue predates the destruction of the Second Temple, but it became central to religious life after the Temple was lost. The synagogue replaces ritual sacrifice with Torah readings, prayer and teaching.

Jewish Worship and Prayer

Guide to characteristics of Jewish worship and prayer, the weekday and Sabbath prayer services and etiquette for visitors.

Keeping Kosher: Jewish Dietary Laws

One of the most well-known Jewish religious practices is that of eating kosher foods. The laws of kashrut (Jewish dietary laws) may be puzzling or meaningless to the outsider, but they have held great meaning for the Jewish people throughout their history. Not only are they an opportunity for obedience to God, they also strongly contribute to Jewish unity and identity.

What is a Bar Mitzvah and Bat Mitzvah?

In Judaism, children are not required to observe the 613 commandments, though they are certainly encouraged and taught to do so. But upon turning 13-years-old, a boy is considered an adult under the law and is expected to obey all the commandments from then on. He has become a Bar Mitzvah, or "Son of the Commandments." Similarly, a girl becomes a Bat Mitzvah, "daughter of the commandment," upon turning 12-years old.

In addition to conveying moral responsibility, according to Jewish beliefs, the new status enables the young person to lead religious services, count towards a minyan (a quota of ten required for some religious services), enter into contracts and marry. {1} This does not mean, however, that Jewish law considers boys of 13 or girls of 12 ready to marry and strike out on their own, not even in Jewish history. The Talmud states that 18 is the proper age for marriage and 20 is the proper age to begin earning a living {2}.

The age of 12 or 13 is simply the time at which a young person becomes responsible under religious law and has met the minimum qualification for marriage. (This is not so different from secular law: in many states, children may marry as young as 14 with their parents' permission.)

The Ceremonies of Jewish Youth

A Jewish youth automatically becomes a Bar or Bat Mitzvah upon reaching the appropriate age. The accompanying ceremonies are not necessary to attain this status, and they are not mentioned in the Torah or Talmud. They are actually a relatively recent invention, especially the elaborate nature of the celebration.

In its earliest observance, the rite of passage was marked by a boy's first reciting of the aliyah (benediction over the Torah reading), at the first Sabbath service after the 13th birthday.

These duties have gradually increased over the years, and may now include reciting the haftarah (selection from the Prophets), reading the entire weekly Torah portion, leading part of the service, or leading prayers.

It is also customary for the youth to make a short speech, which usually begins with the words, "Today I have become a man [or woman]." The father then says a blessing, thanking God for removing from him the burden of responsibility for his child 's sins. This ceremony is usually followed by a reception, which can be as elaborate as a wedding reception.

In Orthodox Jewish and Hasidic communities, there is no Bat Mitzvah ceremony, as women do not participate in the religious service, but parties are sometimes held marking the occasion. In Reform and some Conservative synagogues, girls participate in just the same way as boys.

In Judaism, a minyan (Hebrew: מִנְיָן [minʿjan] lit. noun count, number; pl. מִנְיָנִים minyanim [minjanʿim]) is the quorum of ten Jewish adults required for certain religious obligations. According to many Orthodox streams of Judaism, adult females do not count in the minyan. [Source: Wikipedia]

Was NT Judaism the Religion of Moses?

How much do you know about the Jewish sects mentioned in your New Testament -- the Pharisees, Sadducees, Scribes, and the Herodians and Zealots? Were they all really YEHOVAH God's Old Testament Church?

by E. Martin

People assume that Judaism is the religion of Moses -- that Yeshua brought a message opposed to the Old Testament -- that he came to nullify the teaching of Moses. It is taken for granted that the New Testament presents a Gentile religion and that the Old Testament teaches Judaism!

Yet all these assumptions ARE ABSOLUTELY FALSE! Shocking though it may seem, history proves that Judaism is NOT the religion of the Old Testament Scriptures. Judaism is plainly and simply the religion of the Jews -- a religion manufactured by their own ingenuity. The Jews of Roman times had appropriated the name of Moses as the author of their religion -- but in actuality, they had rejected Moses. Yeshua said: "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me ... but ye believe not his writings" (John 5:46, 47). The Jews used the name of Moses, but they didn't practice what he commanded.

Just as today, there are hundreds of denominations and sects in what is commonly called Christianity, all appropriating the name of the Messiah -- saying they are Christian -- but contradicting each other and failing to practice what he taught! And history proves that the Jews had misappropriated the name of Moses.

In effect, Judaism was a man-made religion! Yeshua said that they were "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men" (Mark 7:7).

It is time we looked into the records of history. It is time we learned how the Jews departed from the religion of Moses. We will be dumbfounded to discover that Yeshua, in reality, re-emphasized the message that Moses brought -- in its true spiritual INTENTION. And, instead of nullifying Moses' teaching, he magnified it, having in view the true spiritual purpose originally intended.

The time has come to get our eyes open to the facts! Judaism was not, and is not, the religion of Moses!

IT IS obvious to the most superficial reader of the New Testament that a fundamental difference existed between the teaching of Yeshua and the Judaism of his day.

Why?

The answer is surprising!

... Points to Remember

Let us summarize the religious condition of the Jews during the time of the Messiah.

Out of a total population of about 3,000,000 Jews in Palestine, there were only about 6,000 Pharisees, about 3,000 Sadducees, 4,000 Essenes, and a few thousand representing the other sects of Judaism. Those belonging to the religious sects represented only a mere fragment of the population -- less than 5% of the total population.

The evidence shows that, relatively speaking, very few of the Jews attended the synagogues each Sabbath. The synagogues were just too small or there were not enough of them to allow all to attend.

Of the sects themselves, the Pharisees, the major group, WERE DIVIDED into many opposing divisions. Nor were the Sadducees a unified group, for there WERE MANY VARIETIES OF BELIEFS AMONG THEM. The Essenes and Qumran, by their own writings, were not a uniform group, BUT WERE DIVIDED INTO VARIOUS ELEMENTS OF BELIEF. The rest of the sects were minor in importance. Even the writings of the Apocalyptics show a variety of opinions. They certainly did not agree with one another -- and especially they did not agree with the Bible.

Among all these differing sects we find some keeping the traditions of the elders. Some believed in asceticism; others repudiated it. There was disagreement over the rituals, marriage, the Sacred Calendar, the correct observance of the Holy Days, etc. In fact, the points of disagreement were virtually INNUMERABLE.

About the only things held in common by them all were some kind of observance of the Sabbath, the rite of circumcision, the calling of Israel "a chosen people" and the expectancy of the Messiah. However, even in these fundamental doctrines there were countless shades of interpretations.

The condition of the Jews in New Testament times can best be described by the statement in the Bible: "every man did that which was right in his own eyes" (Judges 21:25).

There is no question but that the religion of the Jews, as taught by the differing sects, was not the religion that YEHOVAH God gave Moses. In truth, the message that the Messiah brought re-emphasized the religion of Moses IN ITS TRUE SPIRITUAL INTENT, and to give it to a people who had forgotten the true spiritual application of the Law!

THE religious condition of the Jews during the time of the Messiah had not evolved in just a few years. It took over 200 years for Judaism to firmly implant itself in Palestine.

If we are to adequately understand the full development of Judaism, we will have to go back in history over 500 years before the Messiah. In these centuries history shows why and how "Judaism" replaced the Law of Moses as the religion of the Jews!

The Babylonian Captivity

The proper place to begin a study of the development of Judaism is with the Babylonian captivity of the Jews.

Between the years of 604 B.C. and 585 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar, king of the Babylonians, made war with the Kingdom of Judah. The Jews were not successful in any or the skirmishes with the Babylonians. In the first years of this war, Nebuchadnezzar carried away the majority of the Jews from Judah to Babylon. At the end of the war, in 585 B.C., ALL THE JEWS, except those under Gedaliah, were finally carried to Babylon. And even those under Gedaliah finally fled Palestine. This was a complete captivity.

The Babylonian captivity came to an end with the downfall of the Babylonian Empire in October 539 B.C. Isaiah had prophesied, about 200 years before, that Cyrus, the king of Persia, would be responsible for the overthrow of Babylon and for making it possible for the Jews to return to Palestine (Isa. 45:1-4). Thus, Cyrus and his armies captured the capital of the Empire and Babylon was absorbed into the Persian Empire.

Cyrus was so betook over the exact prophecy by Isaiah concerning himself, that he determined to honor the God who had granted him victory over the Babylonians. He issued an edict that the Jews who had been carried captive by the Babylonians could return to Palestine and rebuild the Temple of YEHOVAH God (II Chron. 36:22, 23; Ezra 1:1,2).

The issuance of this decree resulted in about 50,000 Jews later returning to Palestine. These Jews were under the leadership of two men. Zerubbabel, a descendant of David, and Joshua, the High Priest. The reason for the Jews' return was to rebuild the Temple, which had been destroyed by the Babylonians, and to again establish the true worship of YEHOVAH God. The books of Haggai and Zechariah were written during the period when these Jews were returning to Palestine and during the building of the Temple. These books describe the condition of the Jews at this time…

Jews in Babylon

… The story of the Jews of Babylon of necessity begins some 1,000 years before our current timeline—in the 434 BCE, when the Babylonians first marched on Israel as part of their campaign to stake claim to the former Assyrian empire. In that first foray, the Babylonians did not destroy the Temple, nor send the Jews into exile. However, they did succeed in taking into captivity 10,000 of the best and brightest Jews. (See Part 22)

While it seemed like tragedy at the time, these brilliant men, Torah scholars all, immediately established a Jewish infrastructure upon arrival in Babylon. A dozen years later when the Temple was destroyed, the Jews who were exiled to Babylon found there yeshivas, synagogues, kosher butchers, etc., all the essentials for maintaining a Jewish life. (See Part 23)

Seventy years later, when the Babylonians fell to the Persians and the Jews were permitted to return, only a small number did. Of what was probably a million Jews living in the Persian Empire, only 42,000 went back, meaning that the vast majority stayed in Babylon under Persia domination.

During the Second Temple period, up until its destruction in 70 CE, the Jewish community in Babylon—far from the eye of the storm that raged in the Land of Israel—continued to flourish.

Indeed, this is where the center of Jewish rabbinic authority came to rest after the Roman Empire shut down the Sanhedrin in 363 CE.

The head of the Jewish community of Babylon—who was officially recognized by the Persian authorities—was called Resh Galusa in Aramaic, which means Rosh Galut in Hebrew, and “Head of the Diaspora” in English.

The Resh Galusa was a person who was a direct descendant of the House of King David. Even though he was not a king in the land of Israel, he was recognized as not only being the representative of the Jewish community in Babylon but as also having noble status.

Over 1,500 year history of the Jewish community in Babylon approximately 40 people held that title, all tracing their ancestry back to King David. This was a noble line that was always preserved in Jewish history.

Question: "Why do most Jews reject Jesus as the Messiah?"

Answer: The Jews rejected Jesus because He failed, in their eyes, to do what they expected their Messiah to do — destroy evil and all their enemies and establish an eternal kingdom with Israel as the preeminent nation in the world. The prophecies in Isaiah 53 and Psalm 22 describe a suffering Messiah who would be persecuted and killed, but the Jews chose to focus instead on those prophecies that discuss His glorious victories, not His crucifixion.

The commentaries in the Talmud, written before the onset of Christianity, clearly discuss the Messianic prophecies of Isaiah 53 and Psalm 22 and puzzle over how these would be fulfilled with the glorious setting up of the kingdom of the Messiah. After the church used these prophecies to prove the claims of Christ, the Jews took the position that the prophecies did not refer to the Messiah, but to Israel or some other person.

The Jews believed that the Messiah, the prophet which Moses spoke about, would come and deliver them from Roman bondage and set up a kingdom where they would be the rulers. Two of the disciples, James and John, even asked to sit at Jesus' right and left in His kingdom when He came into His glory. The people of Jerusalem also thought He would deliver them. They shouted praises to God for the mighty works they had seen Jesus do and called out, "Hosanna, save us," when He rode into Jerusalem on a donkey (Matthew 21:9). They treated Him like a conquering king. Then, when He allowed Himself to be arrested, tried, and crucified on a cursed cross, the people stopped believing that He was the promised prophet. They rejected their Messiah (Matthew 27:22).

Note that Paul tells the church that the spiritual blindness of Israel is a "mystery" that had not previously been revealed (Romans chapters 9–11). For thousands of years, Israel had been the one nation that looked to God while the Gentile nations generally rejected the light and chose to live in spiritual darkness. Israel and her inspired prophets revealed monotheism — one God who was personally interested in mankind's destiny of heaven or hell, the path to salvation, the written Word with the Ten Commandments. Yet Israel rejected her prophesied Messiah, and the promises of the kingdom of heaven were postponed. A veil of spiritual blindness fell upon the eyes of the Jews, who previously were the most spiritually discerning people. As Paul explained, this hardening on the part of Israel led to the blessing of the Gentiles who would believe in Jesus and accept Him as Lord and Savior.

Two thousand years after He came to the nation of Israel as their Messiah, Christ is still (for the most part) rejected by the Jews. Many Jews today (some say at least half of all living Jews) identify themselves as Jewish but prefer to remain "secular." They identify with no particular Jewish movement and have no understanding or affiliation with any Jewish biblical roots. The concept of Messiah as expressed in the Hebrew Scriptures or Judaism's "13 Principles of Faith" is foreign to most Jews today.

But one concept is generally held as universal: Jews must have nothing to do with Jesus! Most Jews today perceive the last 2,000 years of historical Jewish persecution to be at the hands of so-called "Christians." From the Crusades, to the Inquisition, to the pogroms in Europe, to Hitler's Holocaust — Jews ultimately believe that they are being held responsible for the death of Jesus Christ and are being persecuted for that reason. They, therefore, reject Him today.

The good news is that many Jews are turning to Christ today. The God of Israel has always been faithful to keep a "remnant" of believing Jews to Himself. In the United States alone, some estimates say that there are over 100,000 Jewish believers in Jesus, and the numbers are growing all the time.

What Do Jews Believe?

- Judaism does not have a formal mandatory beliefs
- The most accepted summary of Jewish beliefs is Rambam's 13 principles of faith
- Even these basic principles have been debated
- Judaism focuses on the relationships between the Creator, mankind, and the land of Israel

This is a far more difficult question than you might expect. Judaism has no dogma, no formal set of beliefs that one must hold to be a Jew. In Judaism, actions are far more important than beliefs, although there is certainly a place for belief within Judaism.

The central idea of Judaism involves a commitment by the Jewish people to a single, omnipotent, incorporeal God, who is the creator and ruler of the universe and the source of a moral law for humanity. The idea of God as the creator of the universe opens the Biblical narrative Bereshit (“In the Beginning”) in the Book of Genesis.

The declaration of this belief appears throughout the Jewish source texts, including in the key prayer known as the Shema. The Shema, a recitation of Deuteronomy 6: 4-9, is a central feature of every synagogue service. It is also recited daily upon waking and on significant occasions such as approaching death. The Shema (whose name means "Listen/Hear") begins:

> "Hear, O Israel, the Lord is our God. The Lord is One.
> Blessed be his name, whose glorious kingdom is for ever and ever.
> And you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your might."

The concept of a moral law prescribed by God is one of the principal subjects of the Torah, the first five books of the Bible. The concept of the Creator's moral law suffuses the Tanach, which comprises the Torah, the Prophets and the Writings.

Sheloshah-Asar Ikkarim - The Thirteen Principles of the Jewish Faith

The Thirteen Principles of Faith (Sheloshah-Asar Ikkarim) constitutes the most well known Jewish creed; it was formulated by the great Jewish medievalist Rabbi Moses ben Maimon (Rambam), better known as Maimonides (1135-1204 CE), in his commentary on the Mishnah (Sanhedrin, 10). Maimonides claimed that he distilled these Thirteen Principles of Faith from the Taryag mitzvot (613 commandments) enumerated in his exegesis of the Torah.

Rabbi Moshe ben Maimon (1135 - 1204), commonly known by his Greek name, Moses Maimonides, was a rabbi and physician, as well as the author of a number of important works of philosophy, law and medicine. Born in Cordoba, Spain, Maimonides fled Muslim persecution of the Jews there and eventually became physician to Saladin, the Kurdish ruler of Egypt.

Maimonides promulgated "The Thirteen Principles of the Faith", which sets out his version of the fundamentals of Jewish belief. The Thirteen Principles appear in various forms in the Synagogue service, but it is important to note that they are not prescribed as dogma in Judaism, as similar pronouncements may be in the Christian tradition. For example, Articles 12 and 13 are not officially accepted by Conservative and Reform Jews.

It is the custom of many congregations to recite these principles every day after the shacharit (morning) prayers in the synagogue.

13 Principles of Faith

The closest that anyone has ever come to creating a widely-accepted list of Jewish beliefs is Rambam's thirteen principles of faith. These principles, which Rambam thought were the minimum requirements of Jewish belief, are (abbreviated, see links and following section):

1. G-d exists

2. G-d is one and unique

3. G-d is incorporeal

4. G-d is eternal

5. Prayer is to be directed to G-d alone and to no other

6. The words of the prophets are true

7. Moses' prophecies are true, and Moses was the greatest of the prophets

8. The Written Torah (first 5 books of the Bible) and Oral Torah (teachings now contained in the Talmud and other writings) were given to Moses

9. There will be no other Torah

10. G-d knows the thoughts and deeds of men

11. G-d will reward the good and punish the wicked

12. The Messiah will come

13. The dead will be resurrected

As you can see, these are very basic and general principles. Yet as basic as these principles are, the necessity of believing each one of these has been disputed at one time or another, and the liberal movements of Judaism dispute many of these principles.

Unlike many other religions, Judaism does not focus much on abstract cosmological concepts. Although Jews have certainly considered the nature of G-d, man, the universe, life and the afterlife at great length (see Kabbalah and Jewish Mysticism), there is no mandated, official, definitive belief on these subjects, outside of the very general concepts discussed above. There is substantial room for personal opinion on all of these matters, because as I said before, Judaism is more concerned about actions than beliefs.

Judaism focuses on relationships: the relationship between G-d and mankind, between G-d and the Jewish people, between the Jewish people and the land of Israel, and between human beings. Our scriptures tell the story of the development of these relationships, from the time of creation, through the creation of the relationship between G-d and Abraham, to the creation of the relationship between G-d and the Jewish people, and forward. The scriptures also specify the mutual obligations created by these relationships, although various movements of Judaism disagree about the nature of these obligations. Some say they are absolute, unchanging laws from G-d (Orthodox); some say they are laws from G-d that change and evolve over time (Conservative); some say that they are guidelines that you can choose whether or not to follow (Reform, Reconstructionist). For more on these distinctions, see Movements of Judaism.

So, what are these actions that Judaism is so concerned about? According to Orthodox Judaism, these actions include 613 commandments given by G-d in the Torah as well as laws instituted by the rabbis and long-standing customs. These actions are discussed in depth on the page regarding Halakhah: Jewish Law and the pages following it.

Maimonides' theological principles were never unanimously embraced.

The following is largely based on Marc Shapiro's "Maimonides' Thirteen Principles: The Last Word in Jewish Theology?" published in The Torah U-Madda Journal*, volume 4 (1993).*

Maimonides wrote his Thirteen Principles of Faith in his introduction to the tenth chapter of Talmud Sanhedrin.

According to Maimonides, anyone who denies–or even doubts–any of these principles is a heretic with no place in the World to Come. Yet, these principles were hardly undisputed. Many scholars who preceded and succeeded Maimonides held contrary beliefs.

Below, is a list of the Thirteen Principles with references to some of these divergent beliefs. Unless otherwise noted, all the scholars mentioned are medieval authorities.

The Principles

Principle 1

God exists; God is perfect in every way, eternal, and the cause of all that exists. All other beings depend upon God for their existence.

Objections

Some medieval authorities believed that God created the world from eternal matter (see Principle 4). Thus, according to these scholars, it would not be true to say that God is the cause of all that exists.

Principle 2

God has absolute and unparalleled unity.

Principle 3

God is incorporeal–without a body.

Objections

In the Mishneh Torah, Maimonides asserts that anyone who believes that God is corporeal is a heretic. In reference to this, Abraham ben David Posquieres (also known as Rabad) comments that people greater than Maimonides have believed that God has a physical form. Rabad himself does not subscribe to this view, but objects to the claim that those who do are heretics.

In addition, Moses ben Hasdai Taku, a tosafist (medieval commentator on the Talmud), believed that God could take a physical form. Finally, Samuel David Luzzatto, a 19th-century scholar, defended the idea that God has a body, claiming that an embodied God was the only God conceivable to most people.

Ironically, Maimonides himself seemed to share this view. In the Guide of the Perplexed (I, 46) he writes: "For the multitude perceive nothing other than bodies as having a firmly established existence and as being indubitably true."

Principle 4

God existed prior to all else. (In a later version of the Thirteen Principles, Maimonides included the notion that God created the world from nothing [creation ex nihilo].)

Objections

In his commentary to Genesis 1:1, Abraham Ibn Ezra suggests that the word bara (created) implies cutting or setting a boundary. Scholars such as Joseph Tov Elem and David Arama understood this to mean that Ibn Ezra believed that God sculpted the world from eternal matter. Gersonides also believed that the world was created from eternal matter.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Principle 5

God should be the only object of worship and praise. One should not appeal to intermediaries, but should pray directly to God.

Objections

Some of the selihot prayers–prayers of repentance recited on fast days and during the High Holy Days–and the third paragraph of the Shalom Aleichem hymn, sung prior to the Shabbat kiddush, are directed to angels. In addition, one of the Geonim–the leaders of Babylonian Jewry from the 7th to 11th centuries–defended the use of angels to intercede with God (Ozar ha-Geonim, Shabbat 4-6). He added that angels could sometimes fulfill the petitions of a prayer without consulting God.

Jacob Emden (1697-1776) is among some of the others who have approved of petitioning angels to intercede on ones behalf. Nissim Gerondi (Ran) maintained that there is one specific angel whom one may pray to.

Principle 6

Prophets and prophecy exist.

Principle 7

Moses was the greatest prophet who ever lived. No prophet who lived or will live could comprehend God more than Moses.

Objections

Nahmanides and Gersonides believed that the Messiah would gain more knowledge of God than Moses. Shneur Zalman of Lyady (1745-1813), the first Lubavitcher Rebbe, in his Likutei Amarim, notes that Moses' prophetic abilities weren't as great as those of Isaac Luria, the renowned medieval kabbalist.

Principle 8

The Torah is from heaven. The Torah we have today is the Torah that God gave to Moses at Sinai.

Comment

This principle assumes that there is and has always been one text of the Torah and that the Masoretic text–the text established by ben Asher in 930 CE–is this text.

Objections

The Talmud (Baba Batra 14b-15a; Makot 11a) relates that Joshua wrote the last 8 verses of the Torah. Abraham Ibn Ezra believed that Joshua wrote the last 12 verses. The Midrash Tanhuma, a rabbinc text, cites cases of tikkun soferim, instances where the scribes of the Great Assembly (the leaders of the Jews during the Persian exile) emended the Bible–including the Torah.

Menahem ben Solomon ha-Meiri mentions the "Masoretic works" instead of a singular "Masoretic text."

Solomon ben Aderet (Rashba) discussed when we should change our Torah to accord with the Talmud's version (which differs from the Masoretic text). Aryeh Loeb Guenzberg (18th century) opined that the commandment that every Jew write a Torah scroll no longer applies because of our doubts about how certain words are to be written. Similarly, Moses Sofer (1762-1839) believed that there's no need to say a blessing before writing a Torah because, perhaps, the Talmud's version is correct and the Torah being written is invalid.

Principle 9

The Torah will never be abrogated, nothing will be added to it or subtracted from it; God will never give another Law.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Objections

Joseph Albo suggested that, in theory, if a prophet came whose mission could be verified in the same way Moses' could, then commandments–except for the Ten Commandments–could be abolished.

Principle 10

God knows the actions of humans and is not neglectful of them.

Objections

According to Ibn Ezra, "The Whole [God] knows the individual in a general manner rather than in a detailed manner." Some interpreted this to mean that God knows the general actions of humans, but not the particular details. Gersonides developed this idea fully: God knows universals, but not particulars.

Principle 11

God rewards those who obey the commands of the Torah and punishes those who violate its prohibitions.

Principle 12

The days of the Messiah will come.

Objections

The talmudic Rabbi Hillel (not to be confused with the earlier Hillel) stated that: "There shall be no Messiah for Israel, because they have already enjoyed him in the days of Hezekiah (Sanhedrin 99a)."

Principle 13

The dead will be resurrected.

Conclusion

In Judaism, disagreement is not anomalous. However, whereas in the legal tradition we can speak of a mahloket l'shem shamayim–a debate in the name of heaven (God)–according to Maimonides, debate is not possible when it comes to dogmatic principles. The consequences of diverging from Maimonides' principles are severe.

After listing and describing his Thirteen Principles, Maimonides states: "When all these foundations are perfectly understood and believed in by a person he enters the community of Israel and one is obligated to love and pity him…But if a man doubts any of these foundations, he leaves the community [of Israel], denies the fundamentals, and is called a sectarian, apikores, and one who 'cuts among the plantings' [a reference to the talmudic heretic Elisha ben Abuyah]. One is required to hate him and destroy him."

According to this assessment, revered authorities–such as Ibn Ezra, Nahmanides, Rabad, ha-Meiri–whose works are studied to this day, would fall into the latter category. They would be considered heretics who not only have no redemption in the afterlife, but who are not true members of Israel and who deserve nothing but our scorn.

What are we to conclude from this?

Probably not that these scholars were heretics, nor that Maimonides' principles were incorrect or untrue (for in most cases, even the divergences from Maimonides were relatively minor). If we can conclude anything from this analysis, it is that the Thirteen Principles of Faith–as articulated–were never normative, never as defining and consequential as Maimonides believed them to be.

A Historical Survey of Prominent Jewish Believers in Messiah Yeshua

Over the years many Jewish people have come to faith in Yeshua/Jesus as their Messiah. The following short biographies and landmark dates establish that over the years many loyal Jewish individuals, Rabbis, Educators, and others from well taught backgrounds have recognized Yeshua/Jesus as their Messiah. While these men vary in affiliations, and while we may have a different understanding of Scripture than some, the list has value in demonstrating the reasonableness of Jewish faith in Yeshua.

1506 - Alfonso de Zamora - Rabbi
Alfonso de Zamora, a Rabbi, publicly declared his faith in Messiah Jesus in 1506. Working with Paul Nunez Coronel and Alfonso d'Alcala, two other Jewish believers, he uses his knowledge of Hebrew, Aramaic, Chaldean, and other languages to help develop a six-volume multilingual work known as the Polyglot Bible. He also writes a Hebrew grammar, a Hebrew dictionary, a dictionary of the Old Testament, and a treatise on Hebrew spelling.

1530 - Immanuel Tremellius - Hebrew Scholar, University Professor
Immanuel Tremellius came to faith in Messiah around 1530 and became Professor of Hebrew at Cambridge University in 1548. He loves what he reads, and when he later finds out that it is the Sermon on the Mount, he thinks differently about Jesus than he did before. When he tells all that he believes Jesus is the Messiah, his wife leaves him, one fanatical group puts spikes in his hands, and another tries to bury him alive. In 1909, Isaac Lichtenstein dies, leaving writings explaining how he read a copy of the New Testament after 40 years of work as a Rabbi in Hungary and was impressed by "the greatness, power, and glory of this book, formerly a sealed book to me. All seemed so new to me and yet it did me good like the sight of an old friend.... I had thought the New Testament to be impure, a source of pride, of selfishness, of hatred, and of the worst kind of violence, but as I opened it I felt myself peculiarly and wonderfully taken possession of. A sudden glory, a light flashed through my soul. I looked for thorns and found roses; I discovered pearls instead of pebbles; instead of hatred, love; instead of vengeance, forgiveness; instead of bondage, freedom."

A letter to his son, a doctor, reports that "From every line in the New Testament, from every word, the Jewish spirit streamed forth light, life, power, endurance, faith, hope, love, charity, limitless and indestructible faith in God." Others, hating the idea of a long-term Rabbi turning "renegade," attack Lichtenstein. His reply: "I have been an honored Rabbi for the space of 40 years, and now, in my old age, I am treated by my friends as one possessed by an evil spirit, and by my enemies as an outcast. I am become a butt of mockers, who point the finger at me. But while I live I will stand on my tower, though I may stand there all alone. I will listen to the words of God."

1913 - Arthur Kuldell, Messianic Jewish Leader
Arthur Kuldell convenes a gathering of Jewish believers in Pittsburgh who establish the "Hebrew Christian Alliance of America". Kuldell explains, "The Alliance is not a lodge. In 1937 he explains that his reflections led him to faith in Jesus, "in which I see the complete fulfillment of Judaism," but he was reluctant to do anything that would separate him from his own Jewish people, because he was foreseeing "the formidable wave of anti-Semitism which is to sweep over the world. I wanted to remain among those who tomorrow will be persecuted."

The Baltimore Jewish Times honestly reports that "when Herzl's son became a convert to Christianity - not for material gain, but because he believed that if the idea of Jewish nationalism is thought to its final conclusion one can be a Christian Jew - he was read out of Jewry. The death of ... Herzl reminds us that in many instances we are ruthless fanatics."

Both groups, he notes, "are treated as Jews and are subject to vicious discrimination." Jewish Christians also face discrimination from their own people: "If they apply to Jewish Relief agencies, they are told they must abandon their belief in Jesus."

1938 - Morris Zeidman, Messianic Jewish Leader
Morris Zeidman of the "Hebrew Christian Alliance of America" appeals for help for the Jews and Jewish believers of Poland, Germany, and Austria, where "sorrow is turning into despair. They can see no hope, not a gleam of light or kindness anywhere.... We must help, if we have to sacrifice a meal a day. Surely those of us who eat three meals a day can afford to spare the price of one meal for our persecuted brethren in Central Europe."

1943 - Israel Zolli, Chief Rabbi of Rome
Israel Zolli served as Professor of Hebrew at the University of Padua from 1927 to 1938, then as Chief Rabbi of Rome. In that position he helps to save about 4,000 Roman Jews as the Nazis enter Rome. Posing as a structural engineer, he enters the Vatican and asks Pope Pius XII to protect Rome's Jews. He offered himself as a hostage in return for the safety of the Jewish community. The pope makes churches, monasteries, convents, and the Vatican itself sanctuaries for them. Zolli publicly proclaims his faith in Messiah in 1945. He said: "No one in the world ever tried to convert me . . . (my faith) was a slow evolution, altogether internal"

Asked why he has "given up the synagogue for the church", Zolli replies, "I have not given it up. Christianity is the completion of the synagogue, for the synagogue was a promise, and Christianity is the fulfillment of that promise", "Once a Jew always a Jew". When asked if he believes that Jesus is the Messiah, he says, "Yes, positively. I have believed it many years. And now I am so firmly convinced of the truth of it that I can face the whole world and defend my faith with the certainty and solidity of the mountains."

As a result, Rabbinical Jewish leaders call him a heretic, excommunicate him, proclaim a fast of several days in atonement for his "treason," and mourn him as one dead. Zolli responds, "When my wife and I embraced the church we lost everything we had in the world. We shall now have to look for work: and God will help us to find some." God does, as Zolli becomes a writer and teacher.

Karl Stern, an emigrant from Nazi Germany to Canada, a noted neuropsychiatrist and Jewish believer, publishes his autobiography, The Pillar of Fire. One of his McGill University post-war Jewish students, Bernard Nathanson, who would go on to a Medical career, recalls him as "a great teacher; a riveting, even eloquent lecturer in a language not his own, and a brilliant contrarian spewing out original and daring ideas as reliably as Old Faithful. I conceived an epic case of hero-worship.... There was something indefinably serene and certain about him." When Nathanson reads The Pillar of Fire, he realizes that Stern "possessed a secret I had been searching for all my life, the secret of the peace of Messiah."

One day he talks at length about Messiah with a patient who has just been operated on for cancer. The patient's name: Alexander Solzhenitsyn.

While researching, he runs across biblical perspectives on public policy, and that leads to his coming to faith. He says, "I began to spend more time studying the Scripture, both Old and New Testament, and began to come to grips with the constantly mentioned subject of blood sacrifice as the basis for atonement for sin where God was concerned. The ultimate blood sacrifice for sin, obviously, is Jesus. I committed my life to Him as Lord and Savior"

1976 - Dr. David Block, Professor of Applied Mathematics and Astronomy
Dr. David Block, a professor of Applied Mathematics and Astronomy in South Africa, becomes a believer in Messiah. He writes, "I'd listen in shul as the Rabbis expounded how God was a personal God and how God would speak to Moses, to Abraham, to Isaac and to Jacob, and wonder how I fit into all of it. And by the time I entered university I became concerned over the fact that I had no assurance that God was indeed a personal God.... Where was the personality and the vibrancy of a God who could speak to David Block? If God is truly God, I reasoned, then why had he suddenly changed his character?"

A Christian colleague tells Block that a minister will be able to answer his questions; he reports, "My parents had taught me to seek answers where they may be found, and so I consented to meet with this Christian minister. [He] read to me from the New Testament book of Romans where Paul says that Yeshua (Jesus) is a stumbling block to Jewish people, but that those who would believe in Yeshua would never be ashamed. Suddenly it all became very clear to me: Yeshua had fulfilled the messianic prophecies in the Hebrew Scriptures, such as where the Messiah would be born and how he was to die.... I knew that Jesus was the Messiah and is the Messiah. And I surrendered my heart and my soul to Him that day."

He concludes, "It might seem strange to some that a scientist and a Jew could come to faith in Jesus. But faith is never a leap into the dark. It is always based on evidence. That was how my whole search for God began. I looked through my telescope at Saturn and said to myself, Isn't there a great God out there? The logical next step was to want to meet this Designer face-to-face."

1982 - Andrew Mark Barron, Aerospace Engineer
Aerospace engineer Andrew Mark Barron, raised in Conservative Judaism, comes to faith in Messiah. He writes that in college "I believed God existed because of the phenomenal order to the universe, yet I felt human beings were far too miniscule for His notice." Reading the New Testament helps him to see that God "constructed us with souls that can be fed only by His own hand. Believing God cares is not intellectual suicide; believing that He doesn't care is spiritual starvation."

1986 - Mortimer Adler, Professor at the University of Chicago
Mortimer Adler, author of numerous books on philosophical topics, becomes a Jewish believer at age 84. A long-time professor at the University of Chicago, he pushes for a "great books" and "great ideas" curriculum and writes popular works such as How to Read a Book (1940), The Common Sense of Politics (1971), and Six Great Ideas (1981). He writes an autobiography in 1977, Philosopher at Large, but writes another 15 years later (A Second Look in the Rearview Mirror: Further Autobiographical Reflections of a Philosopher at Large) that explains his coming to faith in Jesus. "We have a logical, consistent faith," he says. "In fact, I believe [faith in Messiah] is the only logical, consistent faith in the world."

In the year 1969 Dr. Bernard Nathanson, former student of Karl Stern, a noted Neuropsychiatrist, runs the largest abortion clinic in the world, and co-founds the National Association for the Repeal of Abortion Law. After being involved directly or indirectly in over 75,000 abortions (including one of his own child) and seeing his political goals achieved with the Supreme Court's Roe vs. Wade decision that legalizes abortion nationwide, he comes to understand that he has been killing human beings. In the late 1970s he does a complete turn-around and becomes a leading pro-life advocate and produces an effective video, The Silent Scream. Contact with Christian pro-life workers gets him thinking about the source of their dedication: "They prayed, they supported and encouraged each other, they sang hymns of joy.... They prayed for the unborn babies, for the confused and pregnant women, and for the doctors and nurses in the clinic.... And I wondered: How can these people give of themselves for a constituency that is (and always will be) mute, invisible, and unable to thank them?" Around 1990 Nathanson becomes a believer in Jesus.

1993 - Jay Sekulow, Attorney
Jay Sekulow, chief counsel for the American Center for Law and Justice, successfully argues the Lambs Chapel case before the U.S. Supreme Court; the Court states that religious groups cannot be discriminated against in the use of public facilities made available to other groups. Sekulow appears before the Supreme Court numerous times in defense of religious freedom, and writes about his own religious liberation as he tried to understand the description of the "suffering servant" in chapter 53 of Isaiah: "I kept looking for a traditional Jewish explanation that would satisfy, but found none. The only plausible explanation seemed to be Jesus. My Christian friends were suggesting other passages for me to read, such as Daniel 9. As I read, my suspicion that Jesus might really be the Messiah was confirmed.... I'd always thought my cultural Judaism was sufficient, but in the course of studying about the Messiah who would die as a sin bearer, I realized that I needed a Messiah to do that for me."

He resigns from his $1-million-a-year job as chief economist at the Wall Street firm of Bear Stearns and later says, "As I hit bottom, I lost jobs, lost all income, lost friends, and very nearly lost my wife. I was willing to surrender and take it on faith that I had to change my life." I started searching for God." Then, "All of a sudden it clicked, that . . . Jesus died for me, too." Kudlow is now chief economist for CNBC and a frequent writer of articles that make the science of economics understandable to readers.

Richard Wurmbrand, born into a Jewish home in Europe and founder of The Voice of the Martyrs, dies at age 91. After becoming a believer in Romania in 1936 and then a pastor, Wurmbrand and his wife are arrested several times by the Nazi government. He evangelizes Russian soldiers who are prisoners of war and does the same with Russian occupation forces after August, 1944.

Communist leaders imprison Wurmbrand in 1948, subject him to physical and mental torture, threaten his family, and finally imprison his wife as well. She is released in 1953 and he in 1956, but he is re-arrested in 1959 and sentenced to 25 years for preaching Scriptures that are contrary to Communist doctrine. Political pressure from Western countries leads to his release in 1964. The Wurmbrand family leaves Romania in 1965 and begins informing the world about persecution of Christians in that country and elsewhere. By the mid-1980s The Voice of the Martyrs has offices in 30 countries and is working in 80 nations where Christians are threatened.

The Roman Military in the New Testament
https://bible.org/article/roman-military-new-testament

Rome and her empire had a profound effect on New Testament. That effect was far more than most people realize. Much of the very nature of the society in which the events take place is because of the presence and governance of Rome. Paul and his ministry were profoundly affected by Rome and the Roman military…

For information about the impact of the Roman Empire on life in Israel during the time of Jesus and the Apostles, see my separate references resource:

Toilets of the New Testament

https://toilet-guru.com/biblical_new.php

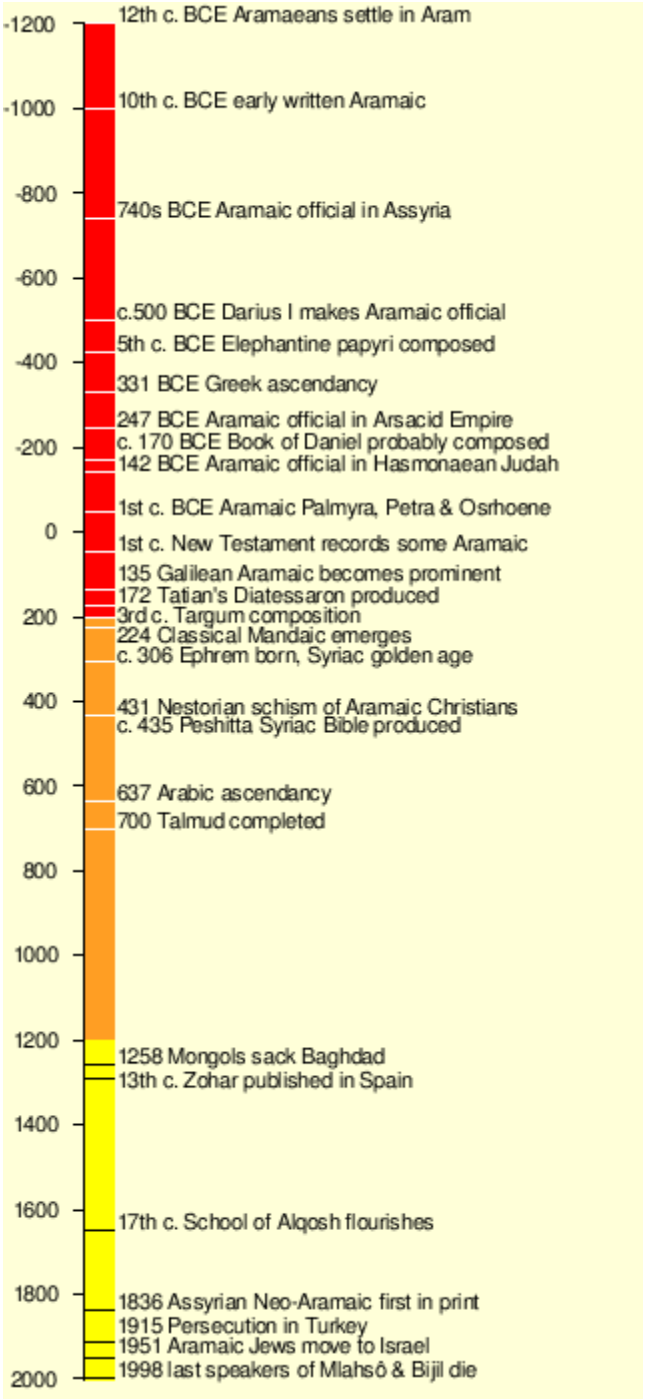
Excerpt:

So you're wondering, "How did people in the Bible use the toilet?" Well, that depends! If you're asking about Old Testament times and the many Jewish regulations on personal hygiene and public sanitation, there's another page explaining that. But if you're asking about New Testament times and locations, you've come to the right place. Asia Minor and the Levant had a largely Greek culture thanks to the military campaigns of Alexander the Great from 334 through 323 BC. Add to that the Babylonian idea of Šulak, the "Lurker of the Latrine" or the "Demon of the Privy". The Jewish community had picked up a belief in Šulak, an "unclean spirit" blamed for both physical and spiritual affliction, during their exile in Babylon. Meanwhile, the infrastructure including the water supplies and sanitation was that of the Roman Empire.

Ancient Ephesus and the New Testament (Online "Tour")

http://www.patheos.com/blogs/markdroberts/series/ancient-ephesus-and-the-new-testament/

Excerpt:



One of the highlights of the Ephesus tour is the men's toilet, found along Curetes Street. This bathroom, as we'd say in the USA, once contained about twenty places for men to do their business. It had a running water sewage system in its day. Perhaps the most surprising part of this bathroom is that the seats were placed very few inches apart, without any barriers. So a man might find himself sitting next to another man, almost touching as they used the facilities. Apparently, men used this as a place to socialize. There certainly wasn't much privacy, that's for sure. In 2007, you could sit on the ancient toilets. Today, they are now off limits so as to preserve them.

Aramaic of Jesus (source Wikipedia)

It is generally agreed that the historical Jesus primarily spoke Aramaic, perhaps along with some Hebrew and Greek (although there is some debate as to the degree). The towns of Nazareth and Capernaum in Galilee, where Jesus lived, were primarily Aramaic-speaking communities, although Greek was widely spoken in the major cities of the Eastern Mediterranean such as Antioch and Alexandria. Jesus may have also known enough Hebrew to discuss the Hebrew Bible, and he may have known Koine Greek through commerce in nearby Sepphoris.

Aramaic, as a Semitic language, was a common language of the Eastern Mediterranean during and after the Neo-Assyrian, Neo-Babylonian, and Achaemenid Empires (722 BC – 330 BC). Aramaic remained a common language of the region in the 1st century AD, despite the subsequent Macedonian-Greek (331 BC) and Roman (63 BC) invasions. Indeed, in spite of the increasing importance of Greek, the use of Aramaic was also expanding, and it would eventually be entirely dominant among Jews both in the Holy Land and elsewhere in the Middle East around 200 AD; it would remain so until the Arab conquest in the 7th century. Jesus and his disciples spoke a Galilean dialect clearly distinguishable from that of Jerusalem (see Jewish Palestinian Aramaic). To give some perspective, in the same time period, the Mishnah was recorded in Hebrew, Josephus wrote in Aramaic, and Philo and Paul of Tarsus wrote in Greek.

Most of the apostles from the Galilee region also spoke Aramaic. The message of Christianity spread (primarily among Jewish Aramaic-speaking enclaves) throughout Roman Judaea, Roman Syria and Roman Mesopotamia, and even beyond the empire into Kerala, India in Aramaic (or Syriac; Aram is the Hebrew word for Syria).

Background: Gradual adoption of Aramaic within the Jewish Community

During the 6th century BCE, the Babylonian captivity brought the working language of Mesopotamia much more into the daily life of ordinary Jews. Around 500 BCE, Darius I of Persia proclaimed[citation needed] that Aramaic would be the official language for the western half of his empire, and the Eastern Aramaic dialect of Babylon became the official standard. Documentary evidence shows the gradual shift from Hebrew to Aramaic:

1. Hebrew is used as first language and in society; other, similar Canaanite languages are known and understood.
2. Aramaic is used in international diplomacy and foreign trade.
3. Aramaic is used for communication between subjects and the imperial administration.

4. Aramaic gradually becomes the language of outer life (in the marketplace for example).
5. Aramaic gradually replaces Hebrew in the home, and the latter is used only in religious activity.

These phases took place over a fairly protracted period, and the rate of change varied depending on the place and social class in question: the use of one or other language was likely a social, political and religious barometer.

From the Greek conquest to the Diaspora

The conquest of the Middle East by Alexander the Great in 331 BCE overturned centuries of Mesopotamian dominance, and led to the ascendancy of Greek. It became the dominant language throughout the Seleucid Empire, but significant pockets of Aramaic-speaking resistance continued. Judaea was one of the areas where Aramaic remained dominant, and its use remained among Babylonian Jews as well. The destruction of Persian power, and its replacement with Greek rule sped the final decline of Hebrew to the margins of Jewish society. Writing from the Seleucid and Hasmonaean periods show the complete supersession of Aramaic as the language of the Jewish people. In contrast, Hebrew was the holy tongue. The early witness to this period of change is the Biblical Aramaic of the books of Daniel and Ezra. This language shows a number of Hebrew features have been taken into Jewish Aramaic: the letter He is often used instead of Aleph to mark a word-final long a vowel and the prefix of the causative verbal stem, and the masculine plural ending -īm often replaces -īn.

Different strata of Aramaic began to appear during the Hasmonaean period, and legal, religious and personal documents show different shades of hebraisms and colloquialisms. The dialect of Babylon, the basis for standard Aramaic under the Persians, continued to be regarded as normative, and the writings of Jews in the east was held in higher regard because of it. The division between western and eastern dialects of Aramaic is clear among different Jewish communities. Targums, translations of the Jewish scriptures into Aramaic, became more important as the general population do not understand the original. Perhaps beginning as simple interpretive retellings, gradually 'official' standard Targums were written and promulgated. Eventually, those of the Babylonian community became standard in Judaea also. Among religious scholars, Hebrew continues to be understood, but Aramaic appears in even the most sectarian of writings. Aramaic is used extensively in the writings of the Dead Sea Scrolls, the Mishnah and the Tosefta alongside Hebrew.

In the Diaspora

The Great Jewish Revolt of 70 CE and the Bar Kokhba's Revolt of 135 with their severe Roman reprisals lead to the breakup of much of Jewish society and religious life. However, the Jewish schools of Babylon continued to flourish, and, in the west, the rabbis settled in Galilee to continue their study. Jewish Aramaic had become quite distinct from the Official Aramaic of the Persian Empire by this period. Middle Babylonian Aramaic is the dominant dialect, and it is the basis of the Babylonian Talmud. Middle Galilean Aramaic, once a colloquial northern dialect, influenced the writings in the west. Most importantly, it is the Galilean dialect of Aramaic that was most probably the first language of the Masoretes, who composed signs to aid in the pronunciation of scripture, Hebrew as well as Aramaic. Thus, the standard vowel marks that accompany pointed versions of the Tanakh may be more representative of the pronunciation of Middle Galilean Aramaic than that of Hebrew of earlier periods.

As the Jewish diaspora was spread more thinly, Aramaic began to give way to other languages as the first language of widespread Jewish communities. Eventually, it, like Hebrew before it, became the language of religious scholars. The thirteenth century Zohar, published in Spain, is testament to the continued importance of the language of the Talmud after it had long since ceased to be the language of the people.

Note: In Acts (see Acts 21:40 and 22:2), Paul (who could also speak fluent Greek [and, as noticed by the Roman commander, with no Egyptian accent]), may have spoken in Aramaic to address his accusers. [NIV translates it as “Aramaic”, while other translations say “Hebrew” or “Hebrew dialect”.]

Overview: About Targums

The word "targum" refers to translations of the Bible into Jewish Aramaic. In the post-exilic period, Aramaic began to be widely spoken in the Jewish community alongside the native language, Hebrew. Eventually Aramaic replaced Hebrew for most purposes, and the Bible itself required translation into the more widely familiar vernacular language. Thus the Targum was born. The Mishnah, the codified form of Jewish oral tradition, set down detailed rules for the turgeman, the reciter of Targum, to follow in the synagogue service.

The earliest known targums are texts found among the Dead Sea Scrolls, most notably the Job Targum from Cave 11, although these documents were probably not used in worship. The Targums that were used in rabbinic Judaism are the following:

Targum Onkelos: Ascribed by tradition to the proselyte Onkelos, this translation, which covers the Torah or Pentateuch, is considered to be the oldest and it is the most widely used of all the Jewish targums. It most likely originated in Palestine in the first few centuries CE, but was transmitted and edited in the East, among the Jews of Babylonia. In the Babylonian Talmud it is referred to as "our Targum."

Targum Jonathan: As with Onkelos, some traditions ascribe this targum to Jonathan ben Uzziel, a pupil of Hillel, and, like Onkelos, it probably originated in Palestine in the early centuries CE. Targum Jonathan contains renderings of the Former Prophets (Joshua, Judges, 1-2 Samuel, 1-2 Kings) and the Latter Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the Twelve Minor Prophets).

The Palestinian Targums: While Onkelos and Jonathan were used mainly in the East, a distinctively Palestinian targum, covering the Torah only, was composed and used in the West. The two complete versions of the Palestinian targum that survive are Targum Neofiti, a complete codex that was only discovered in 1956 in the Vatican Library; and Targum Pseudo-Jonathan, which is extant in only one manuscript from the British Museum. (This Targum is known as "Pseudo-Jonathan," because a common abbreviation for it in the medieval period -- TY, for Targum Yerushalmi, or Jerusalem Targum -- was incorrectly read as "Targum Yonatan.") Incomplete versions of the Palestinian Targum survive, known as the Fragment-Targum and other fragmentary witnesses have been discovered in the Cairo Geniza.

Targums to the Writings: The latest of the rabbinic targums are those to the Writings, the third division of the Hebrew Bible. Judging by the dialect of Aramaic, they were composed at different times and places. The Targum of Job, Targum of Psalms, and Targum of Chronicles are all similar in language to the Pseudo-Jonathan Targum. The Targums to the Five Megilloth (Festival Scrolls) -- Ruth, Esther, Song of Songs, Lamentations, and Qoheleth (Ecclesiastes) -- all contain long interpretive additions. The Targum of Proverbs may be the latest of all; parts of it were copied from the translation of Proverbs found in the Syriac Peshitta. There are no targums of Ezra, Nehemiah, or Daniel.

The targums are important to biblical scholars for several reasons. They are a witness to the Hebrew Bible text as it existed in the first few centuries CE, and references to them are frequent in the apparatus of the Biblia Hebraica. Since it was characteristic of their method sometimes to add interpretive or folkloric material to the translation or paraphrase, many of the targums preserve valuable information about Jewish theology, practice, and interpretation of Scripture from the early centuries of the Christian era. For linguists, the targums serve as an important source for the Aramaic dialects.

Olam Ha-Ba: The Afterlife (current views within Judaism)

Traditional Judaism firmly believes that death is not the end of human existence. However, because Judaism is primarily focused on life here and now rather than on the afterlife, Judaism does not have much dogma about the afterlife, and leaves a great deal of room for personal opinion. It is possible for an Orthodox Jew to believe that the souls of the righteous dead go to a place similar to the Christian heaven, or that they are reincarnated through many lifetimes, or that they simply wait until the coming of the messiah, when they will be resurrected. Likewise, Orthodox Jews can believe that the souls of the wicked are tormented by demons of their own creation, or that wicked souls are simply destroyed at death, ceasing to exist.

Biblical References to the Afterlife

Some scholars claim that belief in the afterlife is a teaching that developed late in Jewish history. It is true that the Torah emphasizes immediate, concrete, physical rewards and punishments rather than abstract future ones. See, for example, Lev. 26:3-9 and Deut. 11:13-15. However, there is clear evidence in the Torah of belief in existence after death. The Torah indicates in several places that the righteous will be reunited with their loved ones after death, while the wicked will be excluded from this reunion.

The Torah speaks of several noteworthy people being "gathered to their people." See, for example, Gen. 25:8 (Abraham), 25:17 (Ishmael), 35:29 (Isaac), 49:33 (Jacob), Deut. 32:50 (Moses and Aaron) II Kings 22:20 (King Josiah). This gathering is described as a separate event from the physical death of the body or the burial.

Certain sins are punished by the sinner being "cut off from his people." See, for example, Gen. 17:14 and Ex. 31:14. This punishment is referred to as kareit (kah-REHYT) (literally, "cutting off," but usually translated as "spiritual excision"), and it means that the soul loses its portion in the World to Come.

Later portions of the Tanakh speak more clearly of life after death and the World to Come. See Dan. 12:2, Neh. 9:5.

Resurrection and Reincarnation

Belief in the eventual resurrection of the dead is a fundamental belief of traditional Judaism. It was a belief that distinguished the Pharisees (intellectual ancestors of Rabbinical Judaism) from the Sadducees. The Sadducees rejected the concept, because it is not explicitly mentioned in the Torah. The Pharisees found the concept implied in certain verses.

Belief in resurrection of the dead is one of Rambam's 13 Principles of Faith. The second blessing of the Shemoneh Esrei prayer, which is recited three times daily, contains several references to resurrection. (Note: the Reform movement, which apparently rejects this belief, has rewritten the second blessing accordingly).

The resurrection of the dead will occur in the messianic age, a time referred to in Hebrew as the Olam Ha-Ba, the World to Come, but that term is also used to refer to the spiritual afterlife. When the messiah comes to initiate the perfect world of peace and prosperity, the righteous dead will be brought back to life and given the opportunity to experience the perfected world that their righteousness helped to create. The wicked dead will not be resurrected.

There are some mystical schools of thought that believe resurrection is not a one-time event, but is an ongoing process. The souls of the righteous are reborn in to continue the ongoing process of tikkun olam, mending of the world. Some sources indicate that reincarnation is a routine process, while others indicate that it only occurs in unusual circumstances, where the soul left unfinished business behind. Belief in reincarnation is also one way to explain the traditional Jewish belief that every Jewish soul in history was present at Sinai and agreed to the covenant with G-d. (Another explanation: that the soul exists before the body, and these unborn souls were present in some form at Sinai). Belief in reincarnation is commonly held by many Chasidic sects, as well as some other mystically-inclined Jews.

Olam Ha-Ba: The World to Come

The spiritual afterlife is referred to in Hebrew as Olam Ha-Ba (oh-LAHM hah-BAH), the World to Come, although this term is also used to refer to the messianic age. The Olam Ha-Ba is another, higher state of being.

In the Mishnah, one rabbi says, "This world is like a lobby before the Olam Ha-Ba. Prepare yourself in the lobby so that you may enter the banquet hall." Similarly, the Talmud says, "This world is like the eve of Shabbat, and the Olam Ha-Ba is like Shabbat. He who prepares on the eve of Shabbat will have food to eat on Shabbat." We prepare ourselves for the Olam Ha-Ba through Torah study and good deeds.

The Talmud states that all Israel has a share in the Olam Ha-Ba. However, not all "shares" are equal. A particularly righteous person will have a greater share in the Olam Ha-Ba than the average person. In addition, a person can lose his share through wicked actions. There are many statements in the Talmud that a particular mitzvah will guarantee a person a place in the Olam Ha-Ba, or that a particular sin will lose a person's share in the Olam Ha-Ba, but these are generally regarded as hyperbole, excessive expressions of approval or disapproval.

Some people look at these teachings and deduce that Jews try to "earn our way into Heaven" by performing the mitzvot. This is a gross mischaracterization of our religion. It is important to remember that unlike some religions, Judaism is not focused on the question of how to get into heaven. Judaism is focused on life and how to live it. Non-Jews frequently ask me, "do you really think you're going to go to Hell if you don't do such-and-such?" It always catches me a bit off balance, because the question of where I am going after death simply doesn't enter into the equation when I think about the mitzvot. We perform the mitzvot because it is our privilege and our sacred obligation to do so. We perform them out of a sense of love and duty, not out of a desire to get something in return. In fact, one of the first bits of ethical advice in Pirkei Avot (a book of the Mishnah) is: "Be not like servants who serve their master for the sake of receiving a reward; instead, be like servants who serve their master not for the sake of receiving a reward, and let the awe of Heaven [meaning G-d, not the afterlife] be upon you."

Nevertheless, we definitely believe that your place in the Olam Ha-Ba is determined by a merit system based on your actions, not by who you are or what religion you profess. In addition, we definitely believe that humanity is capable of being considered righteous in G-d's eyes, or at least good enough to merit paradise after a suitable period of purification.

Do non-Jews have a place in Olam Ha-Ba? Although there are a few statements to the contrary in the Talmud, the predominant view of Judaism is that the righteous of all nations have a share in the Olam Ha-Ba. Statements to the contrary were not based on the notion that membership in Judaism was required to get into Olam Ha-Ba, but were grounded in the observation that non-Jews were not righteous people. If you consider the behavior of the surrounding peoples at the time that the Talmud was written, you can understand the rabbis' attitudes. By the time of Rambam, the belief was firmly entrenched that the righteous of all nations have a share in the Olam Ha-Ba.

Gan Eden and Gehinnom

The place of spiritual reward for the righteous is often referred to in Hebrew as Gan Eden (GAHN ehy-DEHN) (the Garden of Eden). This is not the same place where Adam and Eve were; it is a place of spiritual perfection. Specific descriptions of it vary widely from one source to another. One source says that the peace that one feels when one experiences Shabbat properly is merely one-sixtieth of the pleasure of the afterlife. Other sources compare the bliss of the afterlife to the joy of sex or the warmth of a sunny day. Ultimately, though, the living can no more understand the nature of this place than the blind can understand color.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Only the very righteous go directly to Gan Eden. The average person descends to a place of punishment and/or purification, generally referred to as Gehinnom (guh-hee-NOHM) (in Yiddish, Gehenna), but sometimes as She'ol or by other names. According to one mystical view, every sin we commit creates an angel of destruction (a demon), and after we die we are punished by the very demons that we created. Some views see Gehinnom as one of severe punishment, a bit like the Christian Hell of fire and brimstone. Other sources merely see it as a time when we can see the actions of our lives objectively, see the harm that we have done and the opportunities we missed, and experience remorse for our actions. The period of time in Gehinnom does not exceed 12 months, and then ascends to take his place on Olam Ha-Ba.

Only the utterly wicked do not ascend at the end of this period; their souls are punished for the entire 12 months. Sources differ on what happens at the end of those 12 months: some say that the wicked soul is utterly destroyed and ceases to exist while others say that the soul continues to exist in a state of consciousness of remorse.

This 12-month limit is repeated in many places in the Talmud, and it is connected to the mourning cycles and the recitation of Kaddish. See Life, Death and Mourning.

Hell (Gehenna, Sheol, Hades, Paradise, the Grave, Tartarus, Hinnom, etc.)

There seems to be some confusion about the meaning of Hell and who goes there because of the way the Hebrew word Sheol and the Greek word Hades have been translated in our English Bibles. Since this confusion has led some into an erroneous understanding of what the Bible actually teaches about the intermediate state and the final state of the dead, we think that it is important that we address this subject here.

Sheol is found in the Bible sixty-five times. It is translated “the pit” three times, “the grave” thirty-one times, and “hell” thirty-one times. Hades is used eleven times, being rendered “hell” ten times and “grave” once. Adding to the confusion is that two other words are also translated hell in the New Testament. These are Tartarus, which is found once and Gehenna, which is used twelve times.

The term “Hell” is commonly understood to mean a place of torment where the souls of the wicked go after physical death. This is true. However, because Hades in the New Testament and Sheol in the Old are variously rendered hell or grave, there has been some misunderstanding about what hell and the grave are. Before looking at these words though, we should first give our attention to the Greek word Gehenna, which is always translated hell and used in reference to the Lake of Fire. It is found in Matthew 5:22,29,30; 10:28; 18:9; 23:15,33; Mark 9:43,45,47; Luke 12:5; and James 3:6.

PRACTICAL APPLICATION FOR TODAY

A proper understanding of what the Bible teaches about Hell, Sheol, Hades, and the Grave dispels confusion over what happens to the soul at the time of physical death and guards against being led astray by those teaching the false doctrines of soul-sleep, eradication of the soul, the universal reconciliation of mankind, and the annihilation of the lost. All of these erroneous doctrines are of Satan, used of him to dishearten believers and blind the lost to the reality of the cost of spurning the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Our thinking, and therefore our life on a day-to-day basis, is influenced by what we believe. While some of the false doctrines mentioned above are diametrically opposed to each other, they still have one thing in common. They subvert the truth of the immortality of the soul.

The word "paradise" is used as a synonym for heaven (2 Corinthians 12:3; Revelation 2:7). When Jesus was dying on the cross and one of the thieves being crucified with Him asked Him for mercy, Jesus replied, "I tell you the truth, today you will be with me in paradise" (Luke 23:43). Jesus knew that His death was imminent and that He would soon be in heaven with His Father. Therefore, Jesus used paradise as a synonym for heaven, and the word has come to be associated with any place of ideal loveliness and delight.

Abraham's bosom is referred to only once in the Bible—in the story of Lazarus and the rich man (Luke 16:19-31). It was used in the Talmud as a synonym for heaven. The image in the story is of Lazarus reclining at a table leaning on Abraham's breast—as John leaned on Jesus' breast at the Last Supper—at the heavenly banquet. There are differences of opinion about what exactly Abraham's bosom represents. Those who believe the setting of the story is a period after the Messiah's death and resurrection see Abraham's bosom as synonymous with heaven. Those who believe the setting to be prior to the crucifixion see Abraham's bosom as another term for paradise. The setting is really irrelevant to the point of the story, which is that wicked men will see the righteous in happiness, and themselves in torment, and that a "great gulf" exists between them (Luke 16:26) which will never be spanned.

In the Hebrew Scriptures, the word used to describe the realm of the dead is sheol. It simply means "the place of the dead" or "the place of departed souls/spirits." The New Testament Greek equivalent to sheol is hades, which is also a general reference to "the place of the dead." The Greek word gehenna is used in the New Testament for "hell" and is derived from the Hebrew word hinnom. Other Scriptures in the New Testament indicated that sheol/hades is a temporary place where souls are kept as they await the final resurrection. The souls of the righteous, at death, go directly into the presence of God—the part of sheol called "heaven," "paradise," or "Abraham's bosom" (Luke 23:43; 2 Corinthians 5:8; Philippians 1:23).

The lake of fire, mentioned only in Revelation 19:20 and 20:10, 14-15, is the final hell, the place of eternal punishment for all unrepentant rebels, both angelic and human (Matthew 25:41). It is described as a place of burning sulfur, and those in it experience eternal, unspeakable agony of an unrelenting nature (Luke 16:24; Mark 9:45-46). Those who have rejected Christ and are in the temporary abode of the dead in hades/sheol have the lake of fire as their final destination.

But those whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life should have no fear of this terrible fate. By faith in Christ and His blood shed on the cross for our sins, we are destined to live eternally in the presence of God.

The Afterlife

Summary Chart - Eternal Life and Death

While sharing some similarities with the chart in the Abraham's Bosom section of this article, there are fundamental differences. The following chart is a much more concise and consistent view, anchored in Scriptures and confirmed by understanding of the early church. Here there is no three-part heaven (Abraham's Bosom, Paradise/Present Heaven, and New Heaven); rather there is the present heaven and future New Heaven and Earth. Unlike the earlier view that Sheol has changed into a Hades that is only for the lost, here there has only been one present hell that is part of Hades/Sheol. The entirety of Hades/Sheol will end up in the Lake of Fire (the final hell). Which makes it an incredibly important detail that all of God's redeemed are set free forever from Hades/Sheol at the resurrection prior. Here is a consistent use of the terminology found in Scriptures:

	Wicked (Lost)	Righteous (Saved)
Born - Body/Soul/Spirit	Objects of Wrath (Ephesians 2:3)	None Righteous (Romans 3:10-12)
In physical life...	Condemned already because they have not believed (John 3:18)	Made alive in Christ through faith by the grace of God (Ephesians 2:4-9)
When they die...	Goes to Sheol/Hades	Goes to Sheol/Hades
Body/Soul/Spirit	In Sheol/Hades: The body lies in a physical grave, a part of Sheol/Hades. The Soul/Spirit is in torment, separated from God and all that is good; this part of Sheol/Hades we popularly call Hell - specifically the present Hell	In Sheol/Hades: The body lies in a physical grave, a part of Sheol/Hades. The Soul/Spirit is being comforted, in the presence of God and other righteous; this part of Sheol/Hades we popularly and scripturally call Heaven - specifically the present Heaven
At the Resurrection...	Judgment to Death	Judgment to Life
Body/Soul/Spirit	In Lake of Fire/Gehenna for eternity (with literally everything left in Sheol/Hades following the resurrection of the Righteous)	In New Heaven and Earth (new glorified body and fully sanctified soul/spirit) for eternity

HELL IN THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT

1. Hell in The Old Testament

   The word "Hell" appears in the Old Testament approximately 31 times and, without exception, is translated from the Hebrew word "Sheol." This same Hebrew word is also translated "pit" three different times. "Pit," translated from Sheol, is found in Numbers 16:30,33 and Job 17:16. Hell is referred to as a pit three times, both being the same place.

   Sheol is not the grave. A mistranslation--"Sheol" is also translated as grave approximately 25 times in the Old Testament, which has caused much confusion concerning the Doctrine of Hell. Jehovah's Witnesses utilize this translational error to the fullest, claiming Hell is the grave and nothing more. When we look at the Hebrew we find that the word "gibrah" is properly used for "grave." "Gibrah" is translated throughout the Old testament as "grave, burying place, and sepulchre," and properly so. Sheol is never in any case in the Old testament ever referring to grave, burying place or sepulchre; but, rather a place located in the center of the earth. The grave, burying place and sepulchre houses our dead bodies, but Sheol is the compartment that contains the souls and spirits that will never die and which were in those earthly bodies.

Here are a few of the places where the Hebrew word "Sheol" is mistranslated as grave in the Old testament. Beside the passages in parenthesis is the way it appears in the Revised Standard. The Revised Standard has transliterated, i.e., put the Hebrew word "Sheol" itself in the English translation. There is one exception where Sheol is translated as "Pit" by the Revised Standard and that is Job 33:22. This would be correct, since Sheol is a pit located in the center of the earth.

1. Job 7:9 (Sheol). "As a cloud is consumed and vanisheth away; so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more."

2. Psalm 6:5 (Sheol). "For in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave, who shall give thee thanks."

3. Psalm 31:17 (Sheol). "Let me not be ashamed, O Lord; for I have called upon thee: let the wicked be ashamed, and let them be silent in the grave."

4. Psalm 49:15 (Sheol). "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave: for he shall receive me."

5. Job 33:22 (Pit). "Yea, his soul draweth near unto the grave, and his life to the destroyers."

6. Isaiah 38:18 (Sheol). "For the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee: they that go down into the Pit cannot hope for thy truth."

7. 1st Samuel 2:6 (Sheol). "The Lord killeth and maketh alive; he bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up."

8. Hosea 13:14 (Sheol). "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: ... O grave, I will be thy destruction: repentance shall be hid from mine eyes."

The correct Hebrew word for grave, burying place or sepulchre is "gibrah" and is never used in reference to Sheol or the Pit, located in the earth's core. In the manner of the Hebrew, "Sheol" is referring to it's own place and not that of the grave or sepulchre at any time.

Here are a few of the places where "gibrah" is properly translated in the King James as grave, sepulchre and burying place:

1. 1st kings 13:30, "And he laid his carcase in his own grave..."

2. 2nd Samuel 3:32, "And they buried Abner in Hebron: and the king lifted up his voice, and wept at the grave of Abner..."

3. Psalm 88:5, "Free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more..."

4. 2nd Samuel 2:32, "And they took up Asahel, and buried him in the sepulchre of his father..."

5. Genesis 47:30, "But I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in their burying place."

I have taken a little time to point out this translational error as it is imperative if one is to understand that the grave and Sheol are entirely two separate places. If this is not brought into focus, then the mistranslation would lead one to believe that Hell is the grave and nothing more. Again, I want to point out that this is the teaching of Armstrongism, Jehovah's Witnesses and many of the cults--that is why it is so important to understand the difference in the Hebrew words and when they are and not properly translated concerning this subject.

This is by no means an exhaustive word study, but a brief look to distinguish the difference between the grave (gibrah) and Sheol (Hell).

In the King James translation, without exception, everywhere in the Old testament where the word "Hell" appears, it is always the Hebrew "Sheol."

1. Isaiah 5:14 (Sheol). "Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure: and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth, shall descend into it."

2. (Psalm 9:17) "The wicked shall be turned into hell (Sheol), and all the nations that forget God."

3. (Proverb 7:27) "Her house is the way to hell (Sheol), going down to the chambers of death."

4. (Isaiah 14:15) "Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell (Sheol), to the sides of the pit."

5. (Deuteronomy 32:22, "For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell (Sheol), and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains."

This is all that the lost have to look forward to when they die. How grateful we are that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten son (Christ) that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

2. Hell in The New Testament

At this point it should be noted that the Old Testament "Sheol" (Hell) and the New Testament "Hades" (Hell) are the same place. It was located in the center of the earth and had two compartments; one was Paradise for the saved and the other was Torment for the lost. This will be qualified later in the book. Read Luke 16:22-26. Here we find in Hades a great gulf separated Torment for the lost and Paradise for the saved. Paradise is also known as "Abraham's Bosom."

Let me illustrate the importance of recognizing the two compartments of Sheol, as translated Hell in the Old Testament. In Psalm 139, David is praising God for his attributes of omniscience and omnipresence. Notice Verses 7 and 8, "Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up to heaven, thou art there: If I make my bed in HELL (Heb. "Sheol") behold, thou art there." The word "heaven" here is in the plural (Heb. "shamayim"). The "im" is the plural and should read "If I ascend up into the heavens." That is past the first heaven (our atmosphere), past the second heaven (the planets), and on to the third heaven. David is attesting to the fact that there is nowhere anyone can go to get away from the presence of God. Even if we should go past the planets, God is there.

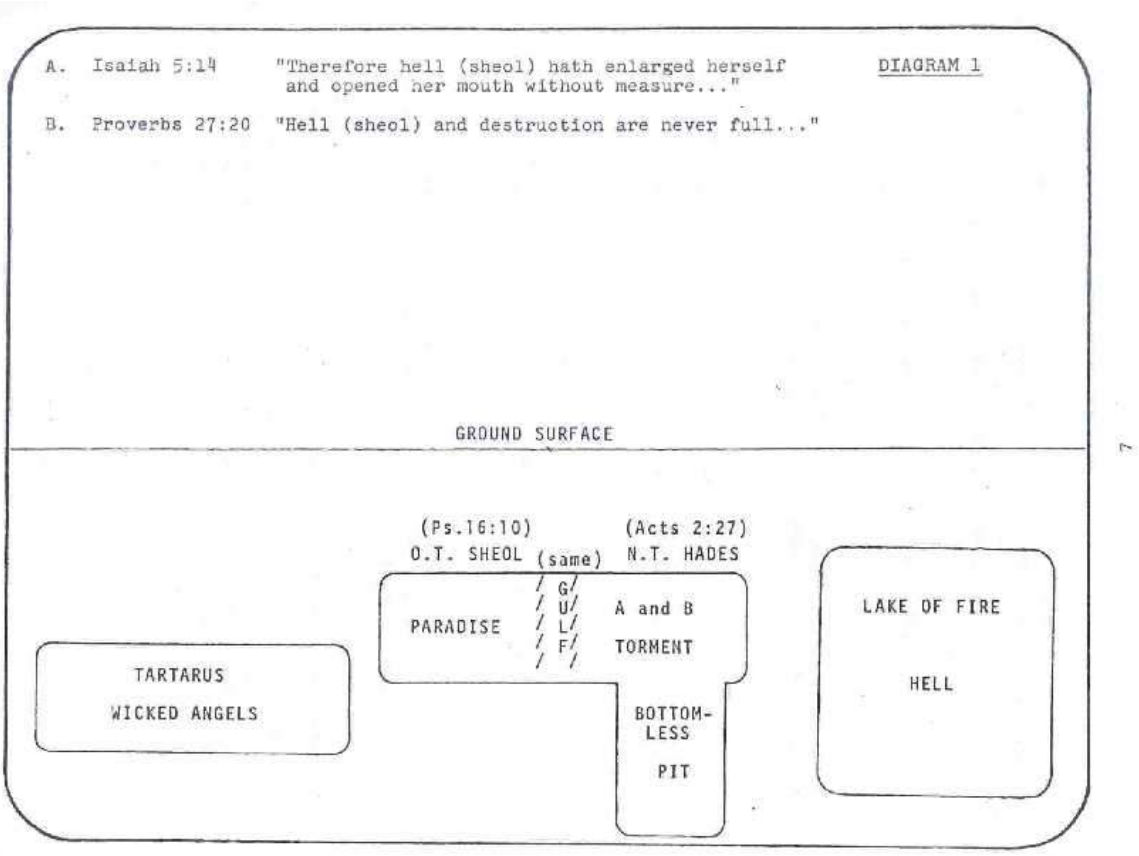
Now if we will go the other direction from the surface of the earth, even to the center of the earth where Sheol (Hell) is located, God is there. This is the basic point David is making, that no one can escape the presence of God.

Now the statement of David made that we are interested in, is this, "If I make my bed in Hell (Sheol)..." I have heard some say that David was lost and if he died then, his bed would be in Hell (Torment). I know I may be "splitting a hair"; but, this is why it is so important to understand that Sheol (Eng. "Hell") had two compartments, Torment and Paradise. David here was a saved man, a "man after God's own heart," and if he was thinking deeper than the basic facts he would have been thinking of making his bed in the Paradise side of Sheol, not the Torment side of Sheol (Hell).

In the New Testament the word "hell" appears some 23 times and is translated from three Greek words. The three Greek words are "Hades," "Geenna," and "Tartaroo." Each one denotes a different or separate place of punishment. When the translators came to these three words in the Greek (all are referring to a place of torment), they used our one English word "Hell" which is the equivalent. It is equivalent as far as torment is concerned, but not as far as their location is concerned. This will be illustrated in Diagram 1.

The three Greek words translated as "Hell" and where they appear in the Bible are as follows:

1. "Hades" translated Hell appears 10 times in the New Testament in the following places: Matthew 11:23; 16:18; Luke 10:15; 16:23; Acts 2:27,31; Revelation 1:18; 6:8; 20:13,14.



2. The Greek word "Geenna" is translated Hell 12 times in the New Testament in the following places: Matthew 5:22,29,30; 10:28; 18:9; 23:15,33; Mark 9:43,45,47; Luke 12:5; and James 3:6. Of these 12 items, it is spoken of 11 times by the Lord Jesus Christ in the Gospels and once by James in Chapter 3, Verse 6.

3. The Greek word "Tartaroo" appears only once in the whole New Testament and is translated Hell in 2nd Peter 2:4. This is a separate place where the most wicked angels are kept and reserved unto judgment. They will be brought out of Tartaroo and cast into the Lake of Fire where they will remain in torment forever.

4. "Hades" is translated once as grave in 1st Corinthians 15:55 and is a mistranslation.

With this basic information, we are now ready for Diagram 1.

COMMENTARY ON DIAGRAM

1. The Location of Sheol and Hades

Both are the same place, Sheol the Hebrew word and Hades the Greek word. This is substantiated by the same Scripture appearing in the Old testament and the New Testament. In Psalm 16:10 we are told concerning Christ "For thou wilt not leave my soul in Hell (Hebrew - Sheol), neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One (Christ) to see corruption." The last part of this Verse is stating that Christ would not see corruption is referring to the His resurrection. This is made clear by Acts 2:3, "He (David) seeing this before spake of the resurrection of Christ, that His soul was not left in Hell (Hades), neither His flesh did see corruption."

Now we are going to see how the New International Version (NIV) perverts a great doctrinal truth of God's Word. They mistranslate the Hebrew "Sheol" and Greek "Hades" in these three Verses as "GRAVE" instead of "HELL." Here is the comparison:

A. Psalm 16:10

KJT "For thou wilt not leave my soul in HELL (Hebrew "Sheol") ..."

NIV "because you will not abandon me to the GRAVE..."

B. Acts 2:27 (Peter quoting Psalm 16:10)

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

KJT "Because thou wilt not leave my soul in HELL (Greek "Hades") ..."

NIV "...because you will not abandon me to the GRAVE..."

C. Acts 2:31

KJT " He seeing this before spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul (his person) was not left in HELL (Greek 'Hades'), neither his flesh (body) did see corruption."

NIV "Seeing what was ahead, he spoke of the resurrection of the Christ, that he was not abandoned to the GRAVE, nor did his body see decay."

The NIV in their mistranslation of GRAVE instead of HELL puts Christ's body and soul in the grave for 3 days and 3 nights. This erroneously teaches the same damnable doctrine as the Jehovah's Witnesses, Mormons, Seventh Day Adventists and other cult religions. This perversion by the NIV contradicts Christ's own testimony that "Today shalt thou be with me in PARADISE" (Luke 23:43). Matthew 12:40, previously quoted, states that Christ--upon death---would descend into the heart of the earth. This was the Person of Christ--not His Body as it was in the tomb. Ephesians 4:9 agrees:

"Now that he (Christ) ascended, what is it but that he also DESCENDED FIRST INTO THE LOWER PARTS OF THE EARTH?"

One does not have to know any Greek or Hebrew to be able to look this up for themselves. Strong's Concordance or Vine's Expository Words in the Greek New Testament will substantiate the foregoing. If a layman can look this up and verify it, then will you tell me how a "hundred scholars" can accidentally come up with a "misnomer" like this which entices its readers to accept a false doctrine. Personally, I believe this was done deliberately and deceitfully.

When Christ died on the cross, His soul and Spirit went to Hades, being separated from the body, which went to the tomb. This Verse, both in Psalm 16:10 and Acts 2:27,31, state the soul and Spirit of Christ would not remain in Hades, but would unite with His resurrected body after 3 days. The phrase "that His body would not see corruption," i.e., purification and odor sets in on the fourth day. An example of this can be seen in the death of Lazarus who had been in the grave four days. In John 11:17 we are told that, "Then when Jesus came, he found that he (Lazarus) had lain in the grave four days already." Notice in Verse 39 that "Jesus said, Take ye away the stone. Martha, the sister of him that lay dead, saith unto Him, Lord, by this time he stinketh for he had been dead four days." The fact that the body of Christ was not to see "corruption" plainly meant that the body of Christ would be resurrected before the fourth day. He would not remain in the tomb to the fourth day.

We are not going to exhaust all the Scriptures concerning the location of Sheol and Hades, but only give a couple to substantiate clearly where it is located.

1. Matthew 12:40. "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." Acts 2:27 says that Christ went to Hades and here we are told He went to the heart of the earth, so Hades is located in the heart (middle or center) of the earth.

2. Isaiah 14:9. Here Isaiah is speaking concerning the fall of Babylon. "Hell (Sheol) from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming..." The word "beneath" here is the Hebrew word "tachath." It comes from a Hebrew root word meaning to depress, the bottom, below and underneath. In other words, Sheol is located depressed, below, underneath and in the bottom of the earth.

3. (The two compartments within Sheol and Hades). Within Hades, we learn from Luke 16, there are two compartments separated by a tremendous gulf. Prior to Christ's ascension back to heaven in Acts 1:11, both saved and lost went to one of the two compartments in

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Hades. The gulf separated the two places which are called a place of torment (lost) and "Abraham's Bosom" or Paradise for, the saved. We must emphasize that Sheol and Hades are all-inclusive of both places. Only the context of the Scripture will determine whether a person went to Torment or Paradise within Hades.

Now in Luke 16 we find a Christian by the name of Lazarus who was very poor, financially, but when he died he went to the paradise side of Hades. Here is the record in Verse 22, "And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom..." This is also the compartment where Christ went for three days and nights before His Resurrection. Notice in Luke 23:43 when Christ was speaking to the thief on the cross, who had trusted Him as Saviour. "And Jesus said unto him (the thief), Verily I say unto thee, Today thou shalt be with me in paradise." Remember, no saved in the Old Testament ever went to Heaven, but rather to the Paradise side of Sheol and Hades.

Further, in Luke 16 we are told of a lost man who was very rich, but lost, and who went to the torment side of Hades. Here is the record in Verses 22b-24. "...the rich man also died and was buried (the grave claimed his body); and in Hell (Sheol claimed his soul and spirit) he lift up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame."

What a sad condition of the reality of what a lost person has to face when they die. Their joking about the Bible, their mocking of Christ, their evolutionary trash they have propagated, their taking of the Lord's name in vain and their exalted opinion of themselves that they are their own god will all come to an end. At death, they will be cast into this awful place of torment. Truly, they have played the fool as God has said in Psalm 14:1, "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." Little realizing, until it is too late that "The wicked shall be turned into Hell (Sheol), and all the nations that forget God" (Psalm 9:17).

We are now told that within Hades, between Paradise and Torment, that there is a tremendous gulf separating the two places, so that no one can go from one place to the other. Here is the record in Verse 26, "And beside all this, between us (Abraham and Lazarus) and you (lost men), there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence."

When the lost man realized there was no hope for him, as his eternal destiny was sealed in this place of torment, he then interceded for his five brothers that were still alive. In Verse 27 and 28 we have the account, "Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father that thou wouldest send him to my father's house, for I have five brethren: that he may testify unto them, least they also come to this place of torment."

This man was now a believer but it was too late for himself, so he prays that someone would tell his brothers. The Hebrew word for "pray" in Verse 27 brings out the strength of this man's feelings. The usual Greek word for "pray" when used in worship to God is "proseuchomai." But here a different word is used for "pray," which is "erotao." This word means interrogate, desire and entreat. In police work, interrogate means you keep asking in various, different ways until you get what you want, which is the truth. You are persistent with a strong desire. The Greek word for pray lets us know that this man was more than just casually asking Abraham, but had a strong desire, persistently asking in various different ways to persuade Abraham to send someone to warn his five brothers.

His persistence is recorded in Verse 30 after Abraham had just said to him, "...They (his brothers) have Moses and the prophets: let them hear them." Here is his reply, "and he said, Nay, Father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent (change their mind)." No doubt he was still trying, but to no avail for Abraham closed the conversation when he told him, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

This is a true and literal account of the conversation between a lost man in the Torment of Hades and Abraham in the Paradise side of Hades. A true account of where they were and what they said.

Now let us briefly analyze some important facts from Luke 16:19-31:

1. Hades has two compartments, one is Paradise and the other is Torment.

2. They are separated by a large gulf.

3. No one can pass from Torment to Paradise.

4. The lost and saved went immediately to their respective places.

5. They were taken there by the angels of God.

6. In Torment this man had a tongue, could feel the flames of Torment, could talk, could think and reason. He had all the attributes in Hades that he had on earth.

7. He possessed a spiritual or soulish body which had sensitivity and reasoning, but could not be annihilated by the flames of torment. We might point out that this is not his resurrected body unto damnation, which he will have when he is later cast into the Lake of Fire. This will be illustrated in Diagram 6.

8. No one will go back from Paradise to talk with those still alive on earth, as this lost man had requested.

9. Moses and the prophets did record the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ in the Bible. Since Christ did come back from the dead, there are those who will not believe it, neither would they if someone also came back today.

10. A doctrinal consideration--many claim this is a parable, but one will find that no parable ever uses a proper name. There are no exceptions. Hypothetically, if this were a parable, then the reality of Hell would be much worse for parables are given to illustrate Biblical truth.

We can only thank God for telling us of this awful place that we have been delivered from by trusting Jesus Christ as our personal Saviour. He gave His life to save ours--what a Saviour!

2. "Tartarus"

   "Tartarus," a verb, is translated Hell only once in the New Testament. It is found in 2nd Peter 2:4:

"For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to Hell (Tartarus), and delivered them unto chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment."

Now concerning the same angels, mention is made again in Jude 6:

"And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day (Great White Throne Judgment)."

The exact location of Tartarus is not known. This place is not Sheol or Hades or the eternal Lake of Fire, which is the same place as "Geenna" or Gehenna in the Greek. These are all separate places.

In Matthew 25:41 we learn that eventually the lost and the wicked angels will be together in their final place of torment, which is the everlasting Lake of Fire. This place was originally created by God for the Devil and his angels, prior to God's creating man on the earth. Since Adam plunged the whole human race under sin and it's condemnation, those who do not escape by the blood of Christ will share their eternal torment with the ones it was created for.

"Then shall he say to them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed (lost), into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels."

Even though the exact location is not given, we have located it under the earth so we may refer to it from time to time on our diagram.

3. "Gehenna"

   "Gehenna" is translated Hell correctly. It is properly translated 12 times, eleven of which are spoken of by Christ, Himself, in Matthew, Mark and Luke. It is recorded one other time in James. This is the final abode of the wicked, and the Devil and his angels. Here are the passages:

1. Matthew 5:22,29,30;10:28;18:19;23:15,33

2. Mark 9:43,45,47

3. Luke 12:5

4. James 3:6

This Hell (Greek-Gehenna), the final continuous torment, is a condition of unspeakable misery. Other than called Hell, many other references are made to this same place. Here are a few:

1. Mark 9:46, "Where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

2. Revelation 21:8, "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death."

3. Matthew 8:12, "But the children of the Kingdom, shall be cast out into outer darkness: where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." These "children of the Kingdom" are Jews, not the church. They are called children, yet not saved. These in the Old Testament, up to Calvary, who have rejected the Messiah, will be cast in outer darkness at the end of the Tribulation.

4. Matthew 13:42, "And shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."

5. Luke 3:17, "Whose fan is in his (Christ's) hand, and he will throughly purge his floor, and will gather the wheat (the saved) into his garner; but the chaff (the lost) he will burn with fire unquenchable." This takes place at the end of the Tribulation when Christ judges the nations.

6. Jude 13b, "...to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever."

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

7. Revelation 14:9-11, "...If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark ("666") in his forehead, or in his hand, The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night..."

8. 2nd Thessalonians 1:8, "In flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

9. 2nd Thessalonians 1:9, "Punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."

4. Bottomless Pit

   The Bottomless Pit does not appear in the Old Testament. This is found seven times in the New Testament and, in all cases, translates from the Greek word "abussos" or abyss. It is properly translated and the Greek word means, "depthless, deep or bottomless." It is a separate place of its own. The exact location is not given, but many scholars believe it is an extended compartment of the Torment side of Hades. Whether this is true or not, no one really knows. Vine's Expository Words of The Greek New Testament states "It describes an immeasurable depth, the underworld, the lower regions, the Abyss of Sheol." We have shown it as connected to "Torment of Sheol" in our diagrams for further references.

   Here is where it is found in the new Testament, all being in the book of Revelation:

Revelation 9:1,2,11; 11:7; 17:8; 20:1,3

In Revelation 20:7 this bottomless pit is also called a prison. This pit is locked and controlled by God, Who send His angels to unlock it at His discretion. It contains smoke, as of a great furnace, ungodly creatures called locusts, the Beast (Anti-Christ) and Satan, himself, when he is confined there a thousand years.

1. The key to the pit. (Revelation 9:1 and 20:1)

   "And the fifth angel sounded and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth; and to him (angel) was given the key of the bottomless pit." "And I saw an angel come down from Heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand."

2. Locusts and smoke. (Revelation 9:2,3)

   These creatures are released to torment people on the earth for five months during the Tribulation Period. Here is the word: "And he (angel) opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit. And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth: and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power."

   These locusts are not to kill (Verse 5), only torment those who have not the seal of God in their foreheads (Verse 4). "...in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it: and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them" (Verse 6).

   We have no idea what is in the underworld or what the future holds, but God was gracious enough to reveal to us about this place and these creatures. This takes place during the 7-Year Tribulation Period at the blowing of the Fifth Trumpet of Judgment.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

3. The Anti-Christ or the Beast. (Revelation 11:7).

   In Revelation 11, God's two witnesses preach for 3-1/2 years (Verse 3) and finish their testimony (Verse 7). They are allowed by God to be killed in Jerusalem (Verse 18) and their bodies put on public display for 3-1/2 days (Verse 19). They are resurrected and then ascend directly to Heaven (Verses 11,12). The one who kills these two witnesses of God is none other than the Anti-Christ, himself. He is called the Beast in Verse 7 as this describes his character, and he comes out of the bottomless pit. Here is the record, "And when they (two witnesses) shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them."

4. Satan in the Bottomless Pit. (Revelation 20:2,3,7)

   When Christ comes back at the end of the Tribulation Period, He judges the nations in Matthew 24 and 25 in preparation for setting up the earthly Messianic Kingdom for 1,000 years. At this time, He confines Satan, himself, in chains to the Bottomless Pit for 1,000 years. After the 1,000 years, he is loosed for a short season and then cast into the Lake of Fire. Here is the record, "And he (the angel) laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled, and after that he must be loosed a little season. And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison."

   A man told me once that he thought Satan was chained today. If that is true, it must be an awful long chain! Another person was kidding me and said he thought Satan was chained to him! No, he will not be chained (confined) until the end of the 7-Year Tribulation.

We have identified Sheol and Hades, Tartarus, the Lake of Fire (Geenna), the Bottomless Pit, Torment and Paradise. Now, check Diagram 1 as a refresher of these various places. Once the believer has a mental picture of these various places, it becomes much easier to discern the various Scriptures that relate to the subject of Hell.

Hell Part 2: The Differences between Hades and the Lake of Fire

Now let's get into a little more detail by becoming familiar with some Hebrew and Greek words that are key to understanding this topic.

Sheol (Hebrew) - It is the non-permanent place or temporary address of the disembodied souls of dead. It is not the grave or sepulcher, nor is it the eternal location of the souls of the dead. It is the same as the Greek word "Hades", which we will look at in a moment. Prior to Jesus Christ's resurrection, both the souls of the evil and the righteous went there after death. It is translated "grave" 31 times, "hell" 31 times, and "pit" 3 times in King James Version (KJV) of the Bible.

Sheol (or Hades) has two separate halves. One side was and is reserved for the torment of the evil, while the other side, called "Abraham's Bosom" in Luke 16:22, was for the comfort of the righteous. There is and impassable canyon, or gulf, between the two halves. When Christ was resurrected, he led the righteous out of Sheol to Heaven. Many (probably not all) of the Old Testament saints were resurrected into their immortal bodies at that time (Matthew 27:51-53). Since then, the souls of all of the saved people go directly to Heaven when their bodies die. The lost people still go to Sheol and join the lost people of the Old Testament in torment on one side of the canyon when they die. The other side of Sheol formerly known as Abraham's Bosom has been vacant since Jesus Christ led the saints within it to heaven after His resurrection.

Sheol (or Hades) is described as being "in the heart of the earth" in Matthew 12:40 and is said to be below, down, or beneath in passages such as Deuteronomy 32:22, Isaiah 14:9, and Ezekiel 31:16.

The English word "Hell" refers to a place of eternal punishment for the wicked. Its meaning does not distinguish between the two separate places for the wicked to be punished, one temporary for the soul, and the other, the Lake of Fire, permanent for the soul and body. Nor does its meaning include the place of comfort for saints prior to Christ's resurrection. In normal English conversation, "Hell" is used only in the negative sense, with no saved people ever going there.

This caused some inadequate translations of "Sheol" and "Hades". Often these words are translated "Hell", which, as just explained, is rather ambiguous and non-descriptive. In many other places "Sheol" and "Hades" are translated as "grave", but the grave is only the place for the body after death, not the place for the soul. This confusion often occurs when the verse refers to a righteous man going to "Sheol", such as men like Jacob, Joseph, (Genesis 37:35) and Job (Job 14:13). Of course, these men did not go to a place of torment, but to the comfort side of Sheol (Hades), called Abraham's Bosom.

Hades (Greek) - It is identical to Sheol (Hebrew). It is the non-permanent place or temporary address of the disembodied souls of dead. It is not the grave or sepulcher, nor is it the eternal location of the souls of the dead. Hades is translated "Hell" 10 times and "grave" once by KJV. It is the place for the soul, not the body.

Gehenna (Greek, but originally from a Hebrew name) - translated "Hell" all 12 times in KJV It is the permanent place for destruction of the "... soul and body ..." (Matthew 10:28). It is a place of "... fire that never shall be quenched" (Mark 9:45). In most of the references, it is clear from the context that those who enter Gehenna, do so in their bodies, not merely as bodiless souls. For this to happen, it must occur after the resurrection of the damned at the great white throne of judgment. Therefore, Gehenna is the Lake of Fire described in Revelation 19 and 20. It is presently uninhabited, but the Beast and the False Prophet will be cast into it at the end of the tribulation (Revelation 19:20). One thousand years later, Satan will be cast into it (Revelation 20:10) and will be followed shortly by the lost people of all previous time periods (Revelation 20:15). They will all enter Gehenna together, in there resurrected bodies, where they will remain in torment for all eternity.

This Revelation 20 passage makes it clear that Hades and the Lake of Fire are not the same place. At the great white throne judgement at the end of the 1000 year kingdom, those in Hades will be removed from Hades, as Revelation 20:13 says, "... hell (Hades) delivered up the dead which were in them ...." And those which were in Hades will be cast into the Lake of Fire (Revelation 20:14-15).

Note that the timing of this relocation of the lost occurs just before where Revelation 21:1 says, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea." Hades, which will be emptied in Revelation 20:13, apparently will them be destroyed, since it is in the heart of the first earth.

The future destruction of the wicked is symbolized by the Valley of Hinnom to which Gehenna refers. It is a place south of Jerusalem where the bodies of dead animals and rubbish were taken to be burned. The Valley of Hinnom was also the site of much human sacrifice to the pagan god Molech (2 Kings 23:10, 2 Chronicles 28:3, 33:6, Jeremiah 32:35). The fire burned constantly in the valley since additional fuel was frequently being cast into it.

"And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but the valley of slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet, till there be no place" (Jeremiah 7:31-32). Here we see that in the Valley of Hinnom is a place called "Tophet" whose name means "place of fire".

"For Tophet is ordained of old; yea, for the king it is prepared; he hath made it deep and large: the pile thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the LORD, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it" (Isaiah 30:33).

limne pur (Greek) - "lake of fire" occurs 4 times, all in Revelation 19 and 20. This is Gehenna, into which the resurrected damned are cast. Limne means "lake" and is translated as such all 10 times it occurs by the KJV. Pur means "fire" and is translated so 73 times by the KJV while being translated "fiery" once.

Other key terms

tartaroo (Greek) - Refers to "Tartarus" and only occurs once in 2 Peter 2:4 where it is translated "hell" "For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment ...." This is probably a separate place from Hades, and may be a place only for fallen angels. There are no Biblical references to people going there.

grave (English) - The place for the fleshly body after death, sepulcher. It is not the abode of the soul or spirit.

abussos (Greek) - Abyss. It is translated "bottomless pit" 5 times, "deep" twice, and "bottomless" twice by KJV. It is where Satan will be locked up for the 1000 years of Christ's reign on earth (Revelation 20:1-3). This Abyss is also where the Legion of devils begged Jesus not to send them in Luke 8:30-31. And this Abyss is the bottomless pit that will be opened at the fifth trumpet judgment of Revelation 9:1-11. The beast that will come out of it at the fifth trumpet is mentioned in Revelation 11:7 and 17:8. This Abyss is thought by many to be the same as the impassable gulf described in Luke 16:26.

chasma (Greek) - a gaping opening, chasm, or gulf. It is translated "gulf" in its only occurrence in Luke 16:26, where it is the canyon separating the torment and comfort sides of Hades.

Abraam kolpos (Greek) - Abraham's Bosom (Luke 16:22). Abraam is translated "Abraham" all 73 times. Kolpos is translated bosom 5 times and creek once (Acts 27:39).

paradeisos - Paradise. It is translated "paradise" all 3 times by the KJV. "Paradise" is not the English translation of any other Greek word in scripture. First we hear the words of the thief and Jesus Christ on their crosses in Luke 23:42-43, "And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in paradise." In 2 Corinthians 12:4, Paul tells how he was "... caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter." In Revelation 2:7, Jesus told the church of Ephesus "... To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God." The tree of life is also mentioned in Revelation 22:2, in the new heaven and new earth, where it appears to be not just one tree, but a type of tree of which there are more than one. Since the three references show paradise to be in different places, then either paradise has been relocated once and will yet be relocated again, or it is a general term.

Summary

Sheol (Hebrew) and Hades (Greek) are the temporary place of torment for the souls of the wicked dead. Prior to Christ's resurrection, saints were kept and comforted in the now vacant half of Hades, known as Abraham's Bosom. Gehenna (Greek, but from a Hebrew name) is the Lake of Fire for the permanent place of torment of the souls of the wicked dead in their resurrected bodies. Hell is a rather general and inadequate term that is often used to refer to either Gehenna or the torment side of Hades, both by those who know the basic difference between these two specific places and by those who do not.

Can the word hell simply mean the grave?

Some say that there is no hell as a place for eternal torment and suffering. Instead they say that hell is only the grave. However, they base their belief on a few verses where the words Sheol and Hades were translated as grave or pit. The problem with this is that the references that are used deny the context of what is being presented. When you look at the context you find many problems with translating Sheol and Hades as a grave, which is normally the Hebrew word qeber. There are many graves, but only one Sheol or Hades. Man can put someone in the grave (qeber), but never puts anyone in Sheol or Hades (1 Kings 13:29-30). Man can touch a grave (qeber), but does not touch Sheol or Hades (Numbers 19:16). Someone can have their own grave (qeber), but the Bible never speaks of each person having their own Sheol, or Hades (2 Samuel 3:32).

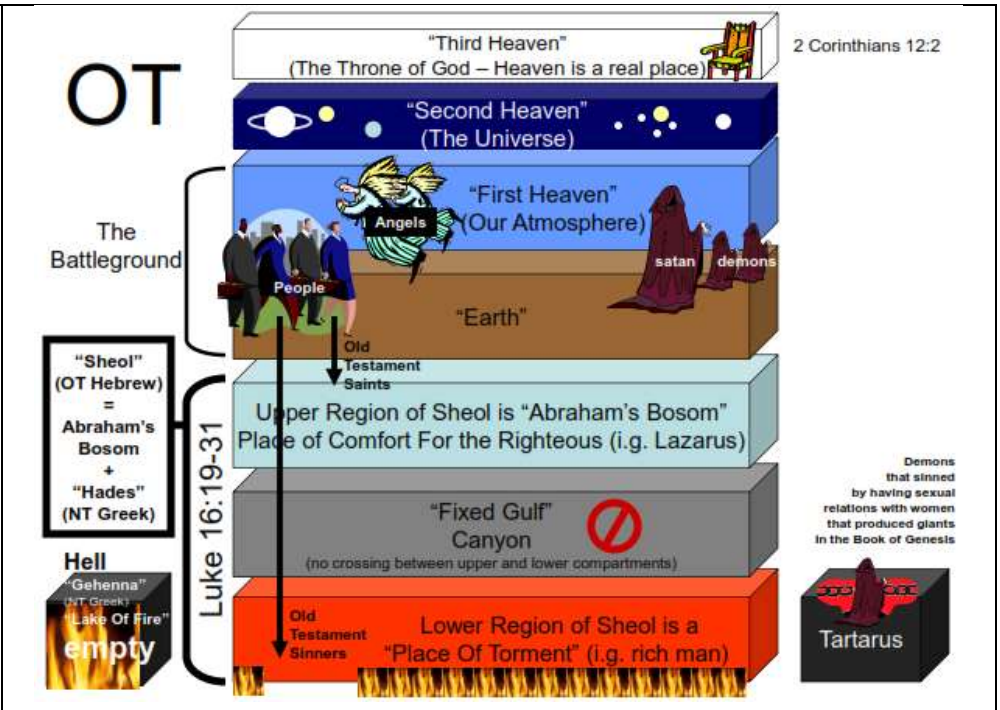
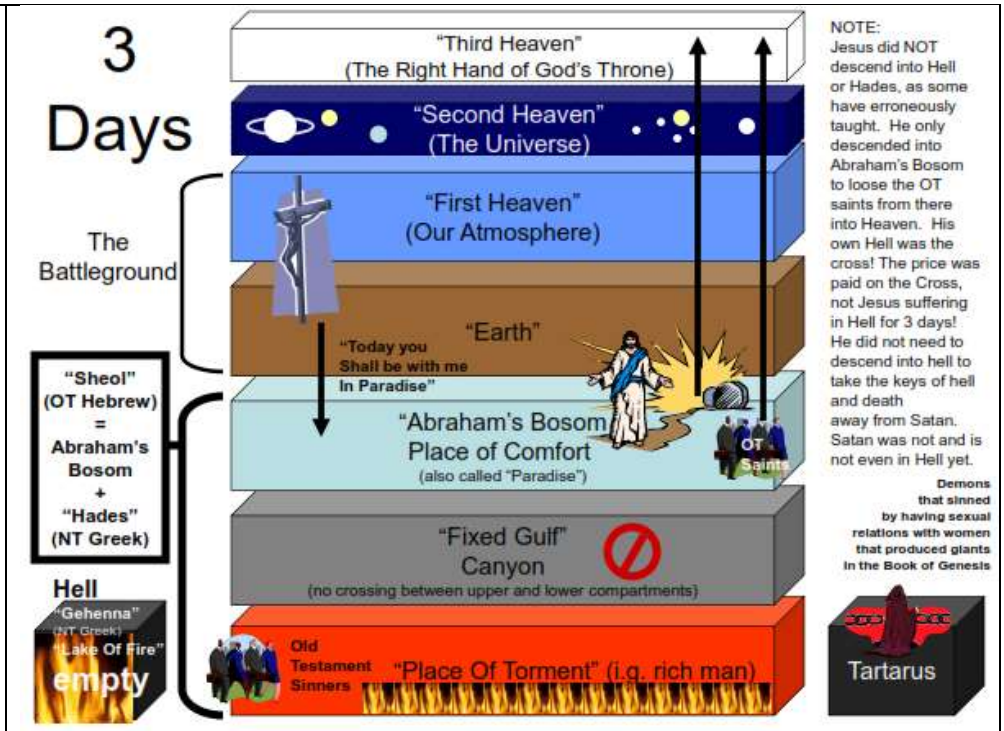
Hell, Gehenna, Hades, Grave, Tartarus, Abraham's Bosom, Lake Of Fire, Abyss, Sea, Bottomless Pit

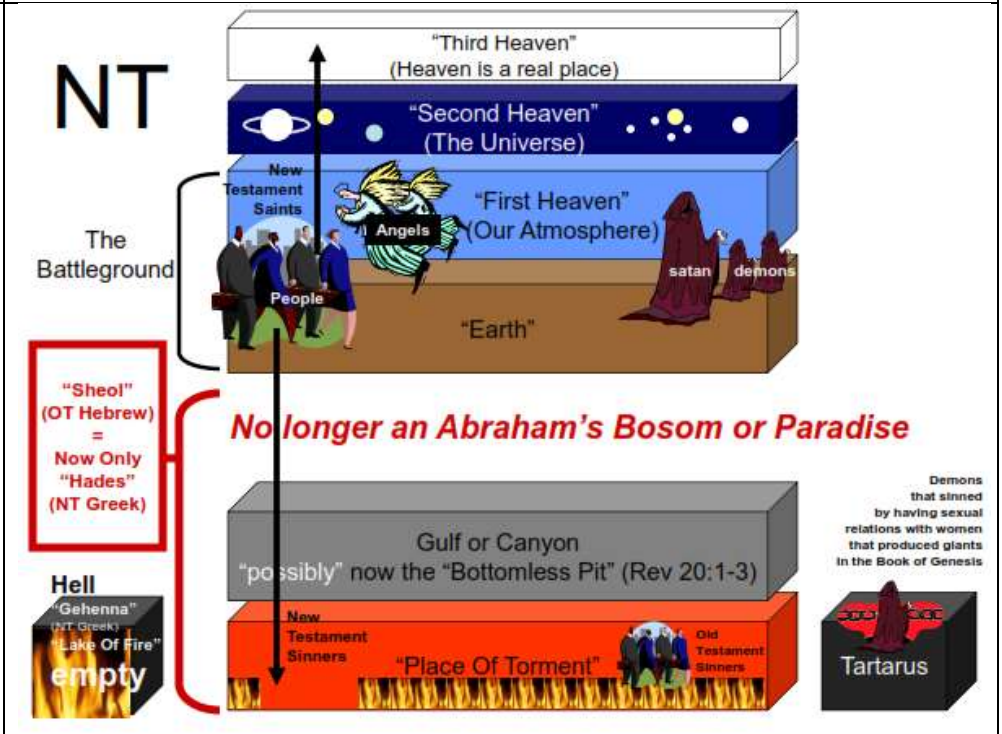
I hope the following charts and illustrations will help you understand this subject better!



One must go to the OT Hebrew & NT Greek in each scripture to understand the terminology and to paint the right picture of eternal damnation. We must know which Greek and Hebrew words are being used. We must also balance the scriptures with other scriptures. Further we must interpret the scriptures by other scriptures. And finally we must keep scriptures in their context. Without doing all these things, we might end up being confused about the subject of eternal damnation or any other Bible doctrine we study.

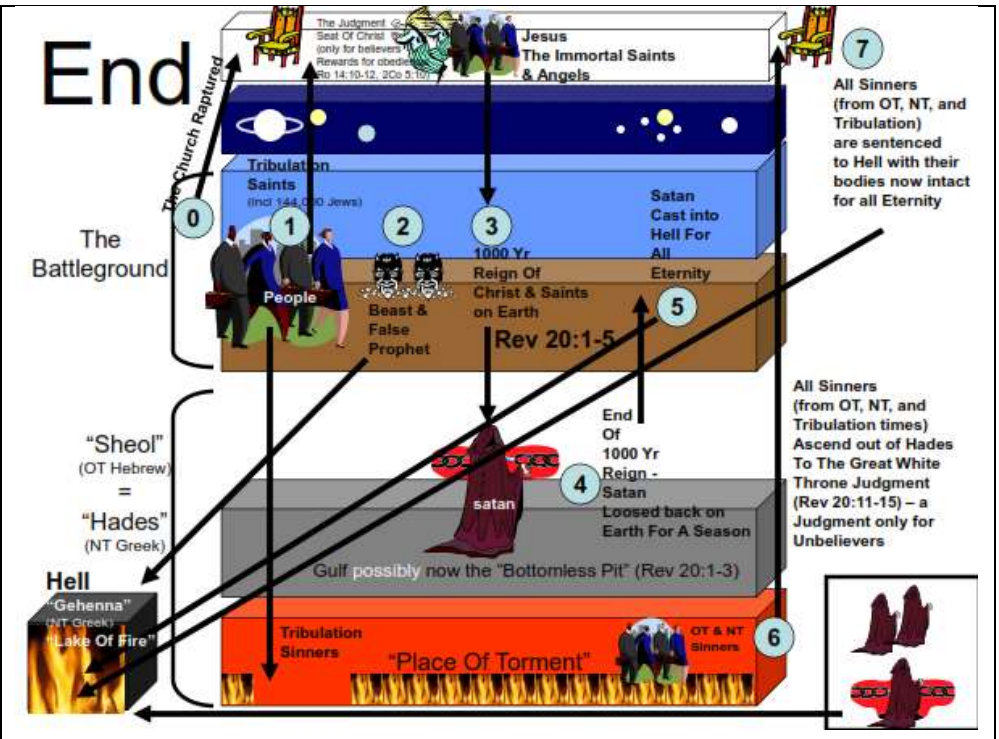
• There are two different words in the NT, both which were erroneously translated as "hell". One is the greek word "Hades," the other is "Gehenna." But when Jesus and the NT writers spoke using the different terms, they intended a distinction.

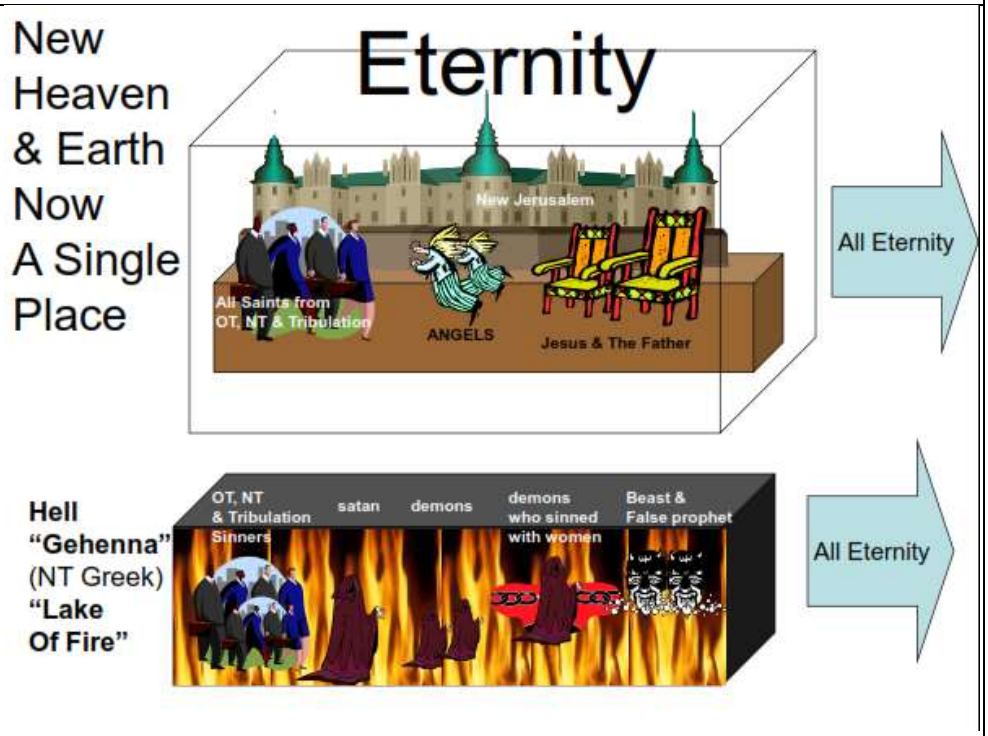




• Also the word "hades" in the NT and "sheol" in the OT is sometimes translated as "the grave" which can also be a bit misleading.

• Jesus' story of the "Rich Man & Lazarus" in Luke 16:19-31 begins to unravel the mystery for us.





• Sheol, in the Old Testament was comprised of two compartments. One compartment was the upper level called "Abraham's Bosom" which was a place of comfort where OT saints went until Jesus could come and be resurrected. No one was allowed to go to heaven until Jesus had returned there first. At Jesus' resurrection the Bible teaches he led these captives from Abraham's Bosom to heaven with Him. Along the way up to heaven behind Jesus some of them even came back into their buried bodies for a short while and walked around in Jerusalem (see Matthew 27:53). The second compartment that still exists today in NT times is "Hades". Hades is a different place than "Hell" or "Gehenna." It was the lower compartment of Sheol, a place of eternal torment, with a gulf separating the two compartments from one another. Now that Jesus has come and been resurrected, there is no more upper compartment, nor is there a need for it. It was only a holding place for OT saints. The Bible teaches that now believers go straight to heaven when they die, not to a holding place. To be absent from the body is now to be present with the Lord. Today unbelievers go straight to Hades (also called "the sea" of people in Rev chapter 20) awaiting the Great White Throne Judgment at the end of time, after which they shall be thrown into Hell (Gehenna) for all eternity.

Views of Hell

Three Views of Hell

http://www.rethinkinghell.com/welcome

Excerpt:

There are three views of Hell, labelled most efficiently: Traditionalism, Conditionalism and Universalism. The traditional, majority view is commonly and non-pejoratively called "Traditionalism" in this context, and sometimes delineated "Eternal, Conscious Torment" (ECT). Conditionalism is short for Conditional Immortality, a perspective incorporating Annihilationism. Universalism is sometimes referred to as Universal Restoration or Universal Reconciliation.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Traditionalism holds that Hell involves a permanent state of conscious suffering. Universalism is at the opposite pole, suggesting that everybody eventually ends up reconciled to God, after a period of refinement in Hell. Conditionalism rejects this, agreeing with Traditionalism that Hell is permanent, and that the unsaved will suffer. Where we [conditionalists] mainly disagree with Traditionalism, is in the duration of the experience of Hell. We believe that it ends, because the person (body and soul) is finally destroyed. This, including any suffering involved in the process, is how the Bible portrays final punishment.

What the Bible Says About Hell

Key Facts About Eternity

(1) Everyone will exist eternally either in heaven or hell (Daniel 12:2,3; Matthew 25:46; John 5:28; Revelation 20:14,15).

(2) Everyone has only one life in which to determine their destiny (Hebrews 9:27).

(3) Heaven or hell is determined by whether a person believes (puts their trust) in Christ alone to save them (John 3:16, 36, etc.).

Key Passages About Hell

(1) Hell was designed originally for Satan and his demons (Matthew 25:41; Revelation 20:10).

(2) Hell will also punish the sin of those who reject Christ (Matthew 13:41,50; Revelation 20:11-15; 21:8).

(3) Hell is conscious torment.

- Matthew 13:50 "furnace of fire…weeping and gnashing of teeth"
- Mark 9:48 "where their worm does not die, and the fire is not quenched"
- Revelation 14:10 "he will be tormented with fire and brimstone"

(4) Hell is eternal and irreversible.

- Revelation 14:11 "the smoke of their torment goes up forever and ever and they have no rest day and night"
- Revelation 20:14 "This is the second death, the lake of fire"
- Revelation 20:15 "If anyone's name was not found written in the book of life, he was thrown into the lake of fire"

Erroneous Views of Hell

(1) The second chance view – After death there is still a way to escape hell.

Answer: "It is appointed unto men once to die and after that the judgment" (Hebrews 9:27).

(2) Universalism – All are eternally saved.

Answer: It denies the truth of salvation through Christ which means that a person decides to either trust in Christ or else he/she rejects Christ and goes to hell (John 3:16;3:36).

(3) Annihilationism – Hell means a person dies like an animal – ceases to exist.

Answer: It denies the resurrection of the unsaved (John 5:28, etc. – see above). It denies conscious torment (see above).

Objections to the Biblical View of Hell

(1) A loving God would not send people to a horrible hell.

Response: God is just (Romans 2:11).

- God has provided the way of salvation to all (John 3:16,17; 2 Corinthians 5:14,15; 1 Timothy 2:6; 4:10; Titus 2:11; 2 Peter 3:9).
- Even those who haven't heard of Christ are accountable for God's revelation in nature (Romans 1:20). God will seek those who seek Him (Matthew 7:7; Luke 19:10).
- Therefore God doesn't send people to hell, they choose it (Romans 1:18,21,25).

(2) Hell is too severe a punishment for man's sin.

Response: God is holy-perfect (1 Peter 1:14,15).

- Sin is willful opposition to God our creator (Romans 1:18-32).
- Our sin does merit hell (Romans 1:32; 2:2,5,6).

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

- What is unfair and amazing is that Christ died for our sin and freely offers salvation to all (Romans 2:4; 3:22-24; 4:7,8; 5:8,9).

Biblical Terms Describing Where the Dead Are

- Sheol - a Hebrew term simply describing “the grave” or “death” – Does not refer to “hell” specifically
- Hades - A Greek term that usually refers to hell – a place of torment (Luke 10:15; 16:23, etc.)
- Gehenna - A Greek term (borrowed from a literal burning dump near Jerusalem) that always refers to hell – a place of torment (Matthew 5:30; 23:33)
- “Lake of fire”- the final abode of unbelievers after they are resurrected (Revelation 20:14,15)
- “Abraham’s bosom” - (Luke 16:22) a place of eternal comfort
- “Paradise” - (Luke 23:43) a place of eternal comfort
- “With the Lord” - a key phrase describes where church age believers are after death (Philippians 1:23; 1 Thessalonians 4:17; 2 Corinthians 5:8)
- “New heavens and earth” – where believers will be after they are resurrected (Revelation 20:4-6; 21:1-4)

Conclusion

Our curiosity about the abode of the dead is not completely satisfied by biblical terms or verses. What we do know is that either eternal torment in hell or eternal joy in heaven awaits all people after death, based on whether they trust in Christ’s payment for sin or reject Christ.

Sheol

Old Testament. The Hebrew word seol [l/a.v], "Sheol, " refers to the grace or the abode of the dead (Psalms 88:3 Psalms 88:5). Through much of the Old Testament period, it was believed that all went one place, whether human or animal (Psalms 49:12 Psalms 49:14 Psalms 49:20), whether righteous or wicked (Eccl 9:2-3). No one could avoid Sheol (Psalm 49:9 ; 89:48), which was thought to be down in the lowest parts of the earth (Deut 32:22 ; 1 Sam 28:11-15 ; Job 26:5 ; Psalm 86:13 ; Isa 7:11 ; Ezekiel 31:14-16 Ezekiel 31:18).

Unlike this world, Sheol is devoid of love, hate, envy, work, thought, knowledge, and wisdom (Ecclesiastes 9:6 Ecclesiastes 9:10). Descriptions are bleak: There is no light (Job 10:21-22 ; 17:13 ; Psalms 88:6 Psalms 88:12 ; 143:3), no remembrance (Psalm 6:5 ; 88:12 ; Eccl 9:5), no praise of God (Psalm 6:5 ; 30:9 ; 88:10-12 ; 115:17 ; Isa 38:18)in fact, no sound at all (Psalm 94:17 ; 115:17). Its inhabitants are weak, trembling shades (Job 26:5 ; Psalm 88:10-12 ; Isa 14:9-10) who can never hope to escape from its gates (Job 10:21 ; 17:13-16 ; Isa 38:10). Sheol is like a ravenous beast that swallows the living without being sated (Prov 1:12 ; 27:20 ; Isa 5:14). Some thought the dead were cut off from God (Psalm 88:3-5 ; Isa 38:11); while others believed that God's presence reached even to Sheol (Psalm 139:8).

Toward the end of the Old Testament, God revealed that there will be a resurrection of the dead (Isa 26:19). Sheol will devour no longer; instead God will swallow up Death (Isa 25:8). The faithful will be rewarded with everlasting life while the rest will experience eternal contempt (Dan 12:2). This theology developed further in the intertestamental period.

The New Testament. By the time of Jesus, it was common for Jews to believe that the righteous dead go to a place of comfort while the wicked go to Hades ("Hades" normally translates "Sheol" in the LXX), a place of torment (Luke 16:22-23). Similarly, in Christianity, believers who die go immediately to be with the Lord (2 Cor 5:8 ; Php 1:23). Hades is a hostile place whose gates cannot prevail against the church (Matt 16:18). In fact, Jesus himself holds the keys of Death and Hades (Rev 1:18). Death and Hades will ultimately relinquish their dead and be cast into the lake of fire (Rev 20:13-14).

The fact that theology develops within the Old Testament and between the Old Testament and the New Testament does not mean that the Bible is contradictory or contains errors. It only indicates progressive revelation, that God revealed more of himself and his plan of salvation as time went on. That some Old Testament saints believed in Sheol, while the New Testament teaches clearly about heaven and hell, is nor more of a problem than that the Old Testament contains a system of atonement by animal sacrifice now made obsolete in Christ (Heb 10:4-10) or that the Old Testament teaches God is one (Deut 6:4) while the New Testament reveals a Trinity.

Hades

Greek term widely used to denote the deity of the underworld and the abode of the dead. The New Testament use of Hades (hades [a&/dh"]) builds on its Hebrew parallel, Sheol (se'ol), which was the preferred translation in the Septuagint.

The Old Testament. Sheol refers primarily to death and the abode of the dead, both godly and ungodly (Gen 37:25 ; Psalm 16:10 ; 88:10-12 ; Isa 14:9). These conscious souls face a lethargic existence, apparently without reward or retribution (Job 10:21 ; Eccl 9:10 ; Isa 14:10). Since death is not a natural occurrence but invaded creation through the fall and Satan's destructive work (Gen. 2-3), the Old Testament personifies Sheol as the power of Satan and his demonic hosts (Job 18:14 ; Psalm 18:4-5 ; Isa 28:15 ; Jer 9:21). While an antagonist, Sheol ultimately exists at Yahweh's service (1 Sam 2:6 ; Psalm 55:23 ; 139:8). The Old Testament confidently awaits God's victory over Sheol (Psalm 98 ; Isa 25:8 ; Hosea 13:14). But the precise expectation of a bodily resurrection for the wicked and the related conception of Sheol as an intermediate state is late (Dan 12:2).

The New Testament. This indeterminate picture of Sheol and its Greek translation, Hades, allowed varying interpretations by intertestamental Jews. In the New Testament Christ's revelation and salvific work decisively shape this term. For Christ has established authority over all powers (Eph 1:20-23), even the one who "holds the power of death" (Heb 2:14 ; 2 Tim 1:10). He is the "Lord of both the dead and the living" (Rom 14:9).

Hades is the state in which all the dead exist. In the New Testament a descent to Hades may simply refer to someone's death and disembodied existence. In this sense even Jesus enters Hades. Following David's prophecy in Psalm 16:10, Peter interprets the resurrection as God delivering Jesus from Hades (Acts 2:27 Acts 2:31). Similarly, Jesus prophesies that the Son of Man will be delivered from the heart of the earth, just as God delivered Jonah from Hades (Matt 12:40). In both instances, Hades refers to a disembodied existence.

The New Testament does not explore Jesus' precise residence or activity while in Hades, unlike the later church traditions of the "harrowing of hell" or a "Hades Gospel." It is widely accepted that the proclamation in 1 Peter 3:19 occurs after rather than before his resurrection (v. 18, "made alive by the Spirit"), and that the dead in 1 Peter 4:6 are deceased believers who heard the gospel while alive. However, Jesus' descent to Hades is theologically important. This is the path of the Old Testament righteous (Isa 53). Furthermore, this descent confirms that God assumed human nature and even our sinful destiny, death (2 Corinthians 5:14 2 Corinthians 5:21 ; Heb 2:14). Finally, Jesus' deliverance from Hades establishes the new life for humanity (1 Cor 15).

Jesus' parable of the rich man and Lazarus portrays additional features of this state (Luke 16:19-31). An unbridgeable chasm separates the wicked and the righteous dead. Death has fixed the human's destiny without further opportunity for repentance. The rich man recalls his fate and that of his family, and cries out in distress for Abraham to send them a sign and relieve his punishment, but to no avail. Usually the details of parables should not be pressed to teach doctrine. In this case Jesus' vivid description of the basic conditions of the godly and ungodly dead is indispensable to the parable's point. Other Scriptures also portray the requests of the dead and the fixity of their future (2 Col 5:10 ; Heb 9:27 ; Rev 6:9-10).

Hades is the place where the wicked dead reside and are punished. In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, the rich man experiences torment in Hades. This is the intermediate state, for the bodily resurrection and the final judgment are still future. Jesus' point is that Hades foreshadows the rich man's final judgment. Similarly, Lazarus rests at Abraham's side, connoting the joyous abode of the righteous dead (Luke 16:23).

This differentiation between the wicked and the righteous dead continues throughout the New Testament. The righteous dead are "at home with the Lord" (2 Cor 5:8), "in paradise" (Luke 23:43), or in the presence of God (Rev 6:9 ; 7:9 ; 14:3). The unrighteous are held in punishment and wicked angels are imprisoned in Tartarus, a Greek term designating the lowest part of Hades (1 Peter 3:19 ; 2 Peter 2:4 2 Peter 2:9 ; Jude 6). Jesus' woe to unrepentant Capernaum that it will be brought down to Hades is not simply a prophecy of its earthly demise, but its judgment (Luke 10:15).

For some commentations these references to Hades and the dead are problematic and contradict the Old Testament. G. Vos resolves these problems by distinguishing between Hades as a disembodied state for all the dead and the specific abode of the ungodly. As he astutely notes, only the ungodly reside in a punitive place called Hades. The godly dead are with Jesus in a disembodied state also called Hades. The New Testament does significantly modify the Old Testament concept of Hades as a shadowy abode of all the dead. This further development, however, concurs with Jesus' lordship over the living and the dead.

Hades' power is conquered. Like the Old Testament, the New Testament personifies Hades and associated terms, such as death, abyss, and Abaddon, as the demonic forces behind sin and ruin (Acts 2:24 ; Romans 5:14 Romans 5:17 ; 1 Cor 15:25-26 ; Rev 6:8 ; 9:1-11 ; 20:14). When Jesus promises that the "gates of Hades" will never overcome the church (Matt 16:18), this phrase parallels Old Testament expressions tied to evil's power and persecution (Psalm 9:13 ; 107:17-20). Jesus' reference to the future in Matthew 16:18 concurs with Revelation's vision of Satan's final attack on God's people (19:19; 20:7-9). Jesus has promised that he will conquer Hades so that it will not defeat the church. Indeed, his resurrection establishes that this evil empire is already broken. Christ now holds the keys, the authority over death and Hades (Rev 1:18)!

The end of Hades. Jesus is the conqueror of all powers, the exalted One, and as such he has graced his church (Eph 4:7-10). With Hades vanquished (Rev 1:18) believers know that nothing, not even death, cannot separate them from Christ (Rom 8:39). They still await the next act in the history of salvation, when Jesus consummates his kingdom. Then Hades will release its dead for the final resurrection and judgment (Rev 20:13). Thereafter Hades, Satan, and the reprobate will be thrown into Gehenna, the place of God's final retributive punishment. (Hades has only a limited existence; Gehenna or hell is the final place of judgment for the wicked. Many English versions foster confusion by translating both terms as "hell.")

In summary, the New Testament affirms that Christ has conquered Hades. While dead believers exist in this state, they are also "with the Lord." Hades also denotes the vanquished stronghold of Satan's forces whose end is certain and the intermediate place of punishment for the wicked dead until the final judgment.

The meaning of Hell in the Bible

Hell: derived from the Saxon helan, to cover; hence the covered or the invisible place. In Scripture there are three words so rendered:

-- Sheol, occurring in the Old Testament sixty-five times. This word sheol is derived from a root-word meaning "to ask," "demand;" hence insatiableness (Proverbs 30:15,16). It is rendered "grave" thirty-one times (Genesis 37:35; 42:38; 44:29,31; I Samuel 2:6, etc.). The Revisers have retained this rendering in the historical books with the original word in the margin, while in the poetical books they have reversed this rule.

> In thirty-one cases in the Authorized Version this word is rendered "hell," the place of disembodied spirits. The inhabitants of sheol are "the congregation of the dead" (Proverbs 21:16). It is (a) the abode of the wicked (Numbers 16:33; Job 24:19; Psalms 9:17; 31:17, etc.); (b) of the good (Psalms 16:10; 30:3; 49:15; 86:13, etc.).
> Sheol is described as deep (Job 11:8), dark (10:21,22), with bars (17:16). The dead "go down" to it (Numbers 16:30,33; Ezek. 31:15,16,17).

(Heb., "the all-demanding world" = Gr. Hades, "the unknown region"), the invisible world of departed souls.

-- Hades - The Greek word hades of the New Testament has the same scope of signification as sheol of the Old Testament. It is a prison (I Peter 3:19), with gates and bars and locks (Matthew 16:18; Revelation 1:18), and it is downward (Matthew 11:23; Luke 10:15).

> The righteous and the wicked are separated. The blessed dead are in that part of hades called paradise (Luke 23:43). They are also said to be in Abraham's bosom (Luke 16:22).

Hades is that which is out of sight, a Greek word used to denote the state or place of the dead. All the dead alike go into this place. To be buried, to go down to the grave, to descend into hades, are equivalent expressions. In the LXX. this word is the usual rendering of the Hebrew sheol, the common receptacle of the departed (Genesis 42:38; Psalms 139:8; Hosea 13:14; Isaiah 14:9). This term is of comparatively rare occurrence in the Greek New Testament. Our Lord speaks of Capernaum as being "brought down to hell" (hades), i.e., simply to the lowest debasement, (Matthew 11:23). It is contemplated as a kind of kingdom which could never overturn the foundation of Christ's kingdom (16:18), i.e., Christ's church can never die.

-- Gehenna, in most of its occurrences in the Greek New Testament, designates the place of the lost (Matthew 23:33). The fearful nature of their condition there is described in various figurative expressions (Matthew 8:12; 13:42; 22:13; 25:30; Luke 16:24, etc.). (See HINNOM)

(originally Ge bene Hinnom; i.e., "the valley of the sons of Hinnom"), a deep, narrow glen to the south of Jerusalem, where the idolatrous Jews offered their children in sacrifice to Molech (II Chronicles 28:3; 33:6; Jeremiah 7:31; 19:2-6). This valley afterwards became the common receptacle for all the refuse of the city. Here the dead bodies of animals and of criminals, and all kinds of filth, were cast and consumed by fire kept always burning. It thus in process of time became the image of the place of everlasting destruction. In this sense it is used by our Lord in Matthew 5:22,29,30; 10:28; 18:9; 23:15,33; Mark 9:43,45,47; Luke 12:5. In these passages, and also in James 3:6, the word is uniformly rendered "hell," the Revised Version placing "Gehenna" in the margin. (See HELL; HINNOM .)

-- Hinnom - a deep, narrow ravine separating Mount Zion from the so-called "Hill of Evil Counsel." It took its name from "some ancient hero, the son of Hinnom." It is first mentioned in Joshua 15:8. It had been the place where the idolatrous Jews burned their children alive to Moloch and Baal. A particular part of the valley was called Tophet, or the "fire-stove," where the children were burned. After the Exile, in order to show their abhorrence of the locality, the Jews made this valley the receptacle of the offal of the city, for the destruction of which a fire was, as is supposed, kept constantly burning there.

1. The Word in the King James Version:

The English word, from a Teutonic root meaning "to hide" or "cover," had originally the significance of the world of the dead generally, and in this sense is used by Chaucer, Spenser, etc., and in the Creed ("He descended into hell"); compare the English Revised Version Preface. Now the word has come to mean almost exclusively the place of punishment of the lost or finally impenitent; the place of torment of the wicked. In the King James Version of the Scriptures, it is the rendering adopted in many places in the Old Testament for the Hebrew word she'ol (in 31 out of 65 occurrences of that word it is so translated), and in all places, save one (I Corinthians 15:55) in the New Testament, for the Greek word Hades (this word occurs 11 times; in 10 of these it is translated "hell"; I Corinthians 15:55 reads "grave," with "hell" in the margin). In these cases the word has its older general meaning, though in Luke 16:23 (parable of Rich Man and Lazarus) it is specially connected with a place of "torment," in contrast with the "Abraham's bosom" to which Lazarus is taken (Luke 16:22).

2. The Word in the Revised Version:

In the above cases the Revised Version (British and American) has introduced changes, replacing "hell" by "Sheol" in the passages in the Old Testament (the English Revised Version retains "hell" in Isaiah 14:9, Isaiah 14:15; the American Standard Revised Version makes no exception), and by "Hades" in the passages in the New Testament (see under these words).

3. Gehenna:

Besides the above uses, and more in accordance with the modern meaning, the word "hell" is used in the New Testament in the King James Version as the equivalent of Gehenna (12 t; Matthew 5:22, Matthew 5:29; Matthew 10:28, etc.). the Revised Version (British and American) in these cases puts "Gehenna" in the margin. Originally the Valley of Hinnom, near Jerusalem, Gehenna became among the Jews the synonym for the place of torment in the future life (the "Gehenna of fire," Matthew 5:22, etc.; see GEHENNA).

ga-hen'-a (geenna (see Grimm-Thayer, under the word)): Gehenna is a transliteration from the Aramaic form of the Hebrew ge-hinnom, "valley of Hinnom." This latter form, however, is rare in the Old Testament, the prevailing name being "the valley of the son of Hinnom." Septuagint usually translates; where it transliterates the form is different from Gehenna and varies. In the New Testament the correct form is Gee'nna with the accent on the penult, not Ge'enna. There is no reason to assume that Hinnom is other than a plain patronymic, although it has been proposed to find in it the corruption of the name of an idol (EB, II, 2071). In the New Testament (King James Version margin) Gehenna occurs in Matthew 5:22, 29, 30; Matthew 10:28; Matthew 18:9; Matthew 23:15, 33 Mark 9:43, 15, 47 Luke 12:5 James 3:6. In all of these it designates the place of eternal punishment of the wicked, generally in connection with the final judgment. It is associated with fire as the source of torment. Both body and soul are cast into it. This is not to be explained on the principle that the New Testament speaks metaphorically of the state after death in terms of the body; it presupposes the resurrection. In the King James Version and the Revised Version (British and American) Gehenna is rendered by "hell" (see ESCHATOLOGY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT). That "the valley of Hinnom" became the technical designation for the place of final punishment was due to two causes. In the first place the valley had been the seat of the idolatrous worship of Molech, to whom children were immolated by fire (2 Chronicles 28:3; 2 Chronicles 33:6). Secondly, on account of these practices the place was defiled by King Josiah (2 Kings 23:10), and became in consequence associated in prophecy with the judgment to be visited upon the people (Jeremiah 7:32). The fact, also, that the city's offal was collected there may have helped to render the name synonymous with extreme defilement. Topographically the identification of the valley of Hinnom is still uncertain. It has been in turn identified with the depression on the western and southern side of Jerusalem, with the middle valley, and with the valley to the E. Compare EB, II, 2071; DCG, I, 636; RE3, VI.

4. Tartarus:

In yet one other passage in the New Testament (II Peter 2:4), "to cast down to hell" is used (the King James Version and the Revised Version (British and American)) to represent the Greek tartaroo, ("to send into Tartarus"). Here it stands for the place of punishment of the fallen angels: "spared not angels when they sinned, but cast them down to hell, and committed them to pits (or chains) of darkness" (compare Judges 1:6; but also Matthew 25:41). Similar ideas are found in certain of the Jewish apocalyptic books (Book of Enoch, Book of Jubilees, Apocrypha Baruch, with apparent reference to Genesis 6:1-4; compare ESCHATOLOGY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT).

Hell

The abode of the dead especially as a place of eternal punishment for unbelievers. Hell is an Anglo-Saxon word used to translate one Hebrew word and three Greek words in the King James Version of the Old and New Testaments. The Hebrew word that “hell” translated was Sheol . (Compare NAS). The word Sheol occurs sixty-five times in the Hebrew Bible. The King James Version translates thirty-one of the occurrences as “hell”; another thirty-one occurrences as “grave”; and three occurrences as “pit” (Numbers 16:30 ,Numbers 16:30,16:33; Job 17:16). The Revised Standard Version never uses “hell” to translate Sheol. It does use “grave” one time as a translation of Sheol (Song of Song of Solomon 8:6). Sixty-four times it simply transliterates the word as Sheol. NAS always uses Sheol , while NIV intentionally avoids Sheol, using grave.

Sheol is a Hebrew word that has taken on the properties of a proper name. The Old Testament uses the word to refer to a place in the depths of the earth. The expressions “go down” or “brought down” are used twenty times in connection with Sheol. The “depths of Sheol” are mentioned six times (Deuteronomy 32:22; Psalm 86:13; Proverbs 9:18; Proverbs 15:24; Isaiah 7:11; Isaiah 14:15). Four times Sheol is described as the farthest point from heaven (Job 11:8; Psalm 139:8; Isaiah 7:11; Amos 9:2). Often Sheol is parallel with the “pit” (Job 17:13-14; Job 33:18; Psalm 30:3; Psalm 88:3-4; Proverbs 1:12; Isaiah 14:15; Isaiah 38:18; Ezekiel 31:14-17). Nine times it is parallel with death (2 Samuel 22:6; Psalm 18:4-5; Psalm 49:14; Psalm 89:48; Psalm 116:3; Proverbs 5:5; Isaiah 28:15 ,Isaiah 28:15,28:18; Hosea 13:14; Habakkuk 2:5). Sheol is described in terms of overwhelming floods, water, or waves (Jonah 2:2-6). Sometimes, Sheol is pictured as a hunter setting snares for its victim, binding them with cords, snatching them from the land of the living (2 Samuel 22:6; Job 24:19; Psalm 116:3); Sheol is a prison with bars, a place of no return (Job 7:9; Job 10:21; Job 16:22; Job 21:13; Psalm 49:14; Isaiah 38:10). People could go to Sheol alive (Numbers 16:30, Numbers 16:30,16:33; Psalm 55:15; Proverbs 1:12). With rare exceptions, such as Elijah (2 Kings 2:1-12), all people were believed to go to Sheol when they die (Job 3:11-19; Psalm 89:48).

The three Greek words often translated “hell” are hades, gehenna, and tartaroo. Hades was the name of the Greek god of the underworld and the name of the underworld itself. The Septuagint — the earliest Greek translation of the Old Testament — used hades to translate the Hebrew word Sheol . Whereas in the Old Testament, the distinction in the fates of the righteous and the wicked was not always clear, in the New Testament hades refers to a place of torment opposed to heaven as the place of Abraham's bosom (Luke 16:23; Acts 2:27, Acts 2:27, 2:31). In Matthew 16:18 hades is not simply a place of the dead but represents the power of the underworld. Jesus said the gates of hades would not prevail against His church.

Gehenna is the Greek form of two Hebrew words ge hinnom meaning “valley of Hinnom.” The term originally referred to a ravine on the south side of Jerusalem where pagan deities were worshiped (2 Kings 23:10; Jeremiah 7:32; 2 Chronicles 28:3; 2 Chronicles 33:6). It became a garbage dump and a place of abomination where fire burned continuously (2 Kings 23:1; 2 Kings 10:1; compare Matthew 18:9; Mark 9:43, Mark 9:43,9:45, Mark 9:45,9:47; James 3:6). Gehenna became synonymous with “a place of burning.”

One time the Greek word tartaroo “cast into hell” appears in the New Testament (2 Peter 2:4). The word appears in classical Greek to refer to a subterranean region, doleful and dark, regarded by the ancient Greeks as the abode of the wicked dead. It was thought of as a place of punishment. In the sole use of the word in the New Testament it refers to the place of punishment for rebellious angels.

Punishment for sin is taught in the Old Testament, but it is mainly punishment in this life. The New Testament teaches the idea of punishment for sin before and after death. The expressions “the lake of fire” and “second death” indicate the awfulness of the fate of the impenitent. Some insist that the fire spoken of must be literal fire, so to interpret the language as figurative means to do away with the reality of future punishment. One can, however, maintain this position only if they see no reality expressed by a figure of speech. Jesus spoke of a place of punishment as “outer darkness” (Matthew 8:12; Matthew 22:13; Matthew 25:30). Can a place have both literal fire and literal darkness? What reason does one have for taking one expression as literal and not taking the other as literal? Literal fire would destroy a body cast into it.

Language about hell seeks to describe for humans the most awful punishment human language can describe to warn unbelievers before it is too late. Earthly experience would lead us to believe that the nature of punishment will fit the nature of the sin. Certainly, no one wants to suffer the punishment of hell, and through God's grace the way for all is open to avoid hell and know the blessings of eternal life through Christ.

HELL

‘Hell’ in the NT renders the Gk. word transliterated as ‘Gehenna’ (Mt 5:22,29-30; 10:28; 18:9; 23:15,33; Mk 9:43,45,47; Lk 12:5; Jas 3:6). The name is derived from the Heb. gê(ben)(benê) hinnōm, the Valley of (the son[s] of) Hinnom, a valley near Jerusalem (Jos 15:8; 18:16), where children were sacrificed by fire in connection with pagan rites (2Ki 23:10; 2Ch 28:3; 33:6; Je 7:31; 32:35). Its original derivation is obscure, but Hinnom is almost certainly the name of a person. In later Jewish writings Gehenna came to mean the place of punishment for sinners (Assumption of Moses 10:10; 2Es 7:36). It was depicted as a place of unquenchable fire—the general idea of fire to express the divine judgment is found in the OT (Dt 32:22; Da 7:10). The rabbinic literature contains various opinions as to who would suffer eternal punishment. The ideas were widespread that the sufferings of some would be terminated by annihilation, or that the fires of Gehenna were in some cases purgatorial (Rosh Hashanah 16b-17a; Baba Mezi’a 58b; Mishnah Eduyoth 2. 10). But those who held these doctrines also taught the reality of eternal punishment for certain classes of sinners. Both this literature and the Apocryphal books affirm belief in an eternal retribution (cf. Jdt 16:17; Psalms of Solomon 3:13).The teaching of the NT endorses this past belief. The fire of hell is unquenchable (Mk 9:43), eternal (Mt 18:8), its punishment is the converse of eternal life (Mt 25:46). There is no suggestion that those who enter hell ever emerge from it. However, the NT leaves the door open for the belief that while hell as a manifestation of God's implacable wrath against sin is unending, the existence of those who suffer in it may not be. It is difficult to reconcile the ultimate fulfilment of the whole universe in Christ (Ep 1:10; Col 1:20) with the continued existence of those who reject him. Some scholars have contended that an eternal punishment is one which is eternal in its effects; in any case eternal does not necessarily mean never-ending, but implies ‘long duration extending to the writer's mental horizon’ (J. A. Beet). On the other hand Rev 20:10 does indicate conscious, never-ending torment for the devil and his agents, albeit in a highly symbolic passage, and some would affirm that a similar end awaits human beings who ultimately refuse to repent. In any case, nothing should be allowed to detract from the seriousness of our Lord's warnings about the terrible reality of God's judgment in the world to come.

In Jas 3:6 Gehenna, like the bottomless pit in Rev 9:1ff.; 11:7, appears to be the source of evil on the earth.

NT imagery concerning eternal punishment is not uniform. As well as fire it is described as darkness (Mt 25:30; 2Pe 2:17), death (Rev 2:11), destruction and exclusion from the presence of the Lord (2Th 1:9; Mt 7:21-23), and a debt to pay (Mt 5:25-26).

In 2Pe 2:4 only, we find the Verb tartaroō, translated in RSV ‘cast into hell’, and rendered by the Pesh. ‘cast down to the lower regions’. Tartaros is the classical word for the place of eternal punishment but is here applied to the intermediate sphere of punishment for fallen angels.

Hell

Hell is a difficult topic. Many Christians would agree with C. S. Lewis: ‘There is no doctrine which I would more willingly remove from Christianity’ (* The Problem of Pain [Glasgow 1951], p. 94). And yet, logically and biblically, a gospel of salvation for some means condemnation for others; eternal life for believers implies death for unbelievers; God's presence for the righteous involves his absence from the unrighteous.

Biblical References to Hell

In the OT, Sheol, the abode of the dead, is never pictured as a place of punishment, even if it is a fate the righteous wish for their enemies but not for themselves. Later Jewish literature speculated on the fate of the unrighteous, sometimes in different ways within the same book. For instance, the composite 1 Enoch variously describes the wicked as punished with torment for ever (22:11), as an eternal spectacle for the righteous (27:3), yet also destroyed for ever (91:19).

Most NT references to hell are in the Synoptic Gospels, and all those in Mark and Luke are paralleled in Matthew except for the parable in Lk 16:19-31. Two words are translated ‘hell’. The first, ‘Gehenna’ (12 times), comes from the ‘valley of Hinnom’ (Heb. ge’hinnom) near Jerusalem, a notorious site of Israelite idolatry and child sacrifice (2Ki 16:3; 21:6; 23:10; cf. Je 7:32), where corpses and ashes were thrown (Je 31:40), and where Isaiah's concluding vision of rotting and smouldering corpses was probably set (Isa 66:24). This association of fire, judgment and death led to the NT concept of Gehenna as a place of punishment. The term is almost unique to Jesus, and is used in connection with: insults (Mt 5:22); causes of sin (5:29-30); ‘the Destroyer’ (10:28); the Pharisees and their converts (23:15, 33); and the misuse of the tongue (Jas 3:6). No verse specifies the duration of the punishment. In Mk 9:43-48 the term ‘life’ for the obedient may imply its opposite, ‘death’, for the disobedient; conversely the quotation from Isa 66 may imply continued existence in hell. In Mt 10:28 destruction of body and soul may imply cessation of existence.

The other word, ‘Hades’ (11 times), was the common Greek term for the world of the dead, and was used for ‘Sheol’ in the Septuagint and other Jewish writings; for example, 1 Enoch 22 envisages all the dead in Hades in separate compartments. Hades is mentioned with reference to: unbelieving Capernaum (Mt 11:23); the church's invincibility (Mt 16:18); the rich man and Lazarus (Lk 16:23); Jesus' resurrection (Ac 2:27,31, quoting Ps 16:10); Christian resurrection (1Co 15:55, quoting Ho 13:14); and supernatural symbolism (Rev 1:18; 6:8; 20:13-14; here Hades is always paired with ‘death’). Mt 11:23 and Lk 16:23 associate Hades with punishment, and the latter associates it with torment, treating the term as similar in meaning to ‘Gehenna’ (despite their different origins and usage elsewhere). The duration of the punishment is not specified in these texts, though Rev 20:14 may portray the end of Hades itself.

Fire is the only feature of hell commonly mentioned in the NT. There are references to it in the Synoptic Gospels, some catholic epistles (Heb 10:27; 2Pe 3:7; Jude 7) and Revelation. Other features are mentioned only occasionally, mostly in Matthew: darkness, weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Other Biblical References to the Fate of Unbelievers

Large parts of the NT present the fate of unbelievers with no direct reference to hell. John's Gospel and letters often contrast eternal life with death and perishing, though they also contain two references to judgment (Jn 5:29; 1Jn 4:17). Acts proclaims salvation with only occasional reference to judgment (Ac 10:42; 24:25). Paul repeatedly refers to the wrath of God, judgment, condemnation, perishing, destruction and death, but hardly ever to what follows judgment (only in 2Th 1:9). And James refers only to destruction and death.

Hell as Eternal Conscious Punishment

The most widely held view throughout Christian history, expounded notably by Tertullian, Augustine, Anselm and Jonathan Edwards, and by many others in the past and present, e.g. G. Bray, K. S. Harmon (in N. M. de S. Cameron [ed.]), D. Pawson and R. A. Peterson, is that hell is eternal conscious punishment. Many portray the punishment and torment as physical; others see it as mental or spiritual. The main arguments are: 1. In the NT, fire (Mt 25:41; Jude 7), punishment (Mt 25:46), destruction (2Th 1:9), and judgment (Heb 6:2) are all described as ‘eternal’, and all associated with hell. In Jesus' parable, eternal punishment parallels eternal life (Mt 25:46), and ‘eternal’ must have the same meaning in both phrases. This argument is often seen as conclusive. 2. Sin against an infinitely glorious God, though committed by finite humans, is infinitely evil and so deserves infinite punishment. 3. Those in hell continue to sin in refusing to worship God, so they deserve continuous punishment.

Hell as Limited Conscious Punishment

On this view, the unrighteous are resurrected for judgment, confined to hell, and there punished and annihilated. They experience conscious punishment in hell, but for a limited period. This view is often called ‘annihilationism’ (though annihilation occurs not at death but after resurrection and judgment), ‘conditional immortality’ (though the word ‘immortality’ is more commonly used to refer to the eternal life of the righteous), or simply ‘conditionalism’.

Until recently, only a small minority of writers have held this view. It was first explicitly defended by Arnobius of Sicca (c . AD 310), though some scholars have detected it earlier, at least in outline. It emerged seriously in English-language theology in the late 19th century and in evangelical theology in the late 20th century, and has recently been defended in detail by E. W. Fudge, J. W. Wenham (in Cameron [ed.]), E. E. Ellis and D. Powys. The main arguments are: 1. The NT frequently speaks of death, perishing and destruction, which imply the end of existence. It also often mentions fire, the main purpose of which is to destroy rather than to cause pain. Thus the effect of hell is eternal, but the process of punishment is not. There is no biblical reference to eternal conscious punishment; in Rev 14:11 ‘eternal’ refers only to the smoke of the torment of God's enemies, not to the torment itself, and in 20:10 it is the symbols of hostility to God who are tormented for ever. 2. God's justice cannot demand infinite punishment for finite sin. 3. Several NT texts stress the final universal reign of God the Father and/or the Son (1Co 15:28; Ep 1:10; Phl 2:10-11; Col 1:20), and this is hard to reconcile with the continued existence of evil in hell.

These two views appear contradictory; yet both have some biblical support. However, proponents of both use words and images from the present space-time world to portray a destiny which lies beyond it. Yet we now know that space and time are relative, even in the present universe, that time is experienced differently at different velocities, and that visibility is affected by gravity. D. C. Spanner suggests intriguingly that one recently discovered feature of the universe may be illustrative of hell. A spaceship travelling into a black hole would be sucked in and annihilated. Yet an observer would continue to see the ship appear to hover above the horizon of visibility, gradually fading but without definite end. Similarly, hell might be experienced as annihilation but observed as continuing punishment, gradually fading from view.

Conclusion

Finally, it must be stressed that evangelical proponents of both views see hell as real and horrific. On both views the unrighteous realize the enormity of their sin and are aware of their everlasting separation from God. In biblical theology, hell is ultimately the absence of God.

The Justice of Eternal Punishment

Definition and Description

Hell is the final destiny of unbelievers and is variously described by the figures of a furnace of fire, eternal fire, eternal punishment (Mt 13:42,50; 25:41,46); outer darkness, the place of weeping and torment (8:12); the lake of fire, the second death (Rev 21:8); a place for the devil and his demons (Mt 25:41). Evidently, those in hell experience everlasting separation from the Lord, never to see the glory of his power (2Th 1:9). Those who worshiped the beast will be subject to continuous torment (Rev 14:10-11).

Other expressions that indicate that the final state of the wicked is eternal are these: “burn with unquenchable fire” (Mt 3:12); “to the unquenchable fire...where their worm does not die, and the fire is not quenched” (Mk 9:43,48); there is sin that “will not be forgiven, either in this age or in the age to come” (Mt 12:32, RSV). When Scripture is understood properly, there is no hint anywhere of the termination of the terrible state of unbelievers in hell. Their doom is unending; there is a solemn finality about their miserable condition. (It is significant that the most descriptive and conclusive utterances about hell come from the lips of Jesus.)

A summary of all Scripture that speaks of hell indicates that there is the loss and absence of all good, and the misery and torment of an evil conscience. The most terrifying aspect is the complete and deserved separation from God and from all that is pure, holy, and beautiful. In addition, there is the awareness of being under the wrath of God and of enduring the curse of a righteous sentence because of one's sins that were consciously and voluntarily committed.

Although the biblical descriptions of hell are stated in very physical and literal terms, the essential character of hell should not be conceived in or limited to designations such as the worm that devours, the stripes that are inflicted, the burning or being consumed by fire. This affirmation does not detract from the horror or the gravity of the situation in hell, because nothing could possibly be worse than separation from God and the torment of an evil conscience. Hell is hell for those who are there essentially because they are completely alienated from God, and wherever there is alienation from God, there is always estrangement from one's fellows. This is the worst possible punishment to which anyone could be subject: to be totally and irrevocably cut off from God and to be at enmity with all those who are around oneself. Another painful consequence of such a condition is to be at odds with oneself—torn apart from within by an accusing sense of guilt and shame. This condition is one of total conflict: with God, one's neighbors, and oneself. This is hell! If the descriptions of hell are figurative or symbolic, the conditions they represent are more intense and real than the figures of speech in which they are expressed.

Punishment for sin is a persistent teaching of the Bible. The doctrine of judgment is as extensive as the Canon itself. Typical of such passages are Ge 2:17; 3:17-19; 4:13; Lev 26:27-33; Ps 149:7; Isa 3:11; Eze 14:10; Am 1:2-2:16; Zec 14:19; Mt 25:41,46; Lk 16:23-24; Ro 2:5-12; Ga 6:7-8; Heb 10:29-31; and Rev 20:11-15.

Biblical Terms

The Hebrew word “Sheol” in the OT is predominantly used for “the grave, the pit, the place of the departed dead” (Ge 37:35; Job 7:9; 14:13; 17:13-16; Ps 6:5; 16:10; 55:15; Pr 9:18; Ec 9:10; Isa 14:11; 38:10-12,18). There does not seem to be a very clear distinction in the OT between the final destiny of the good and the evil. They all alike go to the grave, to the world below, a world of gloom, weariness, darkness, decay, and forgetfulness, where one is remote from God (Job 10:20-22; Ps 88:3-6), yet accessible to him (Job 26:6; Ps 138:8; Am 9:2). It is a place characterized by silence (Ps 94:17; 115:17) and rest (Job 3:17). Other texts, however, seem to suggest some aspect of consciousness, hope, and communication in Sheol (Job 14:13-15; 19:25-27; Ps 16:10; 49:15; Isa 14:9-10; Eze 32:21). A few texts seem to suggest the threat of divine judgment after death (Ps 9:17; 55:15). On the whole, Sheol was regarded with dismay and foreboding (Dt 32:22; Isa 38:18).

It was not until the time of the postcanonical Jewish literature, the writings that were developed between the close of the OT and the beginning of NT times, that clear distinctions were made between the final destinies of the righteous and the unrighteous. The idea of separate divisions within Sheol for the good and the evil was developed. It is unmistakable that there was in Jewish thought, as reflected throughout the OT, a belief in a future and continued existence beyond death, however shadowy and indefinite the concept.

The Greek word “hades” in the NT is used very similarly to “Sheol” in the OT. It was, in fact, used by the translators of the Septuagint, the Greek version of the OT, for Sheol. It designated in general the place or state of the dead, the grave, or death itself. In some versions the word is not translated at all but is transliterated simply as “hades.” The NT is not always very explicit about the meaning of hades, other than what has just been described. Use of the word often does not reveal much about the specific condition of the dead. There are some passages, however, that indicate a distinct advance over the use of Sheol in the OT. One NT passage definitely describes hades as a place of evil and punishment of the wicked, and may appropriately be translated “hell” (Lk 16:23). In all other instances, hades indicates nothing more than the place of the dead.

The Greek word “Gehenna” is used in a number of NT texts to designate the fiery place for punishment of sinners and is often translated “hell” or “the fires of hell” (Mt 5:22,29-30; 10:28; 18:9; 23:15,33; Mk 9:43,45,47; Jas 3:6). It is usually used in connection with the final judgment and often has the suggestion that the punishment spoken of is eternal. Gehenna is derived by transliteration from the Hebrew of the OT “valley of Hinnom” or the “valley of the son of Hinnom,” a ravine on the south side of Jerusalem. This valley was the center of idolatrous worship in which children were burned by fire as an offering to the heathen god Molech (2Ch 28:3; 33:6). In the time of Josiah it became a place of abomination, polluted by dead men's bones and rubbish (2Ki 23:10-14) and by the garbage and filth of Jerusalem dumped there. A fire burned continuously in this valley. It thus became a symbol of the unending fires of hell where the lost are consumed in torment. It was a symbol of judgment to be imposed on the idolatrous and disobedient (Je 7:31-34; 32:35).

Another Greek word used to designate hell or “the lower regions” is “Tartarus” (2Pe 2:4), a classical word for the place of eternal punishment. The apostle Peter uses it for the fallen angels who were thrown into hell, “committed...to pits of nether gloom to be kept until the judgment” (RSV).

As noted above, there are, in addition to these terms, the very explicit and vivid phrases that clearly teach the doctrine of hell, as developed at the beginning of this article. The biblical doctrine is determined much more by these decisive phrases than by the somewhat indecisive but frequently used terms “Sheol” and “hades.”

The Justice of Eternal Punishment

It is difficult for us to understand the righteous judgment of a holy God who, on one hand, hates all evil, yet, on the other hand, loves the evildoers enough to sacrifice his only Son for their salvation from sin. Divine wrath is the necessary reaction of a holy God who hates all that is contrary to his righteous nature. When the only remedy for human sin is rejected and all appeals of a loving, seeking God for the reconciliation of rebellious sinners are refused, there is no other course of action that God himself can pursue but to leave the sinner to his self-chosen destiny. Punishment for sin is then the inevitable and inescapable response of holiness to that which is morally opposite, and it must continue as long as the sinful condition requiring it continues. There is no indication anywhere in Scripture that lost sinners in hell are capable of repentance and faith. If in this life they did not turn away from sin and receive Christ as Savior with all the favorable circumstances and opportunities afforded them on earth, it is unreasonable to think they will do so in the life to come. Punishment cannot come to an end until guilt and sin come to an end. When the sinner ultimately resists and rejects the work of the Holy Spirit whereby he is convicted of sin, there remains no more possibility of repentance or salvation. He has committed an eternal sin (Mk 3:29; Rev 22:11), which deserves eternal punishment.

The impossibility of faith and repentance in hell is seen also from the tragic reality of the depraved will, conditioned and determined by its repeated rebellion against God. Sin reproduces itself in the will, and character tends to become irrevocably fixed. God responds to endless sinning with the necessary counterpart of endless punishment.

If the question is raised, How can a loving God send people to an everlasting hell? it must be replied that God does not choose this destination for people; they freely choose it for themselves. God simply concurs in their self-chosen way and reveals the full consequences of their evil choice. It must always be remembered that God is not only loving; he is also holy and righteous. There must be some adequate reckoning with justice in the universe where a revolt against God has brought evil consequences of enormous proportions.

While the duration of punishment in hell is eternal for all who have chosen that destiny for themselves, there are degrees of punishment proportional to the degrees of guilt of each individual. Only God is able to determine what those degrees are, and he will assign the consequences with perfect justice according to the responsibility of each one. Evidence of such gradations in future punishment is found in Scripture (Mt 11:20-24; Lk 12:47-48; Rev 20:12-13; cf. Eze 16:48-61). An obvious comparison is made in these texts between the differing intensities of punishment that are involved in the contrasting privileges, knowledge, and opportunities.

From all that has been said, it should be obvious that a variety of nonbiblical views must be ruled out, however attractively they may be presented by their advocates and however popular they may be from time to time. Among these views are the erroneous, but sometimes persuasive, doctrines of universalism, annihilationism, and second probation. Universalism promotes the concept that God will save everyone in the end. Annihilationism teaches that hell is not a place of conscious suffering but of final extermination. And second probation is a notion that people can be delivered from hell. It must always be remembered that the Bible is our rule of faith for the doctrine of hell, however difficult the doctrine may seem for natural reason or for human sentiment. Scripture leaves no doubt about the terrible nature and the eternal duration of hell. Rejection or neglect of this doctrine will have dire effects upon the mission of the church.

she'-ol (she'ol):

1. The Name

2. The Abode of the Dead

(1) Not a State of Unconsciousness

2) Not Removed from God's Jurisdiction

(3) Relation to Immortality

3. Post-canonical Period

1. The Name:

This word is often translated in the King James Version "grave" (e.g. Genesis 37:35; I Samuel 2:6; Job 7:9; Job 14:13; Psalms 6:5; Psalms 49:14; Isaiah 14:11, etc.) or "hell" (e.g. Deuteronomy 32:22; Psalms 9:17; Psalms 18:5; Isaiah 14:9; Amos 9:2, etc.); in 3 places by "pit" (Numbers 16:30, Numbers 16:33; Job 17:16). It means really the unseen world, the state or abode of the dead, and is the equivalent of the Greek Haides, by which word it is translated in Septuagint. The English Revisers have acted somewhat inconsistently in leaving "grave" or "pit" in the historical books and putting "Sheol" in the margin, while substituting "Sheol" in the poetical writings, and putting "grave" in the margin ("hell" is retained in Isa. 14). Compare their "Preface." The American Revisers more properly use "Sheol" throughout. The etymology of the word is uncertain. A favorite derivation is from sha'al, "to ask" (compare Proverbs 1:12; Proverbs 27:20; Proverbs 30:15-16; Isaiah 5:14; Habakkuk 2:5); others prefer the sha'al, "to be hollow." The Babylonians are said to have a similar word Sualu, though this is questioned by some.

2. The Abode of the Dead:

Into Sheol, when life is ended, the dead are gathered in their tribes and families. Hence, the expression frequently occurring in the Pentateuch, "to be gathered to one's people," "to go to one's fathers," etc. (Genesis 15:15; Genesis 25:8, Genesis 25:17; Genesis 49:33; Numbers 20:24, Numbers 20:28; Numbers 31:2; Deuteronomy 32:50; Deuteronomy 34:5). It is figured as an under-world (Isaiah 44:23; Ezekiel 26:20, etc.), and is described by other terms, as "the pit" (Job 33:24; Psalms 28:1; Psalms 30:3; Proverbs 1:12; Isaiah 38:18, etc.), ABADDON (which see) or Destruction (Job 26:6; Job 28:22; Proverbs 15:11), the place of "silence" (Psalms 94:17; Psalms 115:17), "the land of darkness and the shadow of death" (Job 10:21 f.). It is, as the antithesis of the living condition, the synonym for everything that is gloomy, inert, insubstantial (the abode of Rephaim, "shades," Job 26:5;, Proverbs 2:18; Proverbs 21:16; Isaiah 14:9; Isaiah 26:14). It is a "land of forgetfulness," where God's "wonders" are unknown (Psalms 88:10-12). There is no remembrance or praise of God (Psalms 6:5; Psalms 88:12; Psalms 115:17, etc.). In its darkness, stillness, powerlessness, lack of knowledge and inactivity, it is a true abode of death (see DEATH); hence, is regarded by the living with shrinking, horror and dismay (Psalms 39:13; Isaiah 38:17-19), though to the weary and troubled it may present the aspect of a welcome rest or sleep (Job 3:17-22; Job 14:12 f.). The Greek idea of Hades was not dissimilar.

Yet it would be a mistake to infer, because of these strong and sometimes poetically heightened contrasts to the world of the living, that Sheol was conceived of as absolutely a place without consciousness, or some dim remembrance of the world above. This is not the case. Necromancy rested on the idea that there was some communication between the world above and the world below (Deuteronomy 18:11); a Samuel could be summoned from the dead (I Samuel 28:11-15); Sheol from beneath was stirred at the descent of the king of Babylon (Isaiah 14:9 ff.). The state is rather that of slumbrous semi-consciousness and enfeebled existence from which in a partial way the spirit might temporarily be aroused. Such conceptions, it need hardly be said, did not rest on revelation, but were rather the natural ideas formed of the future state, in contrast with life in the body, in the absence of revelation.

(2) Not Removed from God's Jurisdiction.

It would be yet more erroneous to speak with Dr. Charles (Eschatology, 35 ff.) of Sheol as a region "quite independent of Yahwe, and outside the sphere of His rule." "Sheol is naked before God," says Job, "and Abaddon hath no covering" (Job 26:6). "If I make my bed in Sheol," says the Psalmist, "behold thou art there" (Psalms 139:8). The wrath of Yahweh burns unto the lowest Sheol (Deuteronomy 32:22). As a rule there is little sense of moral distinctions in the Old Testament representations of Sheol, yet possibly these are not altogether wanting (on the above and others points in theology of Sheol).

(3) Relation to Immortality.

To apprehend fully the Old Testament conception of Sheol one must view it in its relation to the idea of death as something unnatural and abnormal for man; a result of sin. The believer's hope for the future, so far as this had place, was not prolonged existence in Sheol, but deliverance from it and restoration to new life in God's presence (Job 14:13-15; Job 19:25-27; Psalms 16:10-11; Psalms 17:15; Psalms 49:15; Psalms 73:24-26; see IMMORTALITY; ESCHATOLOGY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT; RESURRECTION). Dr. Charles probably goes too far in thinking of Sheol in Psalms 49 and 73 as "the future abode of the wicked only; heaven as that of the righteous" (op. cit., 74); but different destinies are clearly indicated.

3. Post-canonical Period:

There is no doubt, at all events, that in the postcanonical Jewish literature (the Apocrypha and apocalyptic writings) a very considerable development is manifest in the idea of Sheol. Distinction between good and bad in Israel is emphasized; Sheol becomes for certain classes an intermediate state between death and resurrection; for the wicked and for Gentiles it is nearly a synonym for Gehenna (hell).

Hades

ha'-dez (Haides, haides, "not to be seen"): Hades, Greek originally Haidou, in genitive, "the house of Hades," then, as nominative, designation of the abode of the dead itself. The word occurs in the New Testament in Matthew 11:23 (parallel Luke 10:15); Matthew 16:18; Luke 16:23; Acts 2:27, Acts 2:31; Revelation 1:18; Revelation 6:8; Revelation 20:13 f. It is also found in Textus Receptus of the New Testament I Corinthians 15:55, but here the correct reading (Tischendorf, Westcott and Hort, The New Testament in Greek, the Revised Version (British and American)) is probably Thanate, "O Death," instead of Haide, "O Hades." the King James Version renders "Hades" by "hell" in all instances except I Corinthians 15:55, where it puts "grave" (margin "hell") in dependence on Hosea 13:14. the Revised Version (British and American) everywhere has "Hades."

1. In Old Testament: Sheol:

In the Septuagint Hades is the standing equivalent for Sheol, but also translates other terms associated with death and the state after it. The Greek conception of Hades was that of a locality receiving into itself all the dead, but divided into two regions, one a place of torment, the other of blessedness. This conception should not be rashly transferred to the New Testament, for the latter stands not under the influence of Greek pagan belief, but gives a teaching and reflects a belief which model their idea of Hades upon the Old Testament through the Septuagint. The Old Testament Sheol, while formally resembling the Greek Hades in that it is the common receptacle of all the dead, differs from it, on the one hand, by the absence of a clearly defined division into two parts, and, on the other hand, by the emphasis placed on its association with death and the grave as abnormal facts following in the wake of sin. The Old Testament thus concentrates the partial light it throws on the state after death on the negative, undesirable side of the prospect apart from redemption. When in the progress of Old Testament revelation the state after death begins to assume more definite features, and becomes more sharply differentiated in dependence on the religious and moral issue of the present life this is not accomplished in the canonical writings (otherwise in the apocalyptic literature) by dividing Sheol into two compartments, but by holding forth to the righteous the promise of deliverance from Sheol, so that the latter becomes more definitely outlined as a place of evil and punishment.

2. In the New Testament: Hades:

The New Testament passages mark a distinct stage in this process, and there is, accordingly, a true basis in Scripture for the identification in a certain aspect of Sheol—Hades—with hell as reflected in the King James Version. The theory according to which Hades is still in the New Testament the undifferentiated provisional abode of all the dead until the day of judgment, with the possibility of ultimate salvation even for those of its inmates who have not been saved in this life, is neither in harmony with the above development nor borne out by the facts of New Testament usage. That dead believers abide in a local Hades cannot be proven from I Thessalonians 4:16; I Corinthians 15:23, for these passages refer to the grave and the body, not to a gathering-place of the dead. On the other hand Luke 23:43; II Corinthians 5:6-8; Philippians 1:23; Revelation 6:9; Revelation 7:9 ff.; Revelation 15:2 ff. teach that the abode of believers immediately after death is with Christ and God.

3. Acts 2:27, Acts 2:31:

It is, of course, a different matter, when Hades, as not infrequently already the Old Testament Sheol, designates not the place of the dead but the state of death or disembodied existence. In this sense even the soul of Jesus was in Hades according' to Peter's statement (Acts 2:27, Acts 2:31 —on the basis of Psalms 16:10). Here the abstract sense is determined by the parallel expression, "to see corruption" None the less from a comparatively early date this passage has been quoted in support of the doctrine of a local descent of Christ into Hades.

4. Revelation 20:13; Revelation 6:8; Revelation 1:18:

The same abstract meaning is indicated for Revelation 20:13. Death and Hades are here represented as delivering up the dead on the eve of the final judgment. If this is more than a poetic duplication of terms, Hades will stand for the personified state of death, Death for the personified cause of this state. The personification appears plainly from Revelation 20:14 : "Death and Hades were cast into the lake of fire." In the number of these "dead" delivered up by Hades, believers are included, because, even on the chiliastic interpretation of Revelation 20:4-6, not all the saints share in the first resurrection, but only those "beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God," i.e. the martyrs. A similar personifying combination of Death and Hades occurs in Revelation 6:8 ("a pale horse: and he that sat upon him his name was Death; and Hades followed with him"). In Revelation 1:18, on the other hand, Death and Hades are represented as prisons from which Christ, in virtue of His own resurrection, has the power to deliver, a representation which again implies that in some, not necessarily local, sense believers also are kept in Hades.

5. Luke 16:23:

In distinction from these passages when the abstract meaning prevails and the local conception is in abeyance, the remaining references are more or less locally conceived. Of these Luke 16:23 is the only one which might seem to teach that recipients of salvation enter after death into Hades as a place of abode. It has been held that Hades is here the comprehensive designation of the locality where the dead reside, and is divided into two regions, "the bosom of Abraham" and the place of torment, a representation for which Jewish parallels can be quoted, aside from its resemblance to the Greek bisection of Hades. Against this view, however, it may be urged, that if "the bosom of Abraham" were conceived as one of the two divisions of Hades, the other division would have been named with equal concreteness in connection with Dives. In point of fact, the distinction is not between "the bosom of Abraham" and another place, as both included in Hades, but between "the bosom of Abraham" and Hades as antithetical and exclusive. The very form of the description of the experience of Dives: "In Hades he lifted up his eyes, being in torments," leads us to associate Hades as such with pain and punishment. The passage, therefore, does not prove that the saved are after death in Hades. In further estimating its bearing upon the problem of the local conditions of the disembodied life after death, the parabolic character of the representation must be taken into account. The parable is certainly not intended to give us topographical information about the realm of the dead, although it presupposes that there is a distinct place of abode for the righteous and wicked respectively.

6. Matthew 11:23:

The two other passages where Hades occurs in the teaching of our Lord (Matthew 11:23 parallel Luke 10:15; and Matthew 16:18) make a metaphorical use of the conception, which, however, is based on the local sense. In the former utterance it is predicted of Capernaum that it shall in punishment for its unbelief "go down unto Hades." As in the Old Testament Sheol is a figure for the greatest depths known (Deuteronomy 32:22; Isaiah 7:11; Isaiah 57:9; Job 11:8; Job 26:6), this seems to be a figure for the extreme of humiliation to which that city was to be reduced in the course of history. It is true, 11:24, with its mention of the day of judgment, might seem to favor an eschatological reference to the ultimate doom of the unbelieving inhabitants, but the usual restriction of Hades to the punishment of the intermediate state (see below) is against this.

7. Matthew 16:18:

In the other passage, Matthew 16:18, Jesus declares that the gates of Hades shall not katischuein the church He intends to build. The verb katischuein may be rendered, "to overpower" or "to surpass." If the former be adopted, the figure implied is that of Hades as a stronghold of the power of evil or death from which warriors stream forth to assail the church as the realm of life. On the other rendering there is no reference to any conflict between Hades and the church, the point of comparison being merely the strength of the church, the gates of Hades, i.e. the realm of death, serving in common parlance as a figure of the greatest conceivable strength, because they never allow to escape what has once entered through them.

The above survey of the passages tends to show that Hades, where it is locally conceived, is not a provisional receptacle for all the dead, but plainly associated with the punishment of the wicked. Where it comes under consideration for the righteous there is nothing to indicate a local sense. On I Peter 3:19; I Peter 4:6 (where, however, the word "Hades" does not occur), see articles ESCHATOLOGY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT; SPIRITS IN PRISON.

8. Not a Final State:

The element of truth in theory of the provisional character of Hades lies in this, that the New Testament never employs it in connection with the final state of punishment, as subsequent to the last judgment. For this GEHENNA (which see) and other terms are used. Dives is represented as being in Hades immediately after his death and while his brethren are still in this present life. Whether the implied differentiation between stages of punishment, depending obviously on the difference between the disembodied and reembodied state of the lost, also carries with itself a distinction between two places of punishment, in other words whether Hades and Gehenna are locally distinct, the evidence is scarcely sufficient to determine. The New Testament places the emphasis on the eschatological developments at the end, and leaves many things connected with the intermediate state in darkness.

Gehenna

ga-hen'-a (geenna (see Grimm-Thayer, under the word)): Gehenna is a transliteration from the Aramaic form of the Hebrew ge-hinnom, "valley of Hinnom." This latter form, however, is rare in the Old Testament, the prevailing name being "the valley of the son of Hinnom." Septuagint usually translates; where it transliterates the form is different from Gehenna and varies. In the New Testament the correct form is Gee'nna with the accent on the penult, not Ge'enna. There is no reason to assume that Hinnom is other than a plain patronymic, although it has been proposed to find in it the corruption of the name of an idol (EB, II, 2071). In the New Testament (King James Version margin) Gehenna occurs in Matthew 5:22, Matthew 5:29-30; Matthew 10:28; Matthew 18:9; Matthew 23:15, Matthew 23:33; Mark 9:43, Mark 9:15, Mark 9:47; Luke 12:5; James 3:6. In all of these it designates the place of eternal punishment of the wicked, generally in connection with the final judgment. It is associated with fire as the source of torment. Both body and soul are cast into it. This is not to be explained on the principle that the New Testament speaks metaphorically of the state after death in terms of the body; it presupposes the resurrection. In the King James Version and the Revised Version (British and American) Gehenna is rendered by "hell" (see ESCHATOLOGY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT). That "the valley of Hinnom" became the technical designation for the place of final punishment was due to two causes. In the first place the valley had been the seat of the idolatrous worship of Molech, to whom children were immolated by fire (II Chronicles 28:3; II Chronicles 33:6). Secondly, on account of these practices the place was defiled by King Josiah (II Kings 23:10), and became in consequence associated in prophecy with the judgment to be visited upon the people (Jeremiah 7:32). The fact, also, that the city's offal was collected there may have helped to render the name synonymous with extreme defilement. Topographically the identification of the valley of Hinnom is still uncertain. It has been in turn identified with the depression on the western and southern side of Jerusalem, with the middle valley, and with the valley to the E. Compare EB, II, 2071; DCG, I, 636; RE3, VI.

Hinnom, Valley of hin'-om (ge hinnom, Joshua 15:8; Joshua 18:16; "valley of the son of Hinnom" (ge bhen hinnom), Joshua 15:8; Joshua 18:16; II Chronicles 28:3; II Chronicles 33:6; Jeremiah 7:31 f.; Jeremiah 19:2, Jeremiah 19:6; Jeremiah 32:35; "valley of the children (sons) of Hinnom" (ge bhene hinnom), II Kings 23:10; or simply "the valley," literally, the "hollow" or "ravine" (ha-gay'), II Chronicles 26:9; Nehemiah 2:13, Nehemiah 2:15; Nehemiah 3:13; Jeremiah 31:40 and, perhaps also, Jeremiah 2:23 (the above references are in the Hebrew text; there are some variations in the Septuagint)): The meaning of "Hinnom" is unknown; the expressions ben Hinnom and bene Hinnom would suggest that it is a proper name; in Jeremiah 7:32; Jeremiah 19:6 it is altered by the prophet to "valley of slaughter," and therefore some have thought the original name must have had a pleasing meaning.

1. Bible References and History:

It was near the walls of Jerusalem, "by the entry of the gate Harsith" (Jeremiah 19:2); the Valley Gate opened into it (Nehemiah 2:13; Nehemiah 3:13). The boundary between Judah and Benjamin ran along it (Joshua 15:8; Joshua 18:16). It was the scene of idolatrous practices in the days of Ahaz (II Chronicles 28:3) and of Manasseh, who "made his children to pass through the fire in the valley of the son of Hinnom" (II Chronicles 33:6), but Josiah in the course of his reforms "defiled Topheth, which is in the valley of the children (margin "son") of Hinnom, that no man might make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire to Molech" (II Kings 23:10). It was on account of these evil practices that Jeremiah (Jeremiah 7:32; Jeremiah 19:6) announced the change of name. Into this valley dead bodies were probably cast to be consumed by the dogs, as is done in the Wady er-Rababi today, and fires were here kept burning to consume the rubbish of the city. Such associations led to the Ge-Hinnom (New Testament "Gehenna") becoming the "type of Hell" (Milton, Paradise Lost, i, 405).

See GEHENNA.

2. Situation:

The Valley of Hinnom has been located by different writers in each of the three great valleys of Jerusalem. In favor of the eastern or Kidron valley we have the facts that Eusebius and Jerome (Onom) place "Gehennom" under the eastern wall of Jerusalem and the Moslem geographical writers, Muqaddasi and Nasir-i-khusran, call the Kidron valley Wady Jahamum. The Jewish writer Kimchi also identifies the Valley of Jehoshaphat (i.e. the Kidron) with Hinnom. These ideas are probably due to the identification of the eastern valley, on account of its propinquity to the Temple, as the scene of the last judgment—the "Valley of Jehoshaphat" of Joel 3:2nd the consequent transference there of the scene of the punishment of the wicked, Gehenna, after the ancient geographical position of the Valley of Hinnom, had long been lost. In selecting sacred sites, from the 4th Christian century onward, no critical topographical acumen has been displayed until quite modern times. There are three amply sufficient arguments against this view: (1) the Kidron valley is always called a nachal and not a gay' (see KIDRON); (2) the "Gate of the Gai" clearly did not lie to the East of the city; (3) En-rogel, which lay at the beginning of the Valley of Hinnom and to its East (Joshua 15:8; Joshua 18:16) cannot be the "Virgin's fount," the ancient Gihon (II Samuel 17:17).

See GIHON.

Several distinguished modern writers have sought to identify the Tyropeon Valley (el Wad) with Hinnom, but as the Tyropeon was incorporated within the city walls before the days of Manasseh (see JERUSALEM), it is practically impossible that it could have been the scene of the sacrifice of children—a ritual which must have occurred beyond the city's limits (II Kings 23:10, etc.).

3. Wady er-Rababi:

The clearest geographical fact is found in Joshua 15:8; Joshua 18:16, where we find that the boundary of Judah and Benjamin passed from En-rogel "by the valley of the son of Hinnom"; if the modern Bir Eyyub is En-rogel, as is certainly most probable, then the Wady er-Rababi, known traditionally as Hinnom, is correctly so called. It is possible that the name extended to the wide open land formed by the junction of the three valleys; indeed, some would place Tophet at this spot, but there is no need to extend the name beyond the actual gorge. The Wady er-Rababi commences in a shallow, open valley due West of the Jaffa Gate, in the center of which lies the Birket Mamilla; near the Jaffa Gate it turns South for about 1/3 of a mile, its course being dammed here to form a large pool, the Birket es Sultan. Below this it gradually curves to the East and rapidly descends between sides of bare rocky scarps, much steeper in ancient times. A little before the valley joins the wide Kidron valley lies the traditional site of AKELDAMA (which see).

QUESTION: What is the difference between "hell" and "hades"?

ANSWER: Hades is an indefinite expression that refers to a state or condition of the souls of the departed. In general, it refers to this state or condition before the original Holy Saturday, when Christ revealed redemption to those who had died in the faith in Old Testament times. This is why the only correct Orthodox icon of the resurrection is the one that shows Christ "trampling down the gates of hades." In primitive and peasant societies, "hades" was often understood as an actual place, and a host of folk mythologies grew up around it -- many of them quite fantastic. Since the word "hades" was used to translate a Hebrew concept into Greek, many peasant cultures adopted the pagan Greek mythology surrounding the idea of hades.

In Orthodox Christianity, hades is simply a convenient word to refer to an abstract concept of a state or condition of departed souls.

Hell (or Gehenna) is a term used to refer to the condition of everlasting separation from God in eternity. It does not refer to a "place" or to a physical fire, but to a psychological condition of eternal alienation and spiritual darkness. It is the condition of Satan and his angels and will be the condition of those who rejected Christ in this life.

Heaven

Intro to the book, HEAVEN, by Randy Alcorn

I thought I understood heaven well enough to "get by", but I looked back over my studies and notes and realized I really knew more about Hell: i.e., Sheol/Hades, Gehenna, Tartarus, etc.

Then I was told about the book, “Heaven”, by Randy Alcorn.

Since I hadn't read the book, as others may have done, I felt I needed to at least get a little background on it.

In the process of search for introductory information about the book, I came across a few links of reviews, and resources [all free] that have helped me begin to understand Randy's perspectives/positions on heaven...

Randy Alcorn video (with PowerPoint presentation slides in pdf) of Breakout Session he gave at The Gospel Coalition conference in 2015 [this is a good introductory overview/refresher for anyone interested in what Randy's perspectives are about heaven and our life/body before and after we die. His topic is in terms of "Continuity and Discontinuity" which will make sense when you listen to the video.]...

Here is his corresponding web page with youtube video of his Breakout Session presentation along with the PowerPoint links; plus more resources including videos and downloadable appendices from the book, related topics and more:

Reviews:

Here are a couple of reviews that provide some different perspectives on the book:

This one points out some weaknesses, but is mainly positive and is a good summary:

The Hope of Heaven: Paradise Lost (Ezekiel 28:11-17; Genesis 2-3)

Excerpt:

I'm in the process of reading Randy Alcorn's fascinating book entitled Heaven. At the outset of the book, Alcorn notes how little emphasis the subject of heaven is given in well known books on systematic theology. The statistics I am citing here are Alcorn's conclusions, based upon his categories and counting. In Reinhold Niebuhr's two-volume work, The Nature and Destiny of Man, Alcorn found that Niebuhr had virtually nothing to say about heaven. In William Shedd's three-volume, Dogmatic Theology, the topic of eternal punishment is given 87 pages, while heaven is given but 2 pages. The 900-page work of Martyn Lloyd-Jones entitled Great Doctrines of the Bible devotes but 2 pages to the eternal state and the new earth. Louis Berkhof's Systematic Theology, a 737-page work, has 2 pages on hell, and 1 on heaven.

I believe there are a number of reasons why heaven gets so little attention…

(1) One reason would be the measure of peace and prosperity we experience as a nation. I would venture to suggest that Christians living in dire poverty are much more likely to long for heaven, and thus are more motivated to study the Scriptures to see what heaven will be like. Those living in countries where Christians are persecuted will be much more likely to be interested in heaven.[6] Those who are experiencing too much pleasure on earth are inclined to believe that heaven can wait.

(2) Closely related to this first reason for our apathy regarding heaven is the sad reality that for all too many, government has taken the place of God…

(3) A third reason w*hy we often ignore the teaching of the Bible on heaven is satanic deception and distraction…*

(4) A fourth reason for avoiding any thought of heaven is unbelief…

(5) A fifth reason why some think too little of heaven is because it seems too far off, both spatially and in terms of time…

Both Heaven and Hell touch Earth — an in-between world leading directly into one or the other. The best of life on Earth is a glimpse of Heaven; the worst of life is a glimpse of Hell. For Christians, this present life is the closest they will come to Hell. For unbelievers, it is the closest they will come to Heaven. -Randy Alcorn Randy's book "Heaven" is a look at what the Bible says about Heaven and what modern day Christians think about it. Here is just a sampling of the chapter titles (downloadable as PDFs), giving you an idea of the broad variety topics he covers.

The Case for Heaven

www.ColdCaseChristianity.com

The Argument for Life Beyond the Grave:

(1) The Evidence Persuades Us a Good God Created Our World
(2) A Good God Would Not Create a World in Which Justice, Satisfaction and Joy Are Unattainable
(3) Justice, Satisfaction and Joy Is Often Unattainable in This Temporal Earthly Life
(4) Therefore, If There is a Good God, It Is Reasonable to Believe He Has an Eternal, Heavenly Life Waiting for Us in Which Complete Justice, Satisfaction and Joy Will Be Realized

The Argument for Heaven's Nature:

(1) If there is a Creator God, He created everything from nothing; matter from non-matter, life from non-life.
(2) If God can do all that, he has unfathomable power
(3) If God has unfathomable power, he has the power to eliminate imperfection
(4) If God has the power to eliminate imperfection, He can certainly eliminate it from the realm in which He exists
(5) Therefore, Heaven is a place of perfection

The Biblical Case Confirming the Perfect Nature of Heaven:

(1) We Will Have Perfect Knowledge (1 Corinthians 13:9-12)
(2) We Will Experience Perfect Glory (Mark 8:38)
(3) We Will Enjoy Perfect Rest Hebrews (4:9-11)
(4) We Will Participate in Perfect Worship (Isaiah 6:3)
(5) We Will Relish in Perfect Work (Luke 19:17)
(6) We Will Partake in Perfect Fellowship (Hebrews 12:22 -24)
(7) We Will Receive Perfect Recognition (1 Corinthians 3:14-15)

Things We Won't Need in Heaven (But Ought to be Doing Now):

(1) We Won't Need to Have Faith in Heaven (Hebrews 11:1-2)
(2) We Won't Need to Grow in Heaven (1 Corinthians 13:11-12)
(3) We Won't Need to Comfort Others (Revelation 21:3)
(4) We Won't Need to Reach Others with the Truth of the Gospel (Hebrews 9:27-28)

Where Do We Go When We Die?

(Chart edited 6/15/2017 by LY)

NOTE. Problems with chart: For those that believe that upon Jesus' death and resurrection, "Paradise" is now part of heaven; this chart may be misleading as it does not explicitly indicate that event and intermediate state. Also it does not indicate multiple/stages of resurrections for the saved as many understand to be suggested by scripture. Nor does it explicitly indicate a separate judgement for those believers and unbelievers (i.e., Judgement Seat [Bema] of Christ vs Great White Throne Judgement) as is believed by many. Neither does it cover all the associated terms such as Abaddon, The Pit, The Abyss, etc. It is focused more on the major phases of the World and Heaven/Hell in relation to our old and new bodies as saved vs unsaved.

Revelation 20:11-15

Then [29] I saw a large [30] white throne and the one who was seated on it; the earth and the heaven [31] fled [32] from his presence, and no place was found for them. [12] And I saw the dead, the great and the small, standing before the throne. Then [33] books were opened, and another book was opened – the book of life. [34] So [35] the dead were judged by what was written in the books, according to their deeds. [36] [13] The [37] sea gave up the dead that were in it, and Death [38] and Hades gave up the dead that were in them, and each one was judged according to his deeds. [14] Then [39] Death and Hades were thrown into the lake of fire. This is the second death – the lake of fire. [15] If [40] anyone's name [41] was not found written in the book of life, that person [42] was thrown into the lake of fire. [ESV]

ESV Bible Study Notes:

20:11-15 The Last Judgment and the Destruction of Death, the Last Enemy. All the dead will be raised from the grave and the sea, to be judged either by their deeds recorded in “the books” (v. 12) or by God's gracious registration of their names in the Lamb's “book of life” (v. 12 ; see note on v. 13). This judgment was announced in 11:18 .

20:11 The great white throne reflects the purity and wisdom of the Ancient of Days (cf. Dan 7:9). earth and sky fled away . This removal of the first heaven and earth (foretold in Hag 2:6 ; Heb 12:26-28 ; and previewed in Rev 6:12-14 ; 16:18-21) prepares for the new heaven and earth (21:1 , 4-5 ; Isa 65:17 ; 66:22 ; 2 Pet 3:10-13).

20:12 The dead, great and small , include both God's saints (11:18 ; 19:5) and the beast's worshipers (13:16 ; 19:18). Books recording their deeds will be opened (Dan 7:10), providing the grounds on which each is judged (Rom 2:6-11). God keeps an accurate record of every human deed, and will reward and punish with perfect justice. another book , the book of life . See note on Rev 20:13 ; cf. 3:5 ; 13:8 ; 17:8 ; 20:15 ; 21:27 .

20:13 The sea , Death , and Hades (the realm of the dead, cf. 6:8) will give up their dead as all people return to bodily existence to be judged (2 Cor 5:10) by Jesus (Matt 16:27 ; John 5:28-29 ; Acts 17:31). they were judged . . . according to what they had done . Unbelievers will be rightly condemned for their sins (cf. Rom 3:23 ; Rev 20:15). Believers, whose names are in the “book of life” (vv. 12 , 15), will enter into “a new heaven and a new earth” (21:1) because the names in that book are of those who have been redeemed by “the Lamb who was slain” (13:8 ; cf. 21:27) for their sins (1:5). Their recorded deeds attest to their trust in Christ and are also the basis for determining their rewards (cf. notes on 1 Cor 3:14-15 ; 2 Cor 5:10 ; Rev 22:12-16).

20:14 Death, the last enemy, will be destroyed when Christ returns and raises believers (1 Cor 15:23-26). Therefore Death and Hades will be the last to be thrown into the lake of fire , the second death , where they will join the beast and the false prophet (Rev 19:20) and the devil (20:10).

20:15 All whose names are not found written in the book of life will be condemned for the record of their deeds (cf. note on 20:11-15) and thrown into the lake of fire . Those enrolled in the Lamb's book of life enter the new Jerusalem (21:27).

D. Judgement Day (Alternate Interpretation, assuming Paradise still in Hades)

Here are several ideas from different theological perspectives based upon their reasoning and interpretation from several scriptures. Many, if not most, believe all people's souls go to Hades (understood to be the unseen abode of the souls of the dead) when they die and remain there until His Second Coming. They do not believe Christ released the righteous held captive in the Paradise side of Hades taking them with Him when He ascended. This also shows a dichotomy (body and soul/spirit) for individuals. This interpretation is shown below

The Orthodox Model

Note. Problems with diagrams: Regardless of whether or not you subscribe to the concept of an individual consisting of three distinct parts (trichotomy): body, soul and spirit; the final location for our resurrected (renewed) bodies will be in a new heaven and new earth upon which God through Jesus will reside and rule.

The following unrelated diagram is a generalized (dichotomy: body and soul/spirit) view of the 2-track (saved/unsaved) process of going from death to a resurrected body, judged (rewards or hell) and then the saved dwell among new heavens and a new earth forever…

The New Heaven and the New Earth (John F. Walvoord)

https://bible.org/seriespage/21-new-heaven-and-new-earth

Excerpt:

The New Heaven and the New Earth Presented (Rev. 21:1)

> 21:1 And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.

Following the judgment of the great white throne depicted in the closing verses of chapter 20, John's attention is next directed to the new heaven and the new earth which replace the old heaven and the old earth which fled away (20:11). The expression "And I saw" is the first of three such statements in this chapter marking the major elements of the revelation (cf. 21:2, 22). The new heaven and new earth presented here are evidently not simply the old heaven and earth renovated, but an act of new creation (cf. discussion at 20:11). No description is given of either the new heaven or the new earth in verse 1 except for the cryptic statement "There was no more sea." There is remarkably little revealed in the Bible concerning the character of the new heaven and the new earth, but it is evidently quite different from their present form of existence. Most of the earth is now covered with water, but the new earth apparently will have no bodies of water except for the river mentioned in 22:2.

Only a few other passages in the Bible deal with the subject of the new heaven and the new earth, and these are often in a context dealing with the millennium (cf. Isa. 65:17; 66:22; 2 Peter 3:13). The fact that millennial truths are mentioned in the same context in all three of these major references has often confused expositors. However, it is a common principle in prophecy to bring together events that are distantly related chronologically, such as frequent reference to the first and second comings of Christ, actually separated by thousands of years (Isa. 61:1-2; cf. Luke 4:17-19). In a similar way there is mention of the resurrection of the righteous and of the wicked in the same verse, as in Daniel 12:2, events separated by a thousand years. And Malachi 4:5 speaks of the second coming of the Lord followed by verse 6 referring to His first coming. 2 Peter 3:10-13 refers to the day of the Lord beginning before the millennium, as well as to the destruction of the heavens and the earth with fire at the end of the millennium. If all the passages are put together, the sequence of events becomes plain, and the allusions to the new heaven and the new earth are clearly set forth in the book of Revelation as following the millennial kingdom and immediately preceded by the destruction of the old earth and heaven, as previously mentioned. J. B. Smith's objection to the first heaven and the first earth passing away is not substantiated by any of the proof texts which he cites.

The eternal state is clearly indicated in the absence of sea, for frequent mention of bodies of water occur in millennial passages (cf. Ps. 72:8; Isa. 11:9, 11; Ezek. 47:10, 15, 17, 18, 20; 48:28; Zech. 9:10; 14:8). The evidence of Revelation 21:1 is so specific that most commentators do not question that the eternal state is here in view…

Question: "What are the New Heavens and the New Earth?"

https://www.gotquestions.org/new-heavens-earth.html

Answer: Many people have a misconception of what heaven is truly like. Revelation chapters 21-22 gives us a detailed picture of the new heavens and the new earth. After the events of the end times, the current heavens and earth will be done away with and replaced by the new heavens and new earth. The eternal dwelling place of believers will be the new earth. The new earth is the "heaven" on which we will spend eternity. It is the new earth where the New Jerusalem, the heavenly city, will be located. It is on the new earth that the pearly gates and streets of gold will be.

Heaven—the new earth—is a physical place where we will dwell with glorified physical bodies (1

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Corinthians 15:35-58). The concept that heaven is “in the clouds” is unbiblical. The concept that we will be “spirits floating around in heaven” is also unbiblical. The heaven that believers will experience will be a new and perfect planet on which we will dwell. The new earth will be free from sin, evil, sickness, suffering, and death. It will likely be similar to our current earth, or perhaps even a re-creation of our current earth, but without the curse of sin.

What about the new heavens? It is important to remember that in the ancient mind, “heavens” referred to the skies and outer space, as well as the realm in which God dwells. So, when Revelation 21:1 refers to the new heavens, it is likely indicating that the entire universe will be created—a new earth, new skies, a new outer space. It seems as if God's heaven will be recreated as well, to give everything in the universe a “fresh start,” whether physical or spiritual. Will we have access to the new heavens in eternity? Possibly, but we will have to wait to find out. May we all allow God’s Word to shape our understanding of heaven.

There Will Be No Sea in the New Heaven and New Earth

http://www.ligonier.org/blog/there-will-be-no-sea-new-heaven-and-new-earth/

Excerpt:

Scripture often speaks of the entire creation awaiting the final act of redemption. To destroy something completely and to replace it with something utterly new is not an act of redemption. To redeem something is to save that which is in imminent danger of being lost. The renovation may be radical. It may involve a violent conflagration of purging, but the purifying act ultimately redeems rather than annihilates. The new heaven and the new earth will be purified. There will be no room for evil in the new order.

A hint of the quality of the new heaven and new earth is found in the somewhat cryptic words, “Also there was no more sea” (Rev. 21:1). For people who have a love for the seashore and all that it represents in terms of beauty and recreation, it may seem strange to contemplate a new earth without any sea. But to the ancient Jew, it was a different matter. In Jewish literature, the sea was often used as a symbol for that which was ominous, sinister, and threatening. Earlier in the Revelation of John, we see the Beast emerging from the sea (Rev. 13). Likewise, in ancient Semitic mythology, there is frequent reference to the primordial sea monster that represents the shadowy chaos. The Babylonian goddess Tiamat is a case in point.

In Jewish thought, the river, the stream, or the spring functioned as the positive symbol of goodness. This was natural in a desert habitat where a stream was life itself. If we look at a relief map of Palestine, we see how crucial to the life of the land is the Jordan River. It cuts like a ribbon through the heart of an arid and parched land, connecting the Sea of Galilee in the north with the Dead Sea in the south.

The Mediterranean coast of western Palestine is marked by rocky shoals and jutting mountains. The ancient Hebrews did not develop a sea trade because the terrain was not suitable for much shipping. The sea represented trouble to them. It was from the Mediterranean that violent storms arose.

We see this contrasting imagery in Psalm 46. The psalmist writes: “God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore we will not fear, even though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though its waters roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with its swelling” (vv. 1–3). Then he adds, “There is a river whose streams shall make glad the city of God” (v. 4)…

The New Heavens and New Earth

http://www.ligonier.org/learn/articles/new-heavens-and-new-earth/

Excerpt:

…How to describe the new heavens and new earth? To describe the coming cosmos negatively, we can say that miseries that now cause such damage and distress will be gone: no mourning, pain, death—no remnant of curse will remain (Rev. 21:4; 22:3). It is more challenging to portray positively what a world purged of wickedness and woe will be. Prophets and Apostles strain language to its limits to offer glimpses of glorious realities beyond our experience. We can say that Jesus' resurrection is the first-fruits of the consummated new creation, so His glorious risen body foreshadows the resurrection awaiting His people (1 Cor. 15:20- 22; Phil. 3:21). After He arose, He could eat and be touched (Luke 24:39-43), so the materiality of His body leads us to expect that the landscape painted in the book of Revelation—the tree of life's curative leaves and ceaseless fruitfulness, for instance (Rev. 22:1-5)—is not wholly symbolic. At least we can say that our ultimate home is not ethereal and immaterial, but a robust reaffirmation of the Creator's original design, for He pronounced the first heaven and earth "very good" (Gen. 1:31).

God's Word reveals enough about the new heavens and earth to impress on us the urgency of the question, "How can I access that promised homeland of pure pleasure in God's presence?" This question brings us to the gospel. The new heavens and earth will be populated by God's "servants" (Rev. 22:3-5), who have clung to the Word of God and confessed Jesus (1:2, 9; 20:4). They have been redeemed by the blood of the Lamb, and their names are written in His Book of Life (12:11; 20:12, 15; 21:27).

Yet Revelation's visions underscore the crucial importance of the gospel from another—very sobering—perspective. Those whose names are not in the Lamb's book will be judged by their own actions throughout life. Without the cover of the Lamb's atoning blood, they will stand exposed to God's righteous wrath, condemned, and "thrown into the lake of fire," the second death (20:13-15). Their souls will be reunited with the bodies in which they acted out their rebellion, and in that fiery lake they will experience not only ceaseless physical anguish but also utter deprivation of mental and spiritual relief. Jesus Himself spoke of this dire, eternal doom awaiting rebels, a place "where their worm does not die and the fire is not quenched" (Mark 9:43-48; Isa. 66:24).

Does the prospect of unremitting woe—secured by God's unflinching justice—strike fear to your heart? It should. Now is the time to trust in the Lamb and His redeeming blood.

Do the delights to come in the new heavens and new earth whet the longings of your heart? They should. Now is the time to trust in the Lamb and His redeeming blood. Right now really does count forever.

Sheol, Hades and Gehenna
http://faithdefenders.com/articles/theology/sheol_hades_gehenna.html

Excerpts:

…First, the writer to the book of Hebrews tells us that the Old Testament saints were in bondage to the fear of death and that Satan used this to oppress them.

Since then the children share in flesh and blood, He Himself likewise also partook of the same, that through death He might render powerless him who had the power of death, that is, the devil; and might deliver those who through fear of death were subject to slavery all their lives. (Heb. 2:14, 15)

Only after the Messiah came and wrested the keys of death and Hades from the Evil One would God's people experience freedom from the fear of death (Rev. 1:18).

The bondage of fear which gripped the Old Testament saints expressed itself in different ways. They had a fear of being separated from their living loved ones. They were afraid of being severed from the joys of life (Ps. 6). They begged to be delivered from death and Sheol because they did not look forward to death (Ps. 13). This is why they spoke of the "sorrows" (KJV) and "terrors" of death (Ps. 18:4; 55:4; 116:3) instead of the triumph in death which New Testament saints express (2 Tim. 4:6-8).

Second, while the overall picture of death was somewhat gloomy in the Old Testament, yet God had begun to reveal to His people that they would be ushered into His joyous presence after death. To be sure, these were only hints of glory, but hints they were. The ascension of Enoch and Elijah to heaven indicated that the righteous could be taken into God's presence (Gen. 5:24, cf. Heb. 11:5; 2 Kings 2:11). The verb which described Enoch's and Elijah's ascension (laqach) was later used to describe the passage of the righteous out of Sheol into heaven (Ps. 49:15; cf. 73:24). Asaph expressed the hope that he would go to dwell at the throne of glory at death. Later rabbinic writers consistently spoke of the righteous going to the throne of glory at death…

…Before Christ's ascension, believers as well as unbelievers were said to enter Sheol or Hades. After Christ's resurrection, the New Testament pictures believers after death as entering heaven to be with Christ (Phil. 1:23), which is far better than Hades. They are present with the Lord (2 Cor. 5:6-8), worshiping with the angelic hosts of heaven (Heb. 12:22, 23) at the altar of God (Rev. 6:9-11). Thus believers do not now enter Hades but ascend immediately to the throne of God.

In the New Testament, there is, therefore, a development of understanding which took place after Christ's resurrection. Before Jesus was raised from the dead, the apostles assumed that everyone went to Sheol or Hades. This Hades had two sections, one for the righteous and one for the wicked. But Christ's resurrection changed this picture. Thus Paul uses the language of transition when he speaks of Christ taking the righteous out of Hades and bringing them into heaven (Eph. 4:8, 9).

That Christ went to Hades, i.e., the world beyond death, is clear from Acts 2:31, While in Hades, Peter pictures Christ as proclaiming to "the spirits now in prison" the completion of His atonement (1 Pet. 3:18-22). Whereas "paradise" in the gospel account (Luke 23:43) referred to the section of Hades reserved for the righteous, by the time Paul wrote 2 Cor. 12:2-4, it was assumed that paradise had been taken out of Hades and was now placed in the third heaven…

Facts and Theories as to a Future State (2nd Edition, 1889 by Frederick W. Grant)

The scripture doctrine considered with reference to current denials of eternal punishment by F. W. Grant.

Introduction — Forms of the Denial of Eternal Punishment

In entering upon a subject like the present, it will be desirable in the first place to get as clear a view as possible of what is involved, the questions it is proposed to answer. The denial of eternal punishment has two main forms: that of annihilationism, or, as some prefer to call it now, "conditional immortality," and that of the final restoration and salvation of all men. Of these two there are again several modifications, and even (contradictory of one another as they may seem) amalgamations… (see also: Views of Hell)

The Spirit World
http://returningking.com/?series=the-spirit-world

The Spirit World is a study of the afterlife in scripture. Far from simply referring to "Heaven and Hell," the scripture reveals an assortment of containers which temporarily sort the souls of men and angels prior to the eternal state. Places such as Sheol, Abaddon, and the Abyss are commonly used interchangeably by well-intended teachers of scripture. Yet, scripture itself does not use these terms interchangeably at all; for each has a unique characteristic among the others.

In this chapter we will look at the believer's intermediate state between death and resurrection. Let's consider the two views:

1. The traditional view is that the disembodied souls of believers go straight to heaven when they die, awaiting their bodily resurrection.

2. Another view is that, like Old Testament saints, the souls of spiritually regenerated believers go to Sheol (Hades) at the point of physical decease to "sleep" in death until their resurrection…

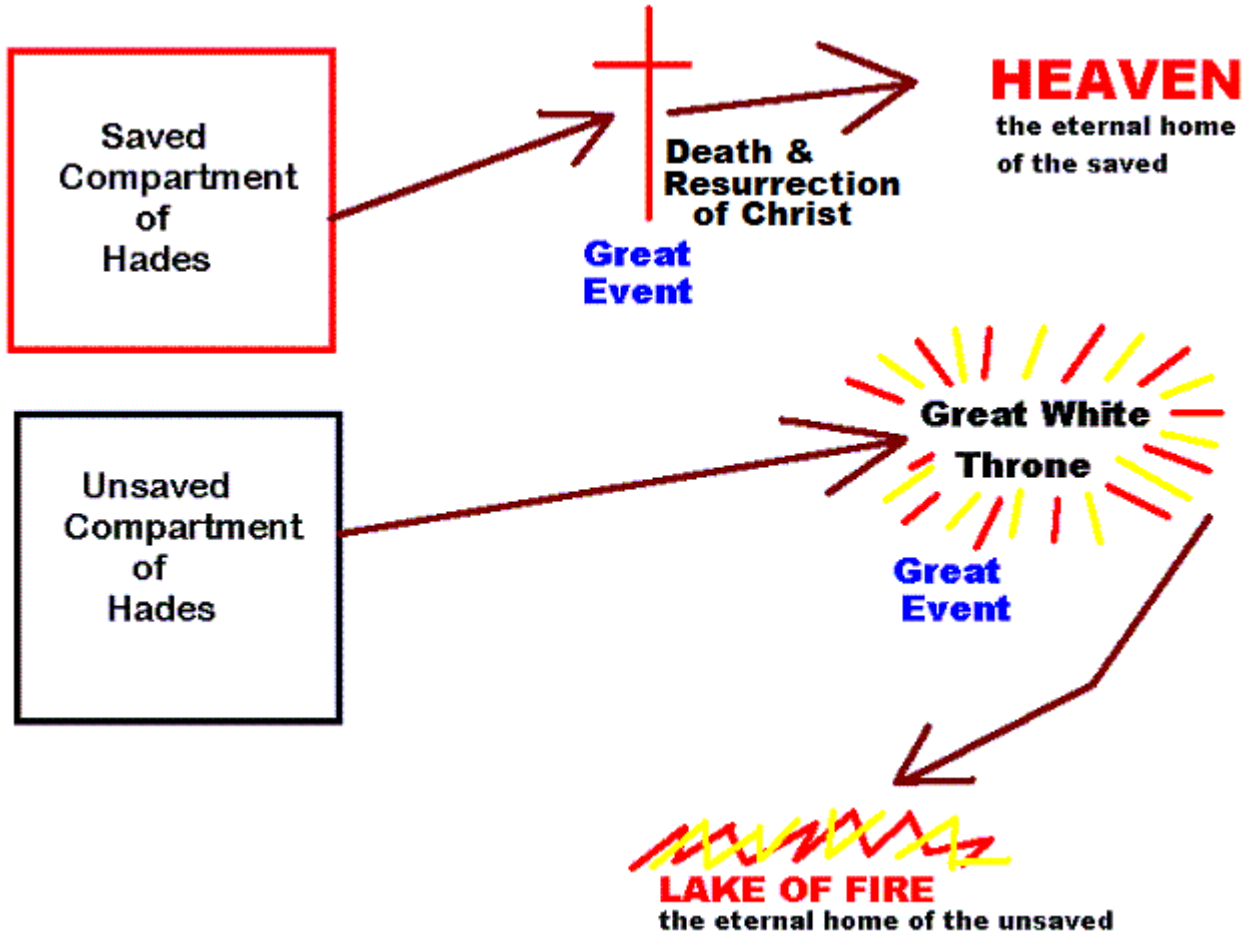
Where Do the Dead Go?

The following diagram represents Sheol/Hades prior to the resurrection of Christ, showing the two compartments:

The souls of those living in each compartment of Sheol/Hades wait for a great event. Their location cannot change until the great event takes place.



Those believers who died before the death of Christ were in the compartment of Hades that is called "Abraham's bosom" (Luke 16:22) and "paradise" (Luke 23:43). These would include Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, Isaiah, Daniel, the thief on the cross, etc. They were waiting for a great event, namely the full payment of their sins which would take place on Calvary's cross. Once this great event took place, then Christ set them free and delivered them from Hades and brought them to heaven.

Those who are in the unsaved compartment of Hades will remain there until a great event takes place: the future and final judgment of all the wicked. This judgment is also called the Great White Throne Judgment. When this great event takes place, their souls will be removed from Hades, their bodies will be resurrected (the second resurrection--John 5:29), and they will stand before God. Their works will be reviewed showing conclusively that they lacked the righteousness that God requires (Rev. 20:12-13). They will see that their names are not written in the Lamb's book of life (Rev. 20:15) because they never received the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour (John 1:12). All who reject Christ will perish eternally (John 3:16).

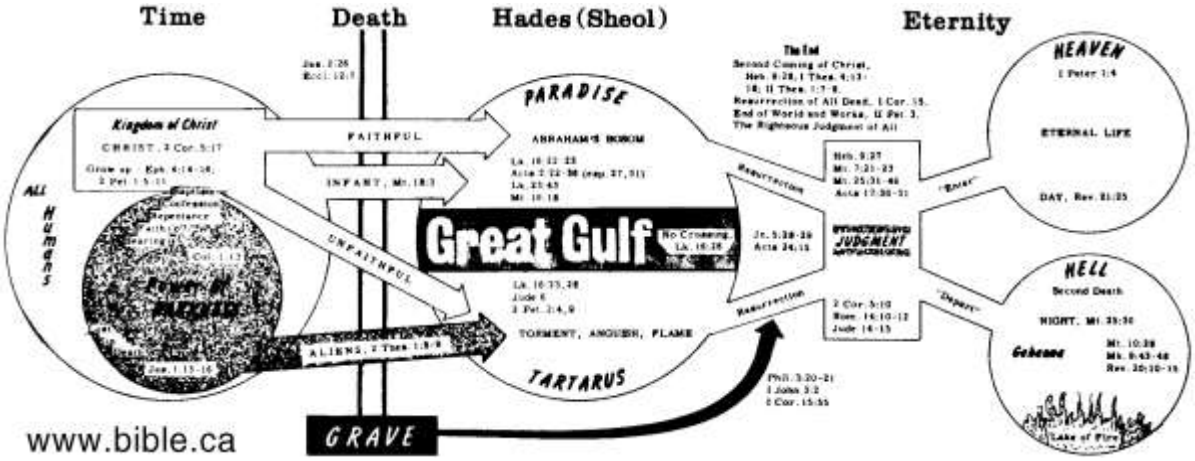
This is illustrated below:



Summary of What the Bible Teaches on Hades (by William Newell):
Hades is literally, "the unseen": yet it is a place, with gates. It is in the heart of the earth. Matthew 12:40. It is the Hebrew sheol; as we see by comparing Psalm 16:10 with Acts 2:27. Men went down into it—Genesis 37:35, R. V. Spirits, not bodies, went there,—except in "the new thing" that God did in the judgment of Korah, Numbers 16:30-33, R. V. There was "a great gulf" there, fixed by God, separating His own from "the pit wherein was no water": for Christ had covenanted to shed His blood for His "prisoners,"—which made them "prisoners of hope"; and God promised Christ He would "render double" unto them,—not only delivering them from the pit,—as was Lazarus, in Abraham's bosom as a child of faith delivered,—but also bringing them up from the "stronghold," in which they waited. See Zechariah 9:9,11,12. When Christ ascended, after the three days there in "the lower parts of the earth," He led up His "captives,"—the Old Testament saints,—in His ascension (see Ephesians 4:8-10) so that they are now "spirits of just men made perfect," in their proper place in heaven, awaiting the Lord's second coming and the resurrection. It is blessed, and sad, to reflect upon the countless hosts waiting with eagerness our Lord's coming: and the prattling ones who "do not believe in it,"—and the frightful terror awaiting them! Note that our Lord's words in Matthew 16:18 refer to the gates of a literal region,—in this earth's center: into which gates the saints of the Church were never even to enter. --The Revelation, pages 79-80 (footnote).

What is the first, second, and third Heaven?

By Randy Alcorn | February 24, 2012

Usually, the first heaven is considered to be our atmosphere, the second heaven is the sky, stars, and galaxies we can see, and the third Heaven is paradise.

“When referring to the present Heaven, where believers go when we die, I often use the term “intermediate Heaven” or “third Heaven,” which Paul used of the place he’d been taken (2 Corinthians 12:2)” http://www.epm.org/resources/2012/Feb/24/what-first-second-and-third-heaven/

http://letusreason.org/Biblexp130.htm

https://carm.org/what-does-it-mean-when-bible-refers-third-heaven

http://askjohnmackay.com/what-is-third-heaven-paul-2-corinthians-where-other-two-heavens/

Question: I have a NIV bible and in 2 Corinthians 12:2 it says, "I know a man in Christ who fourteen years ago was caught up to the third heaven." My question is what is third heaven?

Answer: One of the principal rules in interpreting Scripture is to look closely at the context. It is also important to take Scripture literally as much as possible.

A close examination of the context of this passage reveals that "the man" Paul is referring to is himself. At the end of the previous chapter he shares some of his many trials and tribulations, as his life of being an apostle of Jesus Christ was not all tinsel and lights, but was filled with much persecution. He speaks of the experience he had in chapter 12 as an actual fact. It is important that we receive it as such. It was reality to him, and it should be reality to us. (How like the Lord to give Paul a taste of heaven in the midst of dark trials!) The King James Version also includes the phrase, "(whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;)..." Paul had a real trip into the heavenly world, his only doubt being whether he was in the body or out of the body. This same experience was repeated in the very next two verses.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

Notice that in the context of this passage the "third heaven" (v. 2) and "paradise" (v. 4) seem to be used synonymously. Note further that the apostle regarded heaven or paradise as a place; a place in which God's glory was. One of the most popular commentators of the Bible states that it was "... the heaven of the blessed, above the aerial heaven, in which the fowls fly, above the starry heaven, which is adorned with those glorious orbs : it was into the third heaven, where God most eminently manifests His glory." (Matthew Henry's Commentary, Vol. VI - Acts to Revelation, p. 641.) I tend to agree with Matthew Henry's breakdown of the heavens. The first heaven would be the sky in which birds fly. The second heaven would include outer space where the stars and the planets dwell. The third heaven is where God dwells. Note that these first two heavens are visible to man, but the third is divine. We are not capable to see that place with the physical eye, but by faith we believe that Jesus has gone before us to prepare for us a mansion, and if we accept Him as Lord and personal Savior, we shall go there by and by.

Regular Bible readers will readily recall how that Christ took His disciples (Peter, James and John) up into a mountain and was transfigured before them. He then brought them back down into the world to labor among sinful men. Paul's experience was to encourage him in his many trials and persecutions as he labored for the Lord. (See Acts 9:16 and also Acts 20:22-24.)

First Resurrection Stages (saved) and Second Resurrection (unsaved)

Two Resurrections
https://bible.org/seriespage/4-two-resurrections

Excerpt:

Many people, among them some Christians, have been taught to believe that there is only one "general" resurrection of all the dead at the end of the world. This is a serious error which has robbed many believers of joy and victory in this life. Nowhere in the Scriptures are we taught that the bodies of all men will be raised at the same time. It is true that all the dead will be raised and brought into judgment, but neither the time, the place, nor the judgments are the same. The Bible clearly distinguishes between a first and a second resurrection…

http://www.oneplace.com/ministries/thru-the-bible-with-j-vernon-mcgee/read/articles/q--a-how-many-resurrections-will-there-be-14814.html

A: There are two resurrections: The resurrection of the saved and the resurrection of the unsaved. The Lord Jesus said that some will be raised to everlasting life and some for judgment (see John 5:24-29). The first resurrection goes in a series. You have, for instance, first the taking out of the Church — they will be taken out at the Rapture. The Old Testament saints are not raised, according to Daniel 12:1, until after the Great Tribulation Period when they are raised to enter the kingdom here on this earth. Then you have the resurrection of the tribulation saints, and that ends the first resurrection. You have, therefore, three definite groups included in the first resurrection: The Church, the Old Testament saints, and the tribulation saints. Then you have the second resurrection — that of the lost at the Great White Throne, which occurs at the end of the Millennium.

Order of Resurrection

http://www.biblestudytools.com/commentaries/revelation/revelation-20/order-of-resurrection.html

Excerpt:

There are several different resurrection "events" which transpire in history, each of which falls into one of two categories. All but the last resurrection event make up the first resurrection.

The Resurrections

Order	Which	Timing	Who	Description	Scriptures
1	First	The Third Day	Jesus Christ	The resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, the "firstfruits of those who have fallen asleep."	Mtt. Mat. 28:1-7; Mark Mark 16:1-11; Luke Luke 24:1-12; John John 20:1-18; 1Cor. 1Cor. 15:20
2	First	Shortly after Christ's Resurrection.	A Few OT Saints	At the earthquake attending the crucifixion, graves were opened. Shortly after the resurrection of Christ, these saints were raised.[6]	Mtt. Mat. 27:50-53
3	First	Before the Tribulation.	Church	The resurrection of Church-age believers at the Rapture.	John John 14:3; 1Th. 1Th. 4:13-18; 1Cor. 1Cor. 15:50-53
4	First	Middle of the Tribulation.[7]	Two Witnesses	God's two witnesses will be raised after being killed by The Beast.	Rev. Rev. 11:11-12+
5	First	After Jacob's Trouble	OT Saints	Old Testament saints will be resurrected to enter the Millennial Kingdom.[8]	Dan. Dan. 12:1-2; Isa. Isa. 26:19; Eze. Eze. 37:13-14[9]
6	First	Beginning of Millennial Kingdom.	Tribulation Martyrs	The Tribulation martyrs will be resurrected so that they can rule and reign with Christ.	Rev. Rev. 20:4-6+
7	Second	End of Millennial Kingdom	Unbelieving Dead[10]	At the end of the millennial reign of Christ, the final resurrection will consist of all of the unbelieving, wicked dead. They will be found guilty at the Great White Throne Judgment and cast into the Lake of Fire.	Rev. Rev. 20:11-15+

Although Scripture makes no mention of it, some believe there may be a resurrection of saints from among those who entered the Millennial Kingdom in their natural bodies and their offspring (Mtt. Mat.

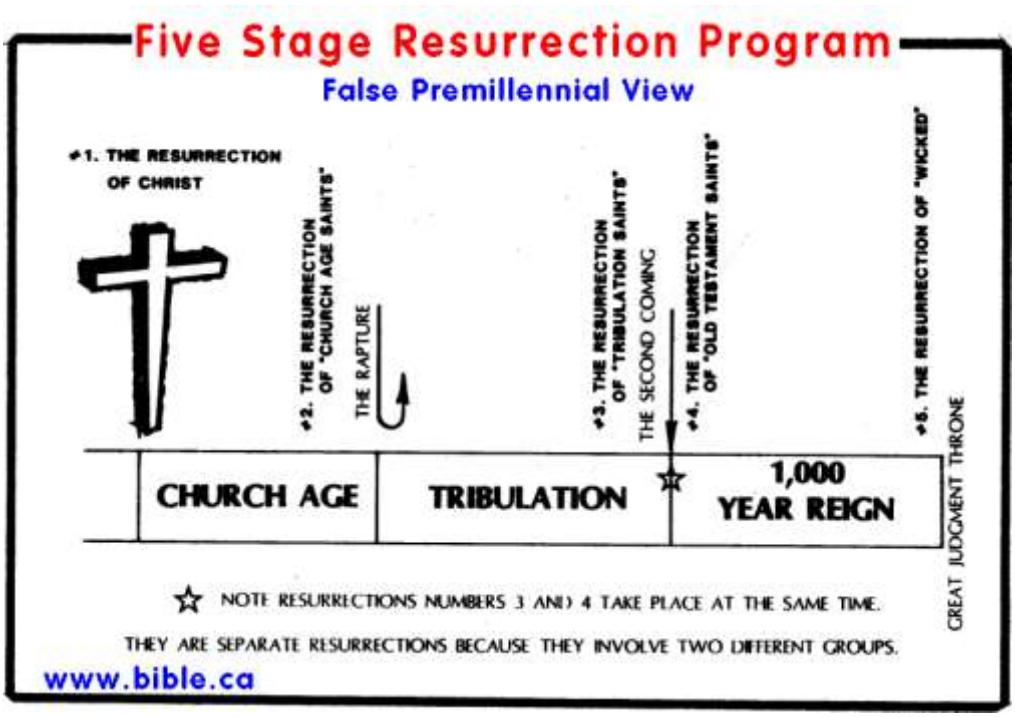
25:34). If the righteous die at an advanced age (Isa. Isa. 65:20), then their resurrection is not recorded in Scripture:



The question has been raised concerning the judgment of those who die in the millennium. It is clear that the unsaved who die in the millennium are included in [the Great White Throne] judgment. The Scriptures are silent, however, concerning any rapture or translation of saints who survive the millennium and concerning the resurrection of saints who may die in the millennium. Both events may be safely assumed, but are not the subject of divine revelation, probably on the principle that this truth is of no practical application to saints now living. Further light may be cast upon this in the millennium itself as the truth of God is made known.

You can't take it with you, but... you can send it on ahead. "Store up for yourselves treasures in Heaven."

Jesus, Matthew 6:20

The 6 Treasure Principle keys:

God owns everything; I'm His money manager.

We are the managers of the assets God has entrusted–not given–to us.

My heart always goes where I put God's money.

Watch what happens when you reallocate your money from temporal things to eternal things.

Heaven–the New Earth, not the present one–is my home.

We are citizens of "a better country–a heavenly one". (Hebrews 11:16)

I should live today not for the dot, but for the line.

From the dot–our present life on earth–extends a line that goes on forever, which is eternity in Heaven.

Giving is the only antidote to Materialism.

Giving is a joyful surrender to a greater person and a greater agenda. It dethrones me and exalts Him.

God prospers me not to raise my standard of living, but to raise my standard of giving.

God gives us more money than we need so we can give–generously.

Ecclesiastes 5:10-15 on money and happiness

paraphrases by Randy Alcorn

“Whoever loves money never has money enough.”

The more you have, the more you want.

“Whoever loves wealth is never satisfied with his income.”

The more you have, the less you’re satisfied.

“As goods increase, so do those who consume them.”

The more you have, the more people (including the government) come after it.

“And what benefit are they to the owner except to feast his eyes on them?”

The more you have, the more you realize it doesn’t meet your real needs.

“The sleep of a laborer is sweet, whether he eats little or much, but the abundance of a rich man permits him no sleep.”

The more you have, the more you have to worry about.

“I have seen a grievous evil under the sun: wealth hoarded to the harm of its owner.”

The more you have, the more you can hurt yourself by holding onto it.

“…or wealth lost through some misfortune.”

The more you have, the more you have to lose.

“Naked a man comes from his mother’s womb, and as he comes, so he departs. He takes nothing from his labor that he can carry in his hand.”

The more you have, the more you have to leave behind.

Views of Hell

The Problem of Hell – Traditionalism and Annihilationism http://www.hellhadesafterlife.com/hell/annihilationism-traditionalism-problem-hell

Three Views of Hell
http://www.rethinkinghell.com/welcome

Excerpt:

There are three views of Hell, labelled most efficiently: Traditionalism, Conditionalism and Universalism. The traditional, majority view is commonly and non-pejoratively called "Traditionalism" in this context, and sometimes delineated "Eternal, Conscious Torment" (ECT). Conditionalism is short for Conditional Immortality, a perspective incorporating Annihilationism. Universalism is sometimes referred to as Universal Restoration or Universal Reconciliation.

Traditionalism holds that Hell involves a permanent state of conscious suffering. Universalism is at the opposite pole, suggesting that everybody eventually ends up reconciled to God, after a period of refinement in Hell. Conditionalism rejects this, agreeing with Traditionalism that Hell is permanent, and that the unsaved will suffer. Where we [conditionalists] mainly disagree with Traditionalism, is in the duration of the experience of Hell. We believe that it ends, because the person (body and soul) is finally destroyed. This, including any suffering involved in the process, is how the Bible portrays final punishment.

An Alternative View:

25 Bible Verses That Disprove Eternal Conscious Hell

While this might not be exhaustive, I've put together 25 verses that strongly illustrate what the Bible teaches on the issue. As one will see, to believe in the traditional hell, one will have to directly argue against the language the Bible uses in these 25 passages which unanimously describe the fate of the unjust as being annihilation– not eternity in a conscious hell.

Here's what the Bible says, and precisely why I have argued that if one were to read the Bible without preexisting ideas of traditional hell, one would not walk away believing in it. Here's the list:

Psalm 1:6 "But the way of the ungodly shall perish"
If one believes in eternal conscious hell, they don't believe the ungodly perish at all– but live forever in hell.

Psalm 37:20 "But the wicked shall perish… they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away."
If one believes in eternal conscious hell, they don't believe the wicked will be "consumed." Instead, they believe the wicked and tortured and never consumed.

Psalm 69:28 says that the wicked are "blotted out of the book of the living."
This continues the consistency of scripture which tells us the wicked die– not that they are eternally living in a conscious hell.

Ps. 34:16, 21 "evil brings death to the wicked."
Of course, if one believes in eternal hell, one doesn't believe that evil brings death at all, but brings life– in hell.

Psalm 92:7 "… shall be destroyed forever."
If one believes in eternal conscious hell, they don't believe those who are lost are "destroyed" but again, that they live forever.

Prov. 24:20 "the lamp of the wicked will be snuffed out."
To believe in eternal conscious hell means one believes they will not be snuffed out at all.

Dan. 2:35 "the wind swept them away without leaving a trace."

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

This continues the theme of totally destroyed– there's not a trace of the wicked. This is the opposite of eternal life in hell.

Isa. 1:28, 30–31 "rebels and sinners shall be destroyed together, and those who forsake the Lord shall be consumed."
Obadiah 1:16 It will be as if the evil "had never been."
This speaks to ceasing to exist– not eternal life in hell. In the traditional hell it will not be "as if they had never been" because they'll live eternally and still "be."

Mal 4:1 "All the arrogant and every evildoer will be stubble, and the day that is coming will set them on fire," says the LORD Almighty. "Not a root or a branch will be left to them."
Here God is quoted directly– the evildoers are destroyed like straw thrown into the fire, and nothing is left. This shows total annihilation (they no longer exist). To believe in eternal hell, one would have to argue that God was mistaken and that they aren't destroyed in the fire at all– but live forever in the fire without being consumed, which is the exact opposite of what God claimed.
Again, hell is NOT in the Old Testament. Instead, they believed that the wicked are destroyed – that they die and do not get resurrected to eternal life. This is the testimony of the whole of scripture. To believe in eternal conscious hell is to really be at odds with the terminology we see scripture use.

These same claims of annihilation and destruction continue in the New Testament:

Matthew 10:28 "Rather, fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."
Here Jesus himself teaches against hell– saying that those who are lost experience the death of their soul. If one believes in eternal conscious hell, they believe Jesus was wrong on this point, and that souls don't die at all, but will live forever in hell.

John 3:16 "…whosoever believeth in him should not perish"
Again, to believe in hell, one must believe Jesus was wrong in John 3:16 and that people don't "perish" at all, but live forever in hell.

Matthew 7:13: "broad is the road that leads to destruction"
Jesus in his warnings continues with the repetitive testimony of scripture: the consequence of rejecting reconciliation with God is destruction– not everlasting life in torment.

Jesus on a variety of occasions uses the metaphor of fire that consumes not tortures: Matt. 7:19; 13:40; John 15:6

Philippians 3:19 "whose end is destruction…"

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

There's that pesky word "destroyed" again. Those who believe in eternal hell don't believe one is destroyed in hell, but lives there forever.

2 Thessalonians 1:9 "who shall be punished with everlasting destruction …"
Getting repetitive yet? Seems like the Bible is getting pretty clear that the consequence of rejecting God is destruction, not eternal life in hell.

1 Cor 3:17: "God will destroy that person"
There's that word again that doesn't mean tortured in hell, but just means what it says– destroyed.

2 Cor 2:15-16: "those that perish"
Again, if Paul meant hell, he should have said it– seems like everyone talks about perishing, being destroyed– but doesn't talk about hell.

Romans 6:23: "For the wages of sin is death.."
Growing up we're taught that the "wages of sin is hell" but nope– it's perishing, dying, being destroyed.. the opposite of eternal life in hell.

Hebrews 10:39 "But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul."
Another version of the same term… destroyed.

James 4:12a "There is one lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy."
Seems like every biblical author wants us to understand to be "destroyed" is the natural consequence…
2 Peter 2:3: "Their condemnation from long ago is not idle, and their destruction is not asleep."

Revelation 20:14 "This is the second death…"
Those who believe in eternal conscious hell don't believe in the second death– they believe everyone is immortal, and that some will live forever in hell. Rev 20:14 is clear that they die– they don't live forever in hell at all.

So there you go folks – the testimony of the whole of scripture does not testify to hell as a place where you are alive and tortured for all eternity. Instead, from the beginning to the end of scripture we are warned that refusing to be reconciled to God – the author and sustainer of life – results in a natural outcome: the finality of death which is the ultimate destruction.

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

I would encourage you to just read the Bible – and read it without the lens of hell that you grew up with. If you read it without those lenses to distort what you see, you'll find that eternal hell isn't what the Bible warns us about – it warns us about a second death.

Everything You Need to Know About Hell:

If you believe in hell, fine. If you don't, fine. But if you're a Christian, then the only thing you should be concerning yourself with is how well you personally are following Christ. Are you obeying what Christ himself called "the Greatest Commandment of all," the "most important commandment," the commandment of which "there is none greater," the commandment upon which "all the Law and the Prophets hang"?

Hearing that Jesus had silenced the Sadducees, the Pharisees got together. One of them, an expert in the law, tested him with this question: "Teacher, which is the greatest commandment in the Law?"

Jesus replied: "'Love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your mind.' This is the first and greatest commandment. And the second is like it: 'Love your neighbor as yourself.' All the Law and the Prophets hang on these two commandments." (The Great Commandment, Matthew 22:34-40)

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

There it is, right there: everything, according to Jesus Christ himself, that we're supposed to know about God, his relationship to us, our relationship to him, and our relationship to others.

Love God, and love your neighbors as you love yourself.

Do that–spend every moment of every day doing that—and then see how much time you have left over to worry about what happens to people who aren't you after they die.

Mind your business—do what you know you're supposed to do, what Jesus commanded you to do—and forget everything else. All the rest—especially anything having to do with ultimate justice in the afterlife—is God's business, not yours. If the cup of your life isn't filled to the brim by your trying to truly fulfill The Great Commandment, then you can be sure you're not doing it right.

Satan – Devil – Adversary – Lucifer

Who Is Satan According to the Bible?

Satan (or the Devil) appears in both the Old and New Testaments of the Bible. Surprisingly, however, most of what people believe about Satan doesn't come from the Bible. For instance, the common image of Satan as a forked-tailed, horned demon with a goat's body from the waist down derives more from the Greek god Pan than anything biblical. What, then, does the Bible say about Satan?

The Hebrew name Satan (pronounced SA-tan) actually means "adversary," and most often in the Hebrew Bible it is prefaced by the direct object, meaning "the adversary" rather than a distinct personal name. Satan's role grows more developed both in scope and magnitude through time, and, thus, in the earlier writings of the Hebrew Bible, Satan exists not so much as an individual character but as an adversarial position occupied by both humans and angels.

For example, the word satan is used for a human potential adversary in the Philistine army (1 Samuel 29:4), and two kings God raise to be Solomon's adversaries (1 Kings 11:14, 23). An angel of the LORD is called satan when he blocks the path of Balaam (Numbers 22:22, 32). Satan becomes more developed as a character in later writings of the Hebrew Bible, though he appears only a few times. He at times causes humans to do bad things, as he incites King David to conduct a census (1 Chronicles 21:1).

Satan also acts as a heavenly prosecuting attorney, bringing charges against sinners before God's heavenly court. For example, in Psalm 109:6 the author asks Satan to bring an enemy to trial. Also in Zechariah 3:1-2, Satan stands at the right hand of an angel to bring charges against the High Priest. Satan has a similar role in the opening chapter of Job, where he appears in the heavenly court with the sons of God to bring charges against Job.

In the New Testament, Satan plays a much larger role. Here Satan, also frequently called the Devil (from Greek diabolos, also meaning "adversary") is a proper name for the one who opposes God. Satan is also identified in the New Testament with the deceitful serpent in Eden, as well as many other names including Belial, the evil one, the ruler of the demons, the enemy, the ruler of this world, and Beelzebul (Beelzebub, meaning "Lord of the flies," is a pun on the name Beelzebul, meaning "Prince Baal").

Many scholars attribute Satan's development from an adversary to the archenemy of God to the influence of the Persian religion Zoroastrianism. This religion is a lot like Star Wars, in which two opposing forces, one good and the other evil, struggle for control of the universe. Yet, the New Testament preserves the Hebrew Bible's notion of Satan as far inferior to God and needing to get God's permission before "raising hell" on earth (see, for example, Luke 22:31). Following the biblical period, Medieval theologians reinterpreted passages such as Isaiah 14 and Ezekiel 28, in which Babylonian and Phoenician kings are condemned for pride, as descriptions about Satan. In fact, the name Lucifer comes from a Latin translation of Isaiah 14:12, in which the Babylonian king is linked to a fallen Morning Star, called in Latin lucern ferre ("bearer of light").

Murderer

“44 You are of your father the devil, and the desires of your father you want to do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and does not stand in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaks a lie, he speaks from his own resources, for he is a liar and the father of it.” John 8:44

Who is Satan?

The word 'satan' is the Hebrew transliteration of the word 'adversary.' Therefore, Satan is the one who opposes God. Satan is the most powerful of the fallen angels. Satan, also known as Lucifer and the Devil, is said to be the one who entered the Garden of Eden and convinced Eve to disobey God. There is debate among scholars regarding the time of the fall of Satan. Some say that he fell when he moved Eve to disobey God. Others state that Satan fell sometime before that and merely manifested his adversarial nature in the Garden. Still others say that there was a great battle in heaven long before the Garden of Eden and that Satan took one-third of the angels with him.

"And another sign appeared in heaven: and behold, a great red dragon having seven heads and ten horns, and on his heads were seven diadems. 4 And his tail swept away a third of the stars of heaven, and threw them to the earth . . . ," (Revelation 12:3-4).

Of course, the first mention of the devil is found in the Garden of Eden, but it isn't until the post-exilic period (538 B.C.) that the figure of Satan is more prominently displayed: Job 1-2; Zechariah 3:1-2; and 1 Chronicles 21:1.1

Satan is mentioned in the Gospels many times:

- Matt. 4:1, "Then Jesus was led up by the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted by the devil."
- Mark 3:23-24, "And He called them to Himself and began speaking to them in parables, 'How can Satan cast out Satan? 24 And if a kingdom is divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand.'"
- John 13:2, "And during supper, the devil having already put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon, to betray Him."

The motive for Satan's rebellion may very well be found in the following verses:

- "How you have fallen from heaven, O star of the morning, son of the dawn! You have been cut down to the earth, You who have weakened the nations! 13 "But you said in your heart, 'I will ascend to heaven; I will raise my throne above the stars of God, And I will sit on the mount of assembly in the recesses of the north. 14 'I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will make myself like the Most High,'" (Isaiah 14:12-14).

In the future, there will be a judgment where the devil will be cast out:

- "And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him," (Revelation 12:9).

The Bible says the devil = Satan in Revelation 12:9

So the great dragon was cast out, that serpent of old, called the Devil and Satan, who deceives the whole world; he was cast to the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

Regarding Lucifer the KJV Bible says in Isaiah 14:12...

How you are fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! How you are cut down to the ground, You who weakened the nations!

So this Lucifer fell from heaven, and Jesus said in Luke 10:18

“I saw Satan fall like lightning from heaven."

Thus Lucifer = Satan. Name changes often denote changes in character in the Bible, thus Lucifer the light bearer (once a good angel) had become Satan (the adversary).

Traditionally the fallen angel is referred to as Lucifer ("light-bringing"). And he was named The devil ("slanderer" or "accuser") and Satan ("adversary" or "opposer") after he apostatized. He is called both The devil or Satan in the bible[Rev 12:7-9]. Whenever the article "The" (Hebrew: ho) is used in-front of devil, it always denotes Lucifer. Just like the example you showed.

The name Lucifer occurs only once in the Hebrew Bible to denote the fallen angel. That is at Isaiah 14:12-15. Comparing its reference to the morning star and fallen angel cast out of heaven with Revelation 12 where the fallen angel is called 'The devil' or 'Satan',[Rev 12:7-9] we can conclude all three are one and the same.

All other fallen angels are usually given the name demons[Mat 7:22; Mark 1:34], and the chief of the demons is called the devil. This must not be taken, however, to indicate that there is a difference of nature with demons and the devil.

Also note that devil is never used in plural form in the bible.

[P.S The name Lucifer was first attributed to the principle fallen angel by St. Jerome. But many church Fathers maintain that Lucifer is not the proper name of the devil, but denotes only the state from which he has fallen. Also note that many early Christians had "Lucifer" as their name and even Jesus was referred as Lucifer in their writings]

The problem with the answers previously given here, and what the majority of English-speaking Christians believe, is that it comes from a perspective of the English translation of the Bible. The Bible isn't of English origin. The Old Testament was written in Hebrew (and called Tanach in that language), and the New Testament was written in Greek.

Lucifer isn't the devil. It certainly isn't the name of an angel, fallen or otherwise. The angels of God who are named in the Bible (Michael and Gabriel) have Hebrew names, even in the NT (again, which was written in Greek). The names of angels who war against God are also given by their Hebrew names (satan [Re 12:9] and abaddon [Re 9:11]). In fact, all the names of individuals who are of Hebrew ancestry are given by their Hebrew names in the NT, transliterated (not translated) into Greek, and from Greek into English.

The word Lucifer doesn't even actually occur in the original Bible texts because lucifer is a Latin word (it means light-bearer). The word in the OT translated Lucifer in Is 14:12 is heylel, used only once and derived from halal (1984 of Strong's Hebrew Concordance), a verb meaning to shine.

In Greek, the word for light-bearer is φωσφόρος, transliterated phosphoros, and used once in the NT, καὶ ἔχομεν βεβαιότερον τὸν προφητικὸν λόγον ᾧ καλῶς ποιεῖτε προσέχοντες ὡς λύχνῳ φαίνοντι ἐν αὐχμηρῷ τόπῳ ἕως οὗ ἡμέρα διαυγάσῃ καὶ φωσφόρος ἀνατείλῃ ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν which we have in one English translation as,

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed , as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn , and the day star arise in your hearts… – 2 Pe 1:19, KVJ

Lucifer, or more correctly, light-bearer, isn't a name. Like Christ (Anointed One), it's a title. A rank signifying delegated authority, which God bestowed on Adam (along with the armor corresponding to that rank) when He gave him dominion over the creatures of Earth, but not dominion over Earth itself (Ge 1:28). Through Adam's disobedience he surrendered his title (and thus his armor) to the devil. It's when the armor was taken Adam and Eve could see they were naked. (Ps 104:2; Ro 13:12)

Jesus was appointed Anointed One (Christ) after the Baptism of John (giving Jesus authority on Earth in parallel to the lucifer of that time). After His death, He stripped satan of the authority and armor he took from Adam (Luke 11:22), and the keys of death and hell, and rose from the dead. He then entered into the Holiest of All with His Blood, making restitution for Man's sins and cleansing the vessels therein and the armor. The Father then appointed Him lucifer (He 9:23, 24), giving Him dominion over Earth and the creatures of Earth (MT 28:18. Ge 1:26.)

Early Christians certainly didn't believe lucifer was the name of the devil. The Latin translation of the NT uses the Latin word for light-bearer once, for the same verse, et habemus firmiorem propheticum sermonem cui bene facitis adtendentes quasi lucernae lucenti in caliginoso loco donec dies inlucescat et lucifer oriatur in cordibus vestris, 2 Pe 1:19

The reason why most English-speaking Christians believe the devil is lucifer today? because he knew that by such deceit, few would attempt to challenge him directly, thinking first of all he was given total authority, and that he still had it. But he's a liar, never having had complete authority to begin with, and being completely stripped of any authority he did have over the Earth and man. (Ge 1:28, MT 4:8; 28:18, He 2:14)

In Jesus, the Anointed One (Christ) and Light-Bearer, mankind has been raised higher than Adam was, and the devil is once again roaming the Earth, tempting men individually, but never able to again rule us all.

Satan – Adversary of God and Man

Satan means "the adversary" in Hebrew and has come to be used as the proper name of the angelic being who tries to destroy people because of his hatred of God.

He is also called the devil, from a Greek word meaning "false accuser." He delights in accusing the saved of sins that have been forgiven.

The Bible gives few facts about Satan, probably because the Bible's chief topics are God the Father, Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit.

In both Isaiah and Ezekiel, passages refer to the fall of the "morning star," translated as Lucifer, but interpretations vary as to whether those passages refer to the king of Babylon or to Satan.

Over the centuries, the assumption has been that Satan is a fallen angel who rebelled against God. The demons mentioned throughout the Bible are evil spirits ruled by Satan (Matthew 12:24-27). Many scholars conclude these beings are also fallen angels, lured away from heaven by the devil. Throughout the gospels, demons not only knew Jesus Christ's true identity, but cowered before his authority as God. Jesus frequently exorcised, or cast demons out of people.

Satan first appears in Genesis 3 as a serpent tempting Eve to sin, although the name Satan is not used. In the book of Job, Satan afflicts the righteous man Job with several calamities, trying to turn him away from God. Another noted act of Satan occurs in the Temptation of Christ, recorded in Matthew 4:1-11, Mark 1:12-13, and Luke 4:1-13.

Satan also tempted the Apostle Peter to deny Christ and entered into Judas Iscariot.

Satan's most powerful tool is deceit. Jesus said of Satan:

> "You belong to your father, the devil, and you want to carry out your father's desire. He was a murderer from the beginning, not holding to the truth, for there is no truth in him. When he lies, he speaks his native language, for he is a liar and the father of lies." (John 8:44, NIV)

Christ, on the other hand, embodies the Truth and called himself "the way and the truth and the life." (John 14:6, NIV)

Satan's greatest advantage is that many people do not believe he exists. Over the centuries he has been portrayed so often as a caricature with horns, a spiked tail and a pitchfork that millions consider him a myth. However, Jesus took him very seriously. Today, Satan continues to use demons to cause havoc and destruction in the world and sometimes employs human agents. His power is not equal to God's, however. Through the death and resurrection of Christ, Satan's ultimate destruction is assured.

Satan's Accomplishments:

> Satan's "accomplishments" are all evil deeds. He caused the fall of humanity in the Garden of Eden. In addition, he played a role in Christ's betrayal, yet Jesus was in complete control of events surrounding his death.

Satan's Strengths:

> Satan is cunning, intelligent, powerful, resourceful, and perseverant.

Satan's Weaknesses:

> He is evil, wicked, proud, cruel, cowardly, and selfish.

Life Lessons:

> As the master deceiver, Satan attacks Christians with lies and doubts. Our protection comes from the Holy Spirit, who lives inside each believer, as well as the Bible, the reliable source of truth. The Holy Spirit stands ready to help us fight temptation. Despite Satan's lies, every believer can trust that their future is secure in heaven through God's plan of salvation.

Hometown:

Satan was created by God as an angel, fell from heaven and was cast into hell. He roams the earth, warring against God and his people.

Referenced in the Bible:

Satan is mentioned by name more than 50 times in the Bible, along with countless references to the devil.

Occupation:

Enemy of God and mankind.

Also Known As:

Apollyon, Beelzebub, Belial, Dragon, Enemy, Power of darkness, Prince of this world, Serpent, Tempter, god of this world, Wicked One.

Family Tree:

Creator - God

Followers - Demons

Key Verses:

Matthew 4:10 - Jesus said to him, "Away from me, Satan! For it is written: 'Worship the Lord your God, and serve him only.' " (NIV)

James 4:7 - Submit yourselves, then, to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. (NIV)

Revelation 12:9 - The great dragon was hurled down-that ancient serpent called the devil, or Satan, who leads the whole world astray. He was hurled to the earth, and his angels with him. (NIV)

Question: Can Satan read your mind? Can the devil read your thoughts?

The Short Answer:

The short answer is no, Satan cannot read our minds. While we learn in Scripture that Satan is powerful and influential, he is not all knowing, or omniscient. Only God has the ability to know all things.

Furthermore, there are no examples in the Bible of Satan reading someone's mind.

The Long Answer:

Satan and his demons are fallen angels (Revelation 12:7-10).

In Ephesians 2:2, Satan is called "the prince of the power of the air."

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

So, the devil and his demons do have power--the same power given to angels. In Genesis 19, angels struck men with blindness. In Daniel 6:22, we read, "My God sent his angel and shut the lions' mouths, and they have not harmed me." And angels can fly (Daniel 9:21, Revelation 14:6).

But no angel or demon has ever been depicted in Scripture with mind reading abilities. In fact, the encounters between God and Satan in the beginning chapters of the book of Job, strongly indicate that Satan cannot read the thoughts and minds of humans. If Satan had known the mind and heart of Job, he'd have known that Job would never curse God.

Understand, however, while Satan cannot read our minds, he does have an advantage. He has been observing humans and human nature for thousands of years. This fact is evidenced in the book of Job as well:

> "One day the members of the heavenly court came to present themselves before the Lord, and the Accuser, Satan, came with them.
> 'Where have you come from?' the Lord asked Satan.
> "Satan answered the Lord, 'I have been patrolling the earth, watching everything that's going on.' " (Job 1:6-7, NLT)

You might even say that Satan and his demons are experts in human behavior.

Satan certainly has a fairly good idea how we will react to temptation, after all, he has been tempting humans since the Garden of Eden. Through ceaseless observation and long experience, Satan and his demons can usually guess with a high degree of accuracy just what we are thinking.

Know Your Enemy

So, as believers it's important that we get to know our enemy and become wise to Satan's schemes:

> "Be sober-minded; be watchful. Your adversary the devil prowls around like a roaring lion, seeking someone to devour." (1 Peter 5:8, ESV)

Know that Satan is a master of deception:

> "He [Satan] was a murderer from the beginning, and does not stand in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he lies, he speaks out of his own character, for he is a liar and the father of lies." (John 8:44, ESV)

And know, too, that with God's help and the Holy Spirit's power, we can fend off Satan's lies:

> "Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." (James 4:7, ESV)

*For further study of the subjects marked with an asterisk, first look up that word in the Chapter Note: Index to Principal Subjects, then double-click on any Bible reference to jump to that verse, and read the note for that verse.

ORIGIN OF DEMONS

A. Souls of Departed Evil People. A heathen Greek view.

B. Disembodied Spirits of a Pre-Adamic Race. The Bible nowhere speaks of such a race.

C. The Offspring of Angels and Antediluvian Women (Ge 6:1-4).

D. Fallen Angels. Satan is an angel and is called prince of the demons (Mt 12:24), indicating that the demons are angels, not a pre-Adamic race. Furthermore, Satan has well-organized ranks of angels (Ep 6:11-12), and it is reasonable to suppose that these are the demons. Some demons are confined already (2Pe 2:4; Jude 6) and some are loose to do Satan's work. It is thought by some that the reason certain demons are presently confined is that they participated in the sin of Ge 6:1-4.

CHARACTERISTICS OF DEMONS

A. Their Nature. They are spirit beings. Note that the demon in Mt 17:18 is called an unclean spirit in the parallel account in Mk 9:25. See also Ep 6:12.

B. Their Intellect. They know Jesus (Mk 1:24), their own doom (Mt 8:29), the plan of salvation (Jas 2:19). They have a well-developed system of doctrine of their own (1Ti 4:1-3).

C. Their Morality. They are called unclean spirits, and their doctrine leads to immoral conduct (1Ti 4:1-2).

ACTIVITY OF DEMONS

A. In General.

1. Demons attempt to thwart the purpose of God (Da 10:10-14; Rev 16:13-16).
2. Demons extend the authority of Satan by doing his bidding (Ep 6:11-12).
3. Demons may be used by God in the carrying out of His purposes (1Sa 16:14; 2Co 12:7).

B. In Particular.

1. Demons can inflict diseases (Mt 9:33; Lk 13:11,16).
2. Demons can possess men (Mt 4:24).
3. Demons can possess animals (Mk 5:13).
4. Demons oppose the spiritual growth of God's children (Ep 6:12).
5. Demons disseminate false doctrine (1Ti 4:1).

DEMON POSSESSION

A. Definition of Demon Possession. Demon possession means a demon residing in a person, exerting direct control and influence over that person, with certain derangement of mind and/or body. Demon possession is to be distinguished from demon influence or demon activity in relation to a person. The work of the demon in the latter is from the outside; in demon possession it is from within. By this definition a Christian cannot be possessed by a demon since he is indwelt by the Holy Spirit. However, a believer can be the target of demonic activity to such an extent that he may give the appearance of demon possession.

B. Effects of Demon Possession.

1. Sometimes physical disease (Mt 9:32-33), but physical disease and demon possession are distinguished in Scripture (Ac 5:16).
2. Sometimes mental derangement is due to demon possession (Mt 17:15) but not always (Da 4).

C. Extent of Demon Possession.

1. As to persons. Only unbelievers may be possessed. In the time of Christ, most instances of demon possession were among non-Israelites.
2. As to time. Usually there is an outbreak of demon activity when truth and light are the strongest (e.g., time of Christ).

DESTINATION OF DEMONS

A. Temporary Destiny.

1. Some free ones were cast into the abyss (Lk 8:31; cf. Rev 9:11).

2. Some confined ones will be loosed in the Tribulation (Rev 9:1-11; 16:13-14).

B. Permanent Destiny. Eventually all demons will be cast with Satan into the lake of fire (Mt 25:41).

Satan

Spirit being who opposes God and seeks to frustrate his plans and lead his people into rebellion.

Satan is seldom mentioned in the OT. He is pictured as an angel who acts as the heavenly prosecutor (Job 1:6-12; 2:1-7; Zec 3:1-2). As such, he is called “the satan” or “the accuser,” and there is nothing in the context to indicate that the angel is evil. It is not until the late OT period that Satan appears as a tempter: in 1Ch 21:1, the story of 2Sa 24:1 is retold with Satan (used for the first time as a proper name) substituted for God and pictured as an evil figure. The OT, then, has no developed doctrine of Satan but contains the raw material from which the later doctrine came. (Some people see Lucifer of Isa 14:12 as a reference to Satan, but the context is clearly referring to the king of Babylon; it is therefore unlikely that any reference to Satan was intended.)

The Jews further developed the idea of Satan during the intertestamental period, also calling him Belial, Mastema, and Sammael. Three differing conceptions appear. First, the Satan of the OT reappears in the roles of tempting people, of accusing them in heaven before God, and of hindering God's saving plan (Jubilees 11:5; 17:16; Assumption of Moses 17; 1 Enoch 40:7). Second, the Dead Sea Scrolls present Satan (Belial) as the leader of the evil forces and attacker of the righteous. This development was probably influenced by the evil god of Zoroastrian religion. But unlike the Zoroastrian idea, the scrolls never present two gods but rather one God who has created both Belial and the Prince of Light (who is sure to win in the end, for God is with him). Third, in this literature Satan is often identified with OT stories from which his name was originally absent: he lusted after Eve and therefore caused the fall (Wis 2:24), he controls the angels who fell in Ge 6:1-4 (Jubilees 10:5-8; 19:28), or he is a fallen angel himself (2 Enoch 29:4).

The NT has a developed portrayal of Satan, and he comes with a whole list of names: Satan (Hebrew for “accuser”), devil (the Greek translation of Satan), Belial, Beelzebul, the Adversary, the Dragon, the Enemy, the Serpent, the Tester, and the Wicked One. Satan is pictured as the ruler of a host of angels (Mt 25:41) and the controller of the world (Lk 4:6; Ac 26:18; 2Co 4:4), who especially governs all who are not Christians (Mk 4:15; Jn 8:44; Ac 13:10; Col 1:13). He is opposed to God and seeks to alienate all people from God; therefore, he is an especially dangerous foe of Christians (Lk 8:33; 1Co 7:5; 1Pe 5:8), who must steadfastly resist him and see through his cunning (2Co 2:11; Ep 6:11; Jas 4:7). Satan works his evil will by tempting persons (Jn 13:2; Ac 5:3), by hindering God's workers (1Th 2:18), by accusing Christians before God (Rev 12:10), and by controlling the evil persons who resist the gospel (2Th 2:9; Rev 2:9,13; 13:2).

Most importantly, however, the NT teaches us that this being, who has been evil from the beginning (1Jn 3:8), has now been bound and cast out of heaven through the ministry of Jesus (Lk 10:18; Rev 12). While Satan is still a dangerous enemy, Jesus himself prays for us and has given us the powerful weapons of prayer, faith, and the efficacy of his blood. Satan can still cause physical illness when allowed by God (2Co 12:7), and persons can be delivered over to him for punishment (1Co 5:5; 1Ti 1:20). Satan will always be under God's control, who will eventually destroy him (Ro 16:20; Rev 20:10).

Devil and Demons

In Christian theology the idea of a devil has its origins in the OT notion of an ‘adversary' (Heb. śāṭān): as people opposing each other (2Sa 19:22), as God using people to oppose someone (1Ki 11:14), or as a supernatural agent sent by God (Nu 22:22). The OT has few references to creatures that have been taken to be demons. The satyrs/‘hairy ones' (Lev 17:7; 2Ch 11:15; Isa 13:21; 34:14); the šēḏîm (Dt 32:17; Ps 106:37); the horse-leech or vampire (Pr 30:15); Azazel (Lev 16:8,10,26; cf. Ethiopic Enoch 10:8) and Lilith (RSV = night hag, Isa 34:14), an Akkadian demon thought to be found in desolate places with the unclean owl and kite, may all have been understood to be demons. Protection from them was sought (Ps 91) but Isa 6:2 and 6 show that these beings (ś e rāphîm) could also perform positive functions for God (see Angels). There is also the belief in the OT that the evil spirits are under Yahweh's control (1Sa 16:14-23). Only in a few places did the LXX use the word ‘demon'—often as a description of the heathen gods: i.e. Dt 32:17; Ps 91:6; 96:5; 106:37; Isa 13:21; 34:14; 65:3,11. Probably under Persian influence Satan appears as man's accuser in the heavenly court (Job 1-2). There is speculation on the origin of demons (Jubilees 4:22; Ethiopic Enoch 6f.) and Satan becomes the chief of an army of demons over against God and his angels (1 QS 3:19ff.).

Outside soteriology, the NT writers are little interested in demonology. They believed demons were Satan's minions (Mk 3:22); inhabited water (Mt 8:32) as well as waterless places (Mt 12:43); were potential objects of worship (1Co 10:20-21; 1Ti 4:1; Rev 9:20); could speak through those they possessed (Mk 1:34); could also possess animals (Mk 5:12); could cause suffering (Mt 12:22-24; Mk 1:21-28; 5:1-20; 7:24-30; 9:14-29) and grant superhuman strength (Mk 5:3-5); could deceive Christians (1Jn 4:1,3,6); and needed to be withstood by Christians (Ep 6:12). Paul sometimes uses the phrase ‘principalities and powers' to describe evil spiritual beings which oppose God and, potentially, are able to separate the Christian from God (Ro 8:38-39; 1Co 15:24; Col 2:8-15). Paul also associates idols with demons (1Co 10:20-22). Jesus saw his ministry, particularly of exorcism, as the first of a two-stage defeat of Satan (Mt 12:22-30; cf. Lk 10:18). In Paul and Johannine theology, the cross was the focus of the defeat (Col 2:15; Jn 12:31). Jesus believed that the final defeat would be at the end of the age (Mt 13:24-30), a view shared by early Christians (Rev 20).

In the patristic period, speculation abounded. Ethiopic Enoch was particularly influential. In thinking that demons, who also became the gods of the pagan world, were the sons of the fallen angels and human women in Ge 6, the Clementine Homilies were widely representative of the thought of the period. Origen did not accept either the influence of Ethiopic Enoch or that the heavenly powers fell because of envy (cf. Wis 2:24). He equated Lucifer (Isa 14:12-15) with Satan who, with the powers, revolted and fell from heaven because of pride. Augustine followed Origen, but not in thinking that the devil could be reconciled to God. Over against Anselm, Abelard believed that the atonement had nothing to do with the devil.

Thomas Aquinas held that the devil, who is the cause of all sin, was once probably the very highest angel who, through pride, fell immediately after creation, seducing those who followed him to become his subjects.

Calvin refuted those ‘who babble of devils as nothing else than evil emotions' by pointing to texts where the reality of Satan and the devils is assured. The devil was an angel whose malice came as a result of his revolt and fall. The little Scripture tells us is to arouse us ‘to take precaution against their stratagems' (Institutes I.xiv.13-19). 19th-century theologians expressed little interest in demonology. For example, Schleiermacher questioned the conception of a fall among good angels and said that Jesus did not associate the devil with the plan of salvation; rather, Jesus and his disciples drew their demonology from the common life of the period rather than from Scripture, so that the conception of Satan is not a permanent element in Christian doctrine. In contemporary theological enquiry Bultmann still sums up the prevailing view: ‘It is impossible to use electric light and the wireless and to avail ourselves of modern medical and surgical discoveries, and at the same time to believe in the New Testament world of daemons and spirits' (‘The New Testament and Mythology', in H. W. Bartsch, ed., Kerygma and Myth , vol. 1, London, 1953, p. 5). E. L. Mascall, in, e.g. The Christian Universe (London, 1966), represents a significant minority of theologians who believe that there are, in our human situation and experience, signals and dimensions of evil and sickness that are best accounted for by accepting the existence of some form of evil agency legitimately characterized ‘devil' and ‘demons'.

Satan

Although not a prominent spiritual power, the satan (śāṭān , adversary) of the OT is important in providing the origins of the Satan more familiar from the NT. Sometimes humans perform the role of a satan (* e.g. 1Sa 29:4; 1Ki 5:4; Ps 109:6). A celestial satan figure is mentioned in four OT passages: Nu 22:22,32; 1Ch 21:1 (in these two passages the word appears without the definite article and could be a reference to an unspecified member of the heavenly assembly acting as an adversary); Job 1:6-12; 2:1 and Zec 3:1-2. The use of the definite article (14 times in Job 1-2) may indicate that a specific son of God (see Job 1:6, NIV fn.) is thought to hold the office of accuser. However, more probably any member of the royal court was able to assume the role of accuser (* cf. Ps 109:6), for neither in ancient Israel nor in the judicial terminology of Mesopotamia was there a legal office of accuser (H. J. Boecker, Law and the Administration of Justice [Minneapolis, 1980], p. 38). It is possible to interpret 1Ch 21:1 to mean that, in his anger, God permitted Satan to incite David; this suggests that Satan is not always viewed in a favourable light by God.

In the OT, Satan is a mere creature of God, acting at his command. The Satan (or satans) is portrayed both as a general adversary and as a legal accuser who tests the faithfulness of God's people. To him is ascribed responsibility for the supposedly evil acts that writers want to distance from God. By NT times direct responsibility for evil is ascribed to the archdemon or Satan.

Satan

adversary; accuser. When used as a proper name, the Hebrew word so rendered has the article "the adversary" (Job 1:6-12; 2:1-7). In the New Testament it is used as interchangeable with Diabolos, or the devil, and is so used more than thirty times.

He is also called "the dragon," "the old serpent" (Rev 12:9; 20:2); "the prince of this world" (Jn 12:31; 14:30); "the prince of the power of the air" (Ep 2:2); "the god of this world" (2Co 4:4); "the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience" (Ep 2:2). The distinct personality of Satan and his activity among men are thus obviously recognized. He tempted our Lord in the wilderness (Mt 4:1-11). He is "Beelzebub, the prince of the devils" (12:24). He is "the constant enemy of God, of Christ, of the divine kingdom, of the followers of Christ, and of all truth; full of falsehood and all malice, and exciting and seducing to evil in every possible way." His power is very great in the world. He is a "roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour" (1Pe 5:8). Men are said to be "taken captive by him" (2Ti 2:26). Christians are warned against his "devices" (2Co 2:11), and called on to "resist" him (Jas 4:7). Christ redeems his people from "him that had the power of death, that is, the devil" (Heb 2:14). Satan has the "power of death," not as lord, but simply as executioner.

Difference Between Hades (God of Greek Mythology) And Satan

"Memo to me, memo to me: maim you after my meeting." —Hades, Hercules (1997)

In A Nutshell

They're both rulers of the Underworld, but that's where similarities end. The Christian Satan is the most evil of creatures who delights in torment and pain, while Hades was long known as defender of the rights of the dead, as well as the overseer of both Tartaros and the beautiful fields of Elysium. While Satan is said to delight in walking the Earth and causing trouble, most of the interaction Hades has with humans is when they invade his domain—and sometimes, they're given what they want.

The Whole Bushel

Hades is the Greek god of the Underworld, and as such, he's often imagined to be the same villainous, diabolical entity as the Christian Satan. That's very, very far from the truth, however, but it's become such a prevalent myth that the two are often absolutely, wrongly interchangeable, with Hades tasked as playing the Satan-like villain in countless modern works about Greek mythology.

When it comes to wanting dominion over the dead, Hades never asked for the job—he never had the dark heart that the Devil had even in the form of an angel. Hades was only assigned his domain when he and his two brothers decided to draw lots for who ruled what part of the universe. Zeus went first and got the land and sky, Poseidon the seas, and Hades ended up with the afterlife.

One of the biggest differences between the two is their interaction with mankind. Satan is said to wander among men, tempting them to sin and damn their souls for all eternity. Satan tempts Eve to eat the forbidden fruit, and that's a trend that seen throughout his acts. If he's not causing trouble himself, he's sending out demons to do his dirty work. According to 1 John 5:19, "the whole world lies under the sway of the wicked one." He's the bringer of doubt, conflict, and despair.

Hades, on the other hand, is a very hands-off sort of Underworld ruler. When he's in the Underworld, which is most of the time, he doesn't even know what's going on in the world of the living. It was said that all he could hear in the Underworld of the living was man's curses. In fact, it's rare that he emerges from the Underworld. According to myth, most of his interaction with living mortals occurs when they storm the gates of his kingdom, such as in the myths of Orpheus and Heracles.

And in those myths, he helps them out. He gives Orpheus the chance to take his wife back to the land of the living (Orpheus, of course, disobeys the simple rule of "Don't look back") and, according to some versions of the myth, allowed Heracles to take the three-headed dog Cerberus from the Underworld to complete his labors.

When he does unleash his wrath, it's not just for the sake of causing trouble or being evil. The infamous punishment of Sisyphus came only when the king tried to cheat his own death, and Theseus and Pirithous were condemned to eternal torment after stealing into the Underworld to abduct Hades' wife and a 12-year-old Helene to take them for their own wives. And when he struck down Thebes with a plague, that was retribution for a king who refused to honor dead soldiers with a proper burial.

Hades also has the ability to love, and rules alongside his consort, Persephone. Popular myth says that he saw the daughter of the goddess Demeter and, with the help of Zeus, he kidnapped the girl and carried her off to be his queen. While his methods are more than a little shady, it's important that he truly did love the girl.

Another incredibly important difference between the two is in the realms they lord over. Satan is the master of Hell, where the evil and the sinners of the world go to suffer in eternal torment. Hades is the lord of the Underworld—and that means the good side as well as the bad. While the concept of a reward after death as an ever-changing and ever-evolving concept through Greek mythology, Hades was also given domain over the Elysian Fields. Occasionally also governed by Kronos or by one of Zeus's sons, the more common version of the Elysian Fields is one that exists in the deepest areas of Hades' Underworld. This netherworld realm was the reward to which heroes and virtuous souls would go after death and was a beautiful paradise.

Hades was also known as Pluto (from Greek Ploutōn), and it was by this name (translated as "the unseen one" or "the rich one") that he came to be known in Roman mythology; the corresponding Etruscan god was Aita.
The symbols associated with him are scepter and cornucopia.

Purgatory

Is Purgatory a Biblical Concept?

This article first appeared in the Practical Hermeneutics column of the Christian Research Journal, volume 33, number 03 (2010). For further information or to subscribe to the Christian Research Journal go to: http://www.equip.org

The doctrine of purgatory remains a troubling idea for many Roman Catholics. One bulletin from a local Catholic church included the following: "Why do we pray for souls in Purgatory? When we die in God's friendship, we know that we'll eventually go to heaven. However, if we haven't properly atoned for certain sins, we have to be purified in Purgatory first. The Catechism of the Catholic Church calls it, 'a final cleansing of human imperfections before one is able to enter the joy of heaven.' We pray for the souls in Purgatory, especially during the month of November, to help them pass through to heaven faster than they would on their own."[1] Some Catholics question this doctrine, and more than a few challenge its legitimacy, based on their understanding of Scripture. At the Web site www.catholic.com, a site devoted to "Catholic answers, Catholic apologetics, and Catholic evangelism," Christine Pinheiro and Kenneth Howell defend the Catholic doctrine of purgatory.[2] "All who die in God's grace and friendship, but still imperfectly purified, are indeed assured of their eternal salvation; but after death they undergo purification, so as to achieve the holiness necessary to enter the joy of heaven."[3]

Four False Ideas. The Roman Catholic doctrine of purgatory is covered in the Catechism of the Catholic Church in just three paragraphs on two pages (paragraphs 1030-32; pp. 268-69). The concepts that have necessitated the doctrine of purgatory, however, are found throughout Catholic dogma. The idea of purgatory grows out of four mistaken ideas about man, sin, and salvation. First, Catholic theology does not accept the final and full sufficiency of Christ's once-for-all atonement (1 Pet. 3:18). The Catholic soteriological system is fraught with ideas of self-atonement-works that must be done to merit forgiveness for past sins. Purgatory allows for those meritorious efforts (i.e. suffering) to atone for sin after death. Second, Catholic doctrine teaches an unbiblical idea of penalty and guilt. It holds that "absolution takes away sin, but it does not remedy all the disorders sin has caused…he must 'make satisfaction for' or 'expiate' his sins. This satisfaction is also called 'penance.'"[4] Purgatory is the final act of penance that removes the penalty of sin. Third, Catholic doctrine distorts the biblical concept of grace by adding human merit to it: "Moved by the Holy Spirit and charity, we can merit for ourselves and for others the graces needed for our sanctification, for the increase of grace and charity, and for the attainment of eternal life."[5] Purgatory helps to earn enough merit, over time, to overcome the punishment of God. Fourth, Roman Catholic theology confuses the biblical doctrine of judgment. It teaches that judgments after death include a remedial judgment that sends some people to purgatory, and a final judgment that occurs at the second coming of Christ. These four notions of self-atonement, penance, merit, and remedial judgment run contrary to the teaching of the New Testament, and they cause the gospel message to pass through a distorted grid that leads only to defective interpretation and understanding of Scripture. There are four key passages in which this occurs.

First Corinthians 3:13-14 and the Idea of Purgation. The apostle Paul, in 1 Corinthians 3:13-14, makes this statement: "Each one's work will become manifest, for the Day will disclose it, because it will be revealed by fire, and the fire will test what sort of work each one has done. If the work that anyone has built on the foundation survives, he will receive a reward. If anyone's work is burned up, he will suffer loss, though he himself will be saved, but only as through fire."[6] Paul's statements are clear. It is the man's works that are being judged, not his person or soul. The issue at stake is not his salvation or eternal state (heaven or hell), but his rewards. The fire of Christ's judgment will test the nature of his earthly works; this judgment does nothing to the sanctification of his soul. In fact, Paul makes it very clear that though his rewards may be lost, yet *"he himself will be saved."*When Paul mentions "the Day," he refers to "the Day of the Lord": the day of the return of Christ and the final judgment of the living and the dead. Verse 14 simply amplifies and explains verse 13.[7] Paul's point is obvious: not all Christian ministers (or saints) will receive the same reward. The final judgment will test the nature of our life's work. Some men's work will prove to be as pure as gold, silver, or precious jewels and will be greatly rewarded. Other Christians will do little with their lives, and their works will be like wood, hay, and straw-consumed by Christ's fiery judgment. The person who has trusted in Christ, however, will be saved and brought through the fire of judgment because of his faith in Christ. Some will have greater rewards, some will have lesser rewards, but the works of a man do not determine if he goes to heaven or hell. Faith in Christ (or not) seals a person's eternal destiny. David Prior summarizes well what Paul is saying: "These verses in 1 Corinthians 3 urge us to take with full seriousness both the certainty of eternal life and the scrutiny which the Lord will bring to our daily service as Christians."[8]

Second Maccabees 12:39-46 and Prayers for the Dead. This passage from the Apocrypha says nothing about purgatory. It is merely the interpretation of the writer concerning a bizarre incident. A closer reading of this text indicates four things. First, Second Maccabees makes no direct reference to purgatory. Second, the passage is self-contradictory and inconsistent. It states that these dead "had gone to rest in godliness" (v. 45), but then it tells us that these dead warriors were idolaters, killed by God due to their idolatry. Third, there is nothing in the law of Moses that comes close to advocating prayers for the dead. What we find in Second Maccabees and the rabbinical writings surrounding these events are the syncretistic merging of pagan ideas with Israelite religion. Fourth, the Apocrypha, while useful for background information, is full of historical inaccuracies, myth, superstition, and ideas contrary to the rest of Scripture. The anonymous author of Second Maccabees does not purport to speak for God, but rather merely to condense some five volumes of a man named Jason of Cyrene (2 Macc. 3:23).[9] We cannot and should not look to Second Maccabees for Scripture-based doctrines.

First Peter 3:18-22 and the Idea of Post-Death Probation. What Peter sets forth in this passage is not Jesus Christ going to purgatory or hell to preach to people in order to help them get to heaven. Peter simply states that the crucified and dead Christ was raised by the Holy Spirit, the same Spirit by whom Noah preached to the people of his day prior to the flood "long ago" (v. 20). Those souls now in prison (hell) are there because they refused to heed Noah's call to repentance and faith. Christ is compared to the ark of Noah-if people enter into Christ by faith and baptism, they will be saved from God's final judgment just as Noah and his family were saved from the flood by faith and the ark. "The passage describes no second chance for repentance after death. Even less does it promise universal salvation."[10]

Matthew 12:32 and Salvation after Death. Finally, when Jesus says that those guilty of the sin of blasphemy of the Holy Spirit cannot be forgiven "either in this age or in the age to come," Christ is not pointing to purgatory. Our Catholic friends are incorrect to say that "this suggests that there are some sins that will be forgiven in the age to come. If there is no purification after death, then this passage doesn't make sense."[11] To the contrary, Christ's statement makes perfectly clear sense, and the introduction of the concept of purgatory merely confuses the plain meaning of Scripture. Leon Morris interprets the passage easily: "This does not, of course, mean that some of those who are not forgiven in this world may hope for forgiveness after death. Such a possibility is not contemplated. The meaning is something like 'neither in time nor eternity; never!'"[12]

The Laws of Hermeneutics. The interpretation of Scripture (called hermeneutics) is built on three preliminary laws. The first is this: Scripture interprets Scripture, called "the rule of analogy." The second law of hermeneutics is this: The plain meaning of Scripture is usually the true meaning. The third rule is this: Simple passages of Scripture help explain complex passages of Scripture-the simple informs the complicated. Roman Catholic hermeneutics concerning supposed proof texts for purgatory violate all of these laws of hermeneutics. There is no clear, plain, and simple text about purgatory, as there is about both heaven and hell. The Apocrypha cannot be placed equal to inspired Scripture. The Bible plainly speaks about life, death, and judgment: "And just as it is appointed for man to die once, and after that comes judgment" (Heb. 9:27). We live, we die, we are judged, we go to heaven or hell; and when Christ comes a second time the final judgment, final hell and final heaven arrive. There is no mention of postmortem purgation at all. Purgatory is an extrabiblical idea, imported into the church in the Middle Ages-a product of tradition but not Scripture. And the Catholic efforts at grasping for hermeneutical straws to support this false belief-"fire," "the age to come," "souls in prison"-betray a lack of clear, precise, and biblical evidence for that place called purgatory.

What does the Bible say about Purgatory?

Answer: According to the Catholic Encyclopedia, Purgatory is "a place or condition of temporal punishment for those who, departing this life in God's grace, are not entirely free from venial faults, or have not fully paid the satisfaction due to their transgressions." To summarize, in Catholic theology Purgatory is a place that a Christian's soul goes to after death to be cleansed of the sins that had not been fully satisfied during life. Is this doctrine of Purgatory in agreement with the Bible? Absolutely not!

Jesus died to pay the penalty for all of our sins (Romans 5:8). Isaiah 53:5 declares, "But He was pierced for our transgressions, He was crushed for our iniquities; the punishment that brought us peace was upon Him, and by His wounds we are healed." Jesus suffered for our sins so that we could be delivered from suffering. To say that we must also suffer for our sins is to say that Jesus' suffering was insufficient. To say that we must atone for our sins by cleansing in Purgatory is to deny the sufficiency of the atoning sacrifice of Jesus (1 John 2:2). The idea that we have to suffer for our sins after death is contrary to everything the Bible says about salvation.

The primary Scriptural passage Catholics point to for evidence of Purgatory is 1 Corinthians 3:15, which says, "If it is burned up, he will suffer loss; he himself will be saved, but only as one escaping through the flames." The passage (1 Corinthians 3:12-15) is using an illustration of things going through fire as a description of believers' works being judged. If our works are of good quality "gold, silver, costly stones," they will pass through the fire unharmed, and we will be rewarded for them. If our works are of poor quality "wood, hay, and straw," they will be consumed by the fire, and there will be no reward. The passage does not say that believers pass through the fire, but rather that a believer's works pass through the fire. 1 Corinthians 3:15 refers to the believer "escaping through the flames," not "being cleansed by the flames."

Purgatory, like many other Catholic dogmas, is based on a misunderstanding of the nature of Christ's sacrifice. Catholics view the Mass / Eucharist as a re-presentation of Christ's sacrifice because they fail to understand that Jesus' once-for-all sacrifice was absolutely and perfectly sufficient (Hebrews 7:27). Catholics view meritorious works as contributing to salvation due to a failure to recognize that Jesus' sacrificial payment has no need of additional "contribution" (Ephesians 2:8-9). Similarly, Purgatory is understood by Catholics as a place of cleansing in preparation for heaven because they do not recognize that because of Jesus' sacrifice, we are already cleansed, declared righteous, forgiven, redeemed, reconciled, and sanctified.

The very idea of Purgatory and the doctrines that are often attached to it (prayer for the dead, indulgences, meritorious works on behalf of the dead, etc.) all fail to recognize that Jesus' death was sufficient to pay the penalty for ALL of our sins. Jesus, who was God incarnate (John 1:1,14), paid an infinite price for our sin. Jesus died for our sins (1 Corinthians 15:3). Jesus is the atoning sacrifice for our sins (1 John 2:2). To limit Jesus' sacrifice to atoning for original sin, or sins committed before salvation, is an attack on the Person and Work of Jesus Christ. If we must in any sense pay for, atone for, or suffer because of our sins – that indicates Jesus' death was not a perfect, complete, and sufficient sacrifice.

For believers, after death is to be "away from the body and at home with the Lord" (2 Corinthians 5:6-8; Philippians 1:23). Notice that this does not say "away from the body, in Purgatory with the cleansing fire." No, because of the perfection, completion, and sufficiency of Jesus' sacrifice, we are immediately in the Lord's presence after death, fully cleansed, free from sin, glorified, perfected, and ultimately sanctified.

Purgatory

"I constantly hold that there is a Purgatory, and that the souls therein detained are helped by the suffrages of the faithful." [1]

According to the Catechism of the Catholic Church, paragraph 1030, "All who die in Gods grace and friendship, but still imperfectly purified, are indeed assured of their eternal salvation, but after death they undergo purification, so as to achieve the holiness necessary to enter the joy of heaven."

The Second Vatican Council, p. 63, says, "The truth has been divinely revealed that sins are followed by punishments. God’s holiness and justice inflict them. Sins must be expiated. This may be done on this earth through the sorrows, miseries and trials of this life and, above all, through death. Otherwise the expiation must be made in the next life through fire and torments or purifying punishments."

This process of purification occurs in a place designated by the Catholic Church as purgatory. According to Catholic doctrine, purgatory is not supposed to be a place of punishment but of purification. The nature of this purification, according to different Catholic theologians, ranges from an extreme awareness of loss to an intense, excruciatingly painful "purifying fire."

According to Roman Catholic Doctrine, though a person may be in a state of grace, he may not enter Heaven until he is purified from sins that were not dealt with on earth. Baptism remits sins committed up to that point, but prayers, indulgences, penance, absolution, and the Mass are means by which the sinner is able to expiate sins committed after baptism. If sins are not remitted, after death he must suffer the flames of purification until he is sufficiently cleansed and pure so as to enter into the presence of God. Additionally, intercession can be made by Catholics on behalf of those who are presently in purgatory. This is also done through saying the Mass, certain acts of penance, saying the Rosary, or by indulgences where the benefit is applied to the dead in purgatory.

But purgatory is not for everyone. Baptized infants who have died before the age of accountability and Catholic saints who lived such holy lives are excused from the "purifying fires."

The length of time that someone must suffer in this state is never known, but it is considered to be proportional to the nature and severity of the sins committed. Therefore, it could be anywhere from a few hours to millions of years.

Problems with the Doctrine of Purgatory

As a Christian who bases spiritual truth on the Bible alone, I see problems with the doctrine of purgatory. For example:

1. It is not explicitly found in the Bible.
2. It implies that the righteousness of Christ does not cleanse from all sin.
3. It implies that justification is not by faith alone.
4. It implies that there is something we must do in order to be cleansed of sin.

The Catholics will disagree with my perceived problems of the doctrine of purgatory. That is to be expected. They will cite church Fathers, the apocrypha, and various Biblical references to fire and purification. Whichever side of the argument you fall into, my goal here is to present a Biblical argument that examines the doctrine in an attempt to determine if it is Biblical or not.

Of course, the Catholic will say that as a Protestant, I come to the argument with the preconceived belief that (1) Purgatory is unbiblical (2) and that I am biased against it (3) and that I have an agenda to accomplish. To each of these accusations I admit guilt. None of us are perfectly unbiased, and most everyone has personal beliefs that are reflected in their actions and words. In this case, having read and studied the Bible thoroughly, I find no place in it for the Roman Catholic doctrine of Purgatory.

What Do Christians Believe About Purgatory? What Does The Bible Teach?

http://www.whatchristianswanttoknow.com/what-do-christians-believe-about-purgatory-what-does-the-bible-teach/

'Purgatory' in Roman Catholic [and Anglo-Catholic ("High Church" Anglican)] understanding is a state or place in which the temporal penalty due for sins committed during one's lifetime is paid. Every soul in purgatory will eventually be in heaven. The Eastern Orthodox and Anglicans do not accept this idea, though all Catholic and Orthodox Christians believe that prayers for the dead assist the dead in some way and are entirely legitimate and desirable (see II Maccabees 12:43-5).

How the prayers of the living assist the dead is a mystery. In the eternity of God it is perfectly possible that prayers from the living today may help the dead of the past in their own lifetimes. In any case, purgatory is a speculation built on no solid Scriptural foundation. 'Limbo' is a theological construct which is meant to explain how God might deal with the souls of non-baptized persons who showed great natural virtue and goodness or who died as infants before committing any personal sins. 'Limbo' is the final state of such persons, according to some medieval theologians. Limbo is a state of perfect natural bliss and enjoyment, which, however, forever excludes the possibility of supernatural bliss and the eternal vision of God. This idea is a theological speculation with no binding force in any Church.

[Source: http://www.anglicancatholic.org/on-the-role-of-the-saints?class=greenlink]

The main problem with Purgatory is that it minimizes Christ's forgiveness. Being forgiven of our sins by God because Christ bore our sins and grants us His righteousness, in this view, is not enough. We still have to pay. We end up having to atone for our own sins.

Commerce: Money / Currency

Drachmae, the standard unit of silver coinage, were minted on different weight standards at different ancient Greek mints. The standard that came to be most commonly used was the Athenian or Attic one. The ancient Roman denarius is a close equivalent.

In the Roman currency system, the denarius (plural: denarii) was a silver coin first minted about 211 BC during the Second Punic War. It became the most common coin produced for circulation but was slowly debased in weight and silver content until its replacement by the double denarius, early in the 3rd century AD. The word denarius is derived from the Latin dēnī "containing ten", as its value was 10 asses, although in the middle of the 2nd century BC it was recalibrated so that it was now worth sixteen asses [the as (plural asses), also assarius was a bronze, and later copper, coin].

Note: The Bible refers to the denarius as a day's wage for a common laborer (Matthew 20:2, John 12:5).

[Source: Wikipedia – denarius]

In OT times, a talent was a unit of weight equaling about 75 pounds (34 kg). In NT times, it was a unit of monetary reckoning (though not an actual coin), valued at about 6,000 drachmas, the equivalent of about 20 years' wages for a laborer. (A common laborer earned about one denarius per day.) In approximate modern equivalents, if a laborer earns $15 per hour, at 2,000 hours per year he would earn $30,000 per year, and a talent would equal $600,000 (USD). Hence, "ten thousand talents" hyperbolically represents an incalculable debt — in today's terms, about $6 billion.
[Source: ESV Study Bible note]

hundred denarii - This was still a large amount (equivalent to about 20 weeks of common labor, or about $12,000 in today's terms), but compared to the debt that the wicked servant himself owed ($6 billion), it was a relatively small amount. The servant's unwillingness to forgive even this amount, though having been forgiven his own insurmountable debt, reveals the servant's true wicked character (Matthew 18:32) and that he has not in fact been transformed by the forgiveness that his master has extended to him. [Source: ESV Study Bible note]

A talent (Matthew 18:24) was equal to 6000 drachmas (the Greek name) or denarii (the Roman name). Since the drachma was equal to about a day's wages, it would take an average laborer almost 20 years to earn one talent. Ten thousand talents was thus equal to the lifetime earnings of the population of several good-sized villages. The man was forgiven 60 million drachmas but was unwilling to forgive 100. That is how Jesus compares our own sins against God with the sins others commit against us. Notice Jesus' statement that there is no hope of forgiveness unless we forgive (Matthew 18:35). When the Pharisees asked Jesus if it was lawful to pay taxes to Caesar, Jesus asked to see a coin for the tax. They gave Him a denarius like this. The motto on this coin proclaims Tiberius to be the son of the divine Caesar who preceded him. Jesus, the true Son of God, would have recognized the irony of Tiberius' claim (Matt 22:17–22; Mark 12:14–17; Luke 20:21–26).

Rome operated a mint in Tyre that produced silver shekels of high purity (94 percent silver or more). These and half-shekels were the only coins accepted by the temple in Jerusalem. The high priests paid Judas with silver shekels like this one to betray Christ (Matt 26:15). This was also the coin Jesus told Peter to find in the fish's mouth (Matt 17:27).

Three weeks before Passover tables lined the outer temple courts to receive the annual half-shekel tax required of every Jewish male (Ex. 30:11–16). This tax funded the daily sacrifices for the atonement of sin. For a modest commission, money changers exchanged inadmissible local currencies for the sanctioned Tyrian shekel used to pay the tax. Jewish authorities were forbidden to mint silver coins; they adopted the Tyrian shekel because of its high quality and because it did not flaunt Rome's dominion over Israel. These coins, however, had an image of the god

Tyrian shekels, tetradrachms, or tetradrachmas were coins of Tyre, which in the Roman Empire took on an unusual role as the medium of payment for the Temple tax in Jerusalem, and subsequently gained notoriety as a likely mode of payment for Judas Iscariot.

In the latest standard, which was also the one used for the temple tax, the coins bore the likeness of the Phoenician god Melqart or Baal, accepted as the Olympian Herakles by the Greeks and derided as Beelzebub by Jews in the time of the Seleucids, wearing the laurel reflecting his role in the Tyrian games and the ancient Olympic Games.

They also bore the Greek inscription "ΤΥΡΟΥ ΙΕΡΑΣ ΚΑΙ ΑΣΥΛΟΥ" (Tyrou hieras kai asylou, "of Tyre the holy [city] and [city] of refuge").[1] The coins were the size of a modern Israeli half-shekel and were issued by Tyre, in that form, between 126 BC and AD 56. Earlier Tyrian coins with the value of a tetradrachm, bearing various inscriptions and images, had been issued from second half of the fifth century B.C.

After the Roman Empire closed down the mint in Tyre, the Roman authorities allowed the Jewish rabbanim to continue minting Tyrian shekels in Judaea, but with the requirement that the coins should continue to bear the same image and text to avoid objections that the Jews were given autonomy.[citation needed] They were replaced by First Jewish Revolt coinage in 66 AD.

The Tyrian shekels were considered tetradrachms by the Greeks, as they weighed four Athenian drachmas, about 14 grams[citation needed], more than earlier 11-gram shekels but regarded as equivalent for religious duties at that time. Because Roman coinage was only 80% silver, the purer (94% or more) Tyrian shekels were required[4] to pay the temple tax in Jerusalem.

The money changers referenced in the New Testament Gospels (Matt. 21:12 and parallels) provided Tyrian shekels in exchange for Roman currency when this was required

The most common silver coin in circulation was the Roman denarius. In some Bible versions [e.g., the KJV], it is called a "penny" though its value was the equivalent of a day's wage for a laborer. It was translated by the word "penny" because the standard Roman abbreviation for a denarius is "d."-the same abbreviation was used centuries later by the British for "penny." Another indication of the value of the denarius is found in the story of the Good Samaritan: The innkeeper was paid two denarii for caring for the wounded man for several days. Jesus' opponents used a denarius to trap him with their question about taxation (Matthew 22:19). The denarius of that day had the head of the Roman Emperor Tiberius on one side, and on the other side a likeness of his, mother, Livia, shown holding an olive branch and a scepter, personifying Rome.

The word used in Matthew 26:15 (arguria) simply means "silver coins," and scholars disagree on the type of coins that would have been used. Donald Wiseman suggests two possibilities. They could have been tetradrachms of Tyre, usually referred to as Tyrian shekels (about 0.5 troy ounces), or staters from Antioch, which bore the head of Augustus. Alternatively, they could have been Ptolemaic tetradrachms… The Tyrian shekel weighed four Athenian drachmas, about 14 grams, more than

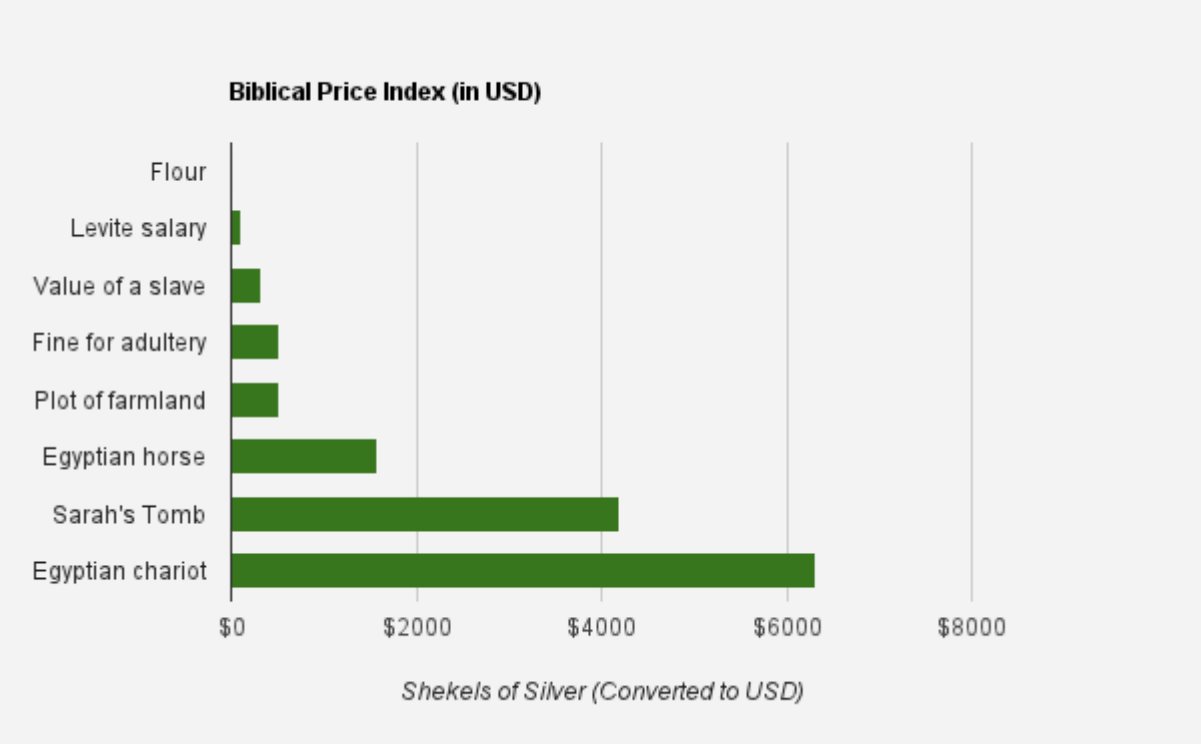
Biblical Price Index (OT)

In my last post, I asked whether or not Abraham was cheated out of his land deal by Ephron the Hittite. 400 shekels of silver mean nothing to us, but the early readers of the bible toiled in their labors for a few shekels and would have known immediately what one was worth. To answer this question, we need some basis for comparison, a pricing guide in shekels. I've scoured the bible for every listed price and put a few of them together for this chart:



Sarah's tomb is one of the most expensive single purchases in the bible. Only Solomon's military equipment cost more. The only other real-estate value that I found (the value of a plot of farmland in Leviticus 27), is almost meaningless because we don't know the size of the plot, but still a fraction of the cost of the burial cave. If you ask me, it looks like Ephron the Hittite got pretty good coin for his cave.

Is this chart accurate? Probably not. A shekel is a unit of weight, not of currency. A shekel of silver is the amount of silver which weighs a shekel. We don't know exactly how much that was (and it may have been different at different times), but most scholars place it at around 10.5 grams– roughly the weight of two US quarters. The bible lists at least three types of shekels: one in the Abrahamic period, a sanctuary shekel set during the Exodus and related to the temple, and a king's shekel in Davidic times. Were they around the same? More than likely, but it's tough to say how accurate the measurements were at all. Accurate measurement of money was such a problem that it even has its own proverb:

> Diverse weights are an abomination unto the Lord; and a false balance is not good.
> Proverbs 20:23

Free duplication permitted with references for personal use. Portions copyrighted LY; NKJV T.Nelson Pub.; others. [TOC]

In terms of purchasing power, did a shekel in Abraham's time purchase the same amount of good as in Solomon's? It's impossible to know. The value of silver today is probably not the same as in biblical times, but that won't prevent me from providing this chart:

This chart shows the shekel-weight of silver at today's commodity prices. When viewed this way, the prices just don't seem right. Flour seems reasonable, $10, but after that all of the prices seem low in comparison. A slave for $315? A plot of land for $530? Is a slave worth the same as 30 units of flour? Is a horse worth five slaves?

Looking at the data this way, answers a few questions but raises a dozen more. It's why I love this stuff so much.

Some other fun thoughts:

- This gives new meaning to the Joseph story. Joseph was sold into Egyptian bondage for only 20 shekels, rather than the 30 shekels Exodus says a slave is worth. (Genesis 37)
- Abraham probably didn't mind paying the 400 shekels to Ephron: Abimelech had given Abraham 1000 shekels to apologize for taking Sarah as a wife only a few years earlier. (Genesis 20)
- The Levite salary also included room and board, this number is just for the "spending money."

Daily Food Ration Data

The best evidence for the diet of ordinary people in Mesopotamia comes from the Ration Lists. These lists are found throughout Mesopotamian history from the Early Dynastic period to the Neo-Babylonian period. They record allocations of barley (hordeum vulgare) and other cereals by religious and secular employers to their employees. The lists include an extensive range of professions from shepherds to weavers, from agricultural workers to brewers, even slaves. They include men, women, and children. The rations are recorded either as monthly or daily issues, although they can also be provided for a particular job (e.g., harvesting). There are always variations according to age and status…

Applying Daily Food Rationing Data to the OT Book of Ruth…

Whatever the case, the ancient norm for a daily food ration seems to have been widely regarded as about 1 liter, usually of barley. It should be remembered that 0.83 liters can be sufficient for women (see above discussion). Therefore, using the preexilic capacity measure, Ruth's ephah equaled about 10–20 liters of barley which was enough for the two women to eat for a little more than a week. Using the postexilic Capacity standard, Ruth's Gleanings were enough for the two women to subsist for two and a half weeks. But according to Ruth 2:23, Ruth continued to glean in Boaz's fields "until the barley and wheat harvests were finished." According to Deut. 16:9–12 and the Gezer Calendar, the time period from the beginning of the barley harvest to the end of the wheat harvest was normally two months, concluding at Pentecost.

If Ruth averaged roughly the same total each day (i.e., one ephah), and worked the entire two months, she would have gleaned a considerable amount of barley and wheat that would have fed the two women, at the minimum pre-exilic rate, approximately two-thirds of a year, or at the maximum pre-exilic rate, more than an entire year.

With a postexilic extension of the capacity measure data, the two women would have had enough from Ruth's gleanings over the two month period to eat for two years.

In any case, regardless of the date of composition for the book, the ancient hearers of the story of Ruth were certainly well versed in the agricultural world of the Levant and no doubt sensitive to food rationing issues. Thus it is most likely that the ancient hearers would have perceived the import of this gleaning detail in Ruth 2:17 as heightening the generosity of Boaz towards the two widows on a scale greater than modern readers of the story have even begun to perceive.

In NIV Ruth 3:15 reads:

He [Boaz] also said, “Bring me the shawl you are wearing and hold it out.” When she [Ruth] did so, he poured into it six measures of barley and put it on her. (bracketed portion is mine)

The unit in which the barley is measured is named neither here, nor in v. 17, to which TH comments:

... It is possible to say “six measures of barley” (RSV, NAB, and NEB), but this is not very useful in determining the amount involved. Some scholars believe that this is a reference to the ephah, but six ephah would amount to approximately 240 liters (well over 500 pounds), an impossible load for Ruth to carry back to the city. It is possible that the measurement was a se'ah (one-third of an ephah) in which case the total capacity would be approximately liters (about 200 pounds).

Since some have felt that even this was too heavy a weight for Ruth to carry, this hypothesis has not found large support. Others have concluded that the measure was an 'omer, which would be equal to one-tenth of an ephah, or approximately 24 liters (somewhat over 50 pounds). This is the interpretation accepted by a majority of modern scholars. It does seem important to indicate that this was an impressive amount of barley—not merely from the fact that Boaz had to help her lift it, but because it was evidently designed to impress both Ruth and Naomi with Boaz's generosity and his determination to help them in every way that he could.

Note: 1 pound = 0.45 kilogram.

The ephah was the most frequent measure for capacity. The Table 2 gives an overview of the system. While the modern equivalent of each term is debated, there is not much uncertainty about the ratios between each measurement.

Capacity versus weight—OR: "How heavy is a liter of flour?"

In the Bible, dry things were measured according to their capacity.
Table 4 lists all dry substances that the Old Testament measures in volume. Their weight is provided where it is known.

Table 4

Hebrew	English	Weight (in kg.) per liter	Sample Reference
חִטָּה	wheat (grain)	0.75	II Sa 17:28
שְׂעֹרָה	barley (grain)	0.62	II Sa 17:28

קֶמַח שְׂעֹרִים	wholemeal of barley	?	Nu 5:15
סֹלֶת	semolina (of wheat), NIV: fine flour	0.59 (weight of today's "flour")	Ex 29:40
מָן	manna	?	Ex 16:31
זֶרַע	seed (unspecified)	?	I Ki 18:32
חֲרִיֹנִים דִּבֵּי	"dove's dung" (?)*	?	II Ki 6:25 MT

*HOTTP: "We no longer know what this name "pigeon dung" actually designated. It is better, then, to leave the name as it stands and as it was read by all the ancient versions. Corrections, without support from textual witnesses, would only be mere guesses." For other interpretations, see the English translations and other works.

Various sources have been consulted to determine the weight figures. Unfortunately, their information differs and thus precise figures are not easy to obtain for all measures. In addition, one should account for the fact that our grain—in whatever form—will differ in its quality from grain in ancient times. In addition, what is usually translated as "fine flour" was probably more similar to semolina. Finally, the weight of grain depends on how densely it is packed. If one is willing to approximate each measure to our current system for grain in its various forms, one can calculate with a rule-of-thumb ratio of two thirds; that is, 1 liter matches 2/3 of a kilogram.

Bricks

Bricks were common building materials in the ancient world. They were usually rectangular in shape and composed of clay or mud, along with other ingredients such as straw (Exodus 5:7–9) or sand. Bricks were usually baked by the sun, but they could also be fired in a kiln to produce greater strength and hardness.

The earliest bricks were shaped by hand; later, they were formed with wooden molds. Brickmaking involved several stages. A good clay source was absolutely necessary; then the clay was sifted and mixed to the desired consistency by adding water. Generally, a temper, often straw, was added; this temper acted as a binder for poor clays and prevented warping and cracking during the drying process. Following this, the bricks were shaped and then dried. Bricks were often inscribed with an official's name, the name of a building, or a dedicatory inscription.

An Egyptian man makes mud bricks as the ancient Israelites would have done. Note the brick mold at the man's feet.

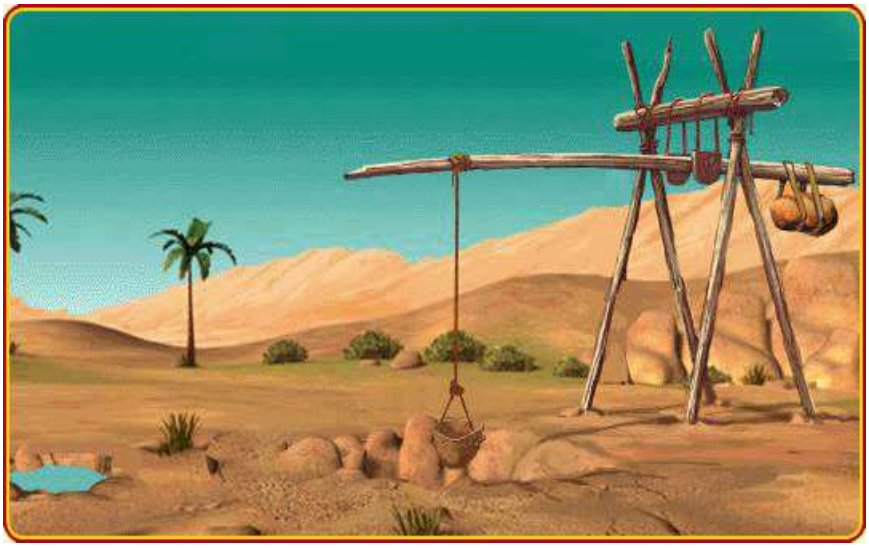
Wells

References in English versions of the Bible sometimes confuse wells, natural springs, and cisterns. The Bible mentions different types of wells including a cistern dug in the ground (Genesis 16:14; 2 Samuel 17:18); a spring (Psalms 84:6); a fountain (Nehemiah 2:13); and a pit (John 4:11, 12).

Wells in Palestine were dug from solid limestone rock, sometimes with descending steps (Genesis 24:16). The brims of still other wells had a curb or low wall of stone.

There is no information on how biblical wells were dug, but the process must have been very difficult because only crude tools were available.



Many ancient wells descended to a great depth. Jacob's Well is still 75 feet deep and at one time it may have been twice as deep. These deep wells were necessary because of the problem of shallow wells running dry in the summer.

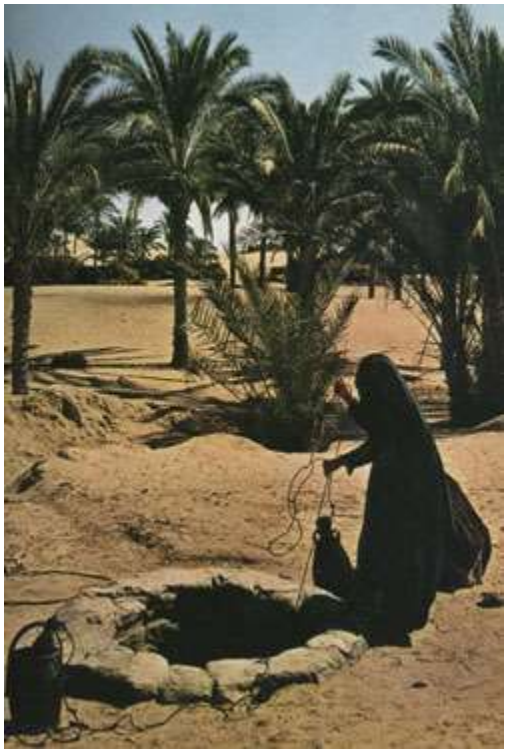
People in Bible times didn't have sinks and taps in their homes so how did they get their water?

Wells were important in the Middle East during Biblical times because, like today, there was very little rainfall during the year. Water had to be captured during brief rainy spells, or collected from where it lay deep in the ground.

During Abraham's time, people travelled from place to place with their flocks and lived in tents which were usually pitched next to hand-dug wells that were just holes in the ground covered by a heavy rock. A rope and clay pot was often used to draw out the water. Even if the water was muddy, it was better than nothing.



Later, when David was king, things got a little better and walls were built around the wells to help keep the water clean. Wells often had walls three or four stones high, and on the top edge of the stone wall there was a crossbar and pulley system. By using this pulley system, heavy pottery could be raised and lowered easily by women because it was their job to get the water from the well for the family's daily needs.

Commerce: Agriculture

The spring harvest

Various herbs and legumes were harvested in spring, but the most important spring crops were cereals: barley and wheat. A spring ritual took particular note of the cereals: Newly harvested grain could not be eaten until the firstfruits of grain had been offered on the “day after the Sabbath” of the Festival of Unleavened Bread (Leviticus 23:9-14). Pentecost, near the end of the grain harvest, included grain and loaf offerings (verses 16-17). Pentecost was also called “the Feast of Harvest” (Exodus 23:16).

Barley and wheat were planted in the autumn and ripened in spring. Barley matured faster and would be harvested sooner. The firstfruits of grain offered during the Festival of Unleavened Bread would have been barley. “In the early stages of the Israelite settlement the most important cereal was barley…because of the necessity to settle fringe areas and barley’s tolerance of harsh conditions” (Oded Borowski, Agriculture in Iron Age Israel, 1987, page 7).

“Wheat ripens later than barley and, according to the Gezer Manual, was harvested during the sixth agricultural season, yrh qsr wkl (end of April to end of May)” (page 88; also see the chart on page 37 of Borowski’s book, reproduced below).

“Where the climate is warmer, as in the Shephelah and the Jordan Valley, crops mature earlier than in regions where the climate is cool, as in the Judean hill-country and the Galilee” (page 57). In Galilee, for example, part of the grain harvest would be completed after Pentecost, especially in years in which Pentecost came as early as mid-May. Even though all the crop might not be harvested by Pentecost, Pentecost celebrated the entire grain harvest, including the small amount of grain to be harvested shortly after the festival.

Deuteronomy 11:10-11 contrasts Egypt's irrigated vegetable gardens with Canaan's hilly terrain and seasonal rains, implying that vegetables were less common in Canaan. Proverbs 15:17 indicates that vegetables were among the least-esteemed foods. The Bible has few references to gardens, cultivated vegetables and wild plants. "The small number of references to vegetables and the low regard in which vegetables were held suggest very strongly that vegetables…did not constitute an important part of the Iron Age diet in Eretz-Israel" (page 139).

Now let's look at the major crops after Pentecost. Grapes were the first major crop to ripen: "In a good year, when the [grain] yield was great, threshing and grape picking overlapped" (page 62). That would be in June, technically in spring, since summer doesn't officially start until the solstice, June 22.

The importance of grapes and olives is illustrated by the fact that the Essenes had wine and oil firstfruits festivals similar to the biblical firstfruits offering for grain. These festivals also indicate the relative timing of these crops. The new wine festival came 50 days or seven weeks after Pentecost. Until new wine was offered, no one could drink any of the new juice (Temple Scroll, columns 19-21). Fourteen weeks after Pentecost, shortly before the Feast of Trumpets, was the new olive oil festival. No one could use new olives until some oil had been offered (columns 21-22).

The grape harvest was usually completed before Tabernacles, but most of the olive harvest came after the autumn festivals.

In ancient Israel the primary harvest season extended from April to November. This harvest period might be subdivided into three seasons and three major crops: the spring grain harvest, the summer grape harvest and the autumn olive harvest. These harvests have a general correspondence with the festivals. Some grain might be harvested after Pentecost, threshing and grape-picking might overlap, and the olive harvest came both before and after the Festival of Tabernacles.

Relative Importance

Which harvest was larger and more important? In terms of dietary calories, the spring grain harvest was most important. Borowski calls barley and wheat "the main food staple of the ancient Israelite" (page 57). E.P. Sanders offers a more detailed estimate: "Grain constituted over fifty percent of the average person's total caloric intake, followed by legumes (e.g. lentils), olive oil, and fruit, especially dried figs" (Judaism: Practice and Belief, 63 BCE-66 CE, 1992, page 129).

Since fruit has a higher moisture content than grain does, the fruit harvests may have been larger in bulk and weight. Most of the dietary importance of the fruit harvest came after Tabernacles, when olive oil was produced.

The autumn festivals came after the summer harvest, a less-important harvest. But the fall festivals were associated with greater rejoicing (Deuteronomy 16:13-15). Why the theme of rejoicing? The conclusion of a wine harvest is an appropriate time for festivities. But another reason may be that Tabernacles celebrated both the spring harvest and the summer harvest. Note the mention of both grain and grapes in verse 13: "Celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles for seven days after you have gathered the produce of your threshing floor and your winepress."

In Israel, the harvest period might be subdivided into three seasons, and three major crops:

1. the spring grain harvest,

2. the summer grape harvest and

3. the autumn olive harvest.

There are 2 main harvest types in Israel

1. grain – barley, wheat, oats

2. fruit – grapes, olives, dates, figs, pomegranates and numerous fruits, seeds and vegetables of less importance

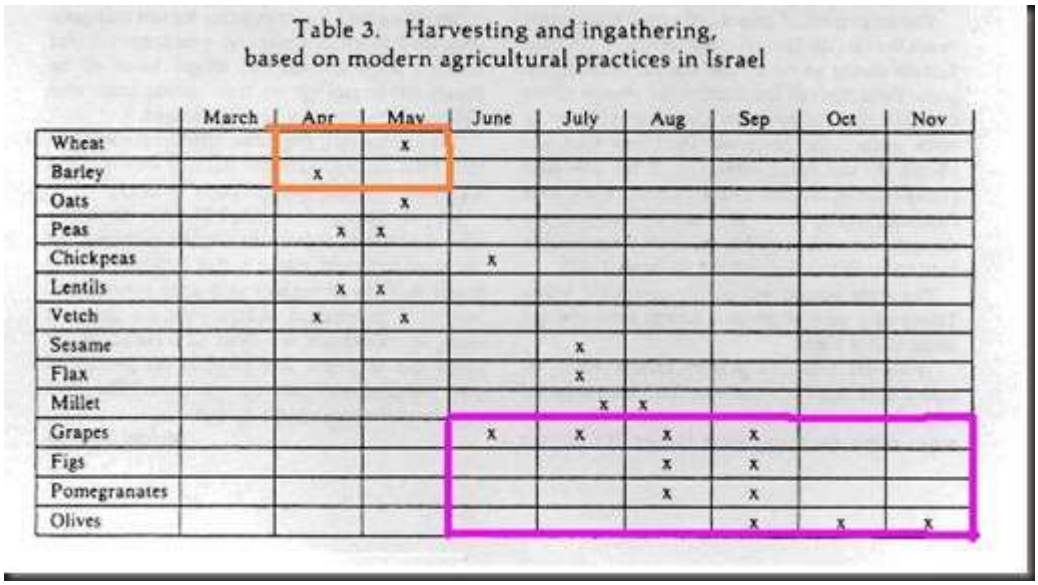

Table 3. Harvesting and ingathering, based on modern agricultural practices in Israel

There are exceptions, but

1. before Pentecost, the grain harvest is gleaned.

2. After Pentecost, various fruit harvests occur.

Although barley and wheat are both planted in the autumn, barley matures faster, and is harvested sooner.

The spring is the time of first fruits

1. The first fruits of grain offered during the Festival of Unleavened Bread would have been barley.

2. By the time of the official Festival of First Fruits, Pentecost, or Shavuot, the larger wheat harvest is ready, as well as the oats.

The rest of the harvest

1. The grape harvest was usually completed before Tabernacles

2. Most of the olive harvest came after the autumn Holy Days.

Festivals to celebrate the harvests

1. The new wine festival came 50 days or seven weeks after Pentecost. Until new wine was offered, no one could drink any of the new juice (Temple Scroll, columns 19-21).

2. Fourteen weeks after Pentecost, shortly before the Feast of Trumpets, was the new olive oil festival.

3. Tabernacles celebrated both the spring harvest and the summer harvest.

Seven Species

The Seven Species (Hebrew: שבעת המינים, Shiv'at HaMinim) are seven agricultural products – two grains and five fruits - that are listed in the Hebrew Bible (Deut 8:8) as being special products of the Land of Israel. The seven species listed are wheat, barley, grape (wine), fig, pomegranates, olive (oil), and date (honey).

[Source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Seven_Species]

See also:
http://www.jhom.com/topics/seven/species.html

For thousands of years, the Seven Species have played an important role in the food of Jews in Israel and the religious traditions of Judaism.

Many references to these basic foods can be found in Bible. The Mishna states that only first fruits of the Seven Species could be brought to the Temple in Jerusalem as offerings. Wheat fields, vineyards and olive groves are still a salient feature of the Israeli landscape today. Figs, olives, pomegranates and dates are common ingredients in the cuisine of Israel.

Wheat and barley

The ancient Israelites cultivated both wheat and barley. These two grains are mentioned first in the biblical list of the Seven Species of the land of Israel and their importance as food in ancient Israelite cuisine is also seen in the celebration of the barley harvest at the festival of Shavuot and of the wheat harvest at the festival of Sukkot.

Grapes

Grapes were used mainly for the production of wine, although they were also eaten fresh and dried.

Figs

Figs were cultivated throughout the land of Israel and fresh or dried figs were part of the daily diet. A common way of preparing dried figs was to chop them and press them into a cake. Figs are frequently mentioned in the Bible (for example, 1 Samuel 25:18, 1 Samuel 30:12 and 1 Chronicles 12:41).

Pomegranates

Pomegranates were usually eaten fresh, although occasionally they were used to make juice or wine, or sun-dried for use when the fresh fruit was out of season. They probably played a minor part in Israelite cuisine, but were symbolically important, as adornments on the hem of the robe of the high priest and the Temple pillars, and embossed on coinage.

Olives

The olive was a major element in the seven species. Olive oil was used not only for food and for cooking, but also for lighting, sacrificial offerings, ointment, and anointment for priestly or royal office.

Dates

Dates were eaten fresh or dried, but were used mostly boiled into thick, long-lasting syrup called “date honey” (dvash temarim) for use as a sweetener. The honey in the Biblical reference of “a land flowing with milk and honey” (for example, Exodus 3:8) is date honey.

Talmudic Interpretation

The size of various measurements are tied to the specific amounts and sizes of Halachic objects. For example, the minimum width of Tefillin straps is known by Law given to Moses at Sinai to be the size of a grain of barley. Alike, other fruits are used for measuring. Talmud scholars use the verse of Seven Species, as a hint for all the measures using fruit sizes.

Modern significance

The seven species are traditionally eaten on Tu Bishvat, the Jewish "New Year for Trees", on Sukkot, the "Festival of Booths", and on Shavuot, the "Festival of Weeks". In halakha (Jewish law), they are considered more important than other fruits, and a special berakhah (blessing) is recited after eating them. Additionally, the blessing prior to eating them precedes those of other food items, except for bread.

For barley to be used for determining Abib, it should be at "maturity" at the time of the new moon, so 14 days later would be Passover and the barley would be ripe for the first fruit offering that was done. In the event that the barley field was not totally ripe, some could be picked, since roasting the seeds to dry them was acceptable for an offering.
Concerning the Passover firstfruit wave-sheaf offering, Josephus says (Ant., iii, 10,5) that the sheaf was of barley, and that, until this ceremony had been performed, no harvest work was to be done. So, the barley was harvest ready. If barley is to be used for the first month determination, it must, at the new moon, be yellow and beginning to dry out as in the "Maturity" picture above; two weeks later, Passover, it would then be harvest ready. Abib does not mean "green ear;" this incorrect translation has caused much misunderstanding

I was using the barley to determine the month of Abib and then set up the Biblical Calandar for the coming year. I had been going to Arizona barley fields for several years, at this point, and was learning more each year. What I learned in March of 2002 was very shocking to me. Below you can read my observations, Biblical references, and comments.

Did you know that all barley is not the same?

I recently learned that one type of barley will mature in April of 2002 and another type will mature in May of 2002. These are not genetically modified varieties; these are products of farming seed selections that have been used by man for centuries.

How many types of barley are there?

Here in Arizona, there are more than six types of barley grown. Some seed types that have been developed to grow better in a dry, desert environment (Arizona, Israel, etc.) are shipped all over the world.

Abib (Barley)

Good information about barley and it's stages, espcially as it relates to the Bible. (Kariate Jewish perspective)

[Source: http://www.karaite-korner.org/abib.shtml]

So, does barley have to be fully ripe in order to be considered Aviv? If we look at Lev. 2:14, we will get a clear answer to this question. This verse states that the bikkurim (firstfruits) offering can be brought either as Aviv parched in fire, or as crushed Carmel. There is a major clue here, because this verse offers the Israelite two options for bringing the firstfruits of his barley crop. You see, as it develops its grains, the barley plant first fills out each kernel with a watery substance, then gradually places more and more starch into each grain, so that as the grain ripens, it becomes harder and drier. When grain is fully ripe, it is hard and dry enough that it can be crushed into flour. If the grain is entirely unripe, then nothing but a hull would remain if parched in fire. If it is almost, but not quite ripe, it still has too much moisture content in order to be crushed into flour, and would rot if stored without having been further dried, but it still has enough starch in it that something would remain if the grain were to be parched in fire. No doubt, the Israelite farmer needed something of substance that he could bring as an offering. If his grain was fully ripe, he could simply crush it into flour and bring that. However, if it was not fully ripe, this verse gives him the option of parching it in fire and bringing that as his offering. So this is what the Torah calls Aviv: barley that is ripe enough to be offered as parched in fire, but still too moist to be crushed into flour as is.

This barley is mostly at the stage of Aviv (or Abib); some of the barley is fully ripe.

* "the Abib" [Hebrew: HA ABIB, the colour light green] refers to the colour of barley grain turning light green. When this happened the sighting of the next new moon indicated the first day of the first month of a Hebrew new year. All Hebrew years started with this month. It was called "the month of the Abib [the light green]". All Hebrew months were numbered from this month

The two most important grains were wheat and barley. Wheat grew best in the coastal plain, the Jezreel Valley, around Samaria, on the western side of the Sea of Galilee, and in the Jordan Valley. Barley, the common food of the poor, was normally grown on poorer soil. It was also fed to horses, asses, and cattle. Jesus fed the 5,000 with barley bread (Jn 6:9ff.).

Unfortunately Bible versions [e.g., the KJV] and commentators often speak of the growing of corn in Palestine. "Corn" is an old English generic term for grain and should not be confused with the maize of the New World, which Europeans only began using after the Spanish discovery of America.

Wheat sowing took place in November and December and harvest between April and June. Barley sowing occurred about the same time as wheat, but it ripened about a month earlier, in March or April. In New Testament times farmers commonly sowed and plowed at the same time. Seed was plowed into the soil. Oxen or donkeys pulled the plow that covered seed scattered on the ground. Alternatively, the ground was plowed first and then sown.

At harvest time farmers cut the grain with a sickle. During the Roman period the sickle was a hand-held crescent-shaped tool made of iron that had a sharp inner cutting edge. Today we use sickles very similar to it for a number of yard chores. They then tied the grain into bundles and loaded them onto donkeys or carts and took them to a threshing floor—a hard surface of soil or stone.

There they might beat the grain to separate it from the straw, or they drove oxen round and round to do the same thing. Often they used threshing sleds for large quantities of grain. These were wooden platforms with stones attached underneath that were dragged over the grain by oxen or donkeys.

Last came the winnowing process. On a breezy day farmers used five-pronged winnowing forks to throw the grain and straw into the air. The wind blew away the chaff (Psalms 1:4) or straw, and the grain fell back on the ground. As the last part of this process the harvesters used wooden shovels to toss up the remaining grain. Finally they used a sieve to sift impurities from the grain.

Then it was ready to be stored. The reference to barns in several versions of the New Testament (e.g., Mt 6:26; 13:30; Lk 12:18, 24) is misleading. Thus probably the average Bible reader thinks of a large red barn on a farm in rural America. But what is in view here is simply a place for storing grain. From archaeological excavations we know that granaries may have been clay jars, pits lined with plaster or brick, or brick silos (beehive shaped with vents at the top).

In addition to wheat and barley, Palestinian farmers in New Testament times grew millet, spelt, oats, and rye. Generally Palestine had enough grain for its own needs, and even some to export. For example, during the days of Herod Agrippa I (41–44), Tyre and Sidon depended on "the king's country" (Judea) for foodstuffs (Ac 12:20). Though most agriculture was dry farming, during New Testament times they also practiced irrigation, especially in the Jordan Valley around Jericho. They tapped the water of rivers, springs and wells and sent it by means of pipes, aqueducts and man-made channels to the thirsty fields.

Major Roads of Palestine

Major roads crisscrossed Palestine. The Romans built a coastal road from Pelusium in Egypt through Gaza, Ascalon, Caesarea and Tyre. Then it continued north to the Syrian capital of Antioch and east to the Tigris. This route had been used from antiquity.

Other ancient roads were busy with commerce. One led from Babylon across the central Euphrates and the desert to the Jordan River, crossed it north of the Sea of Galilee, descended into the Jordan Valley to Beth Shean, where it turned into the Jezreel Valley and finally joined the coastal road at Mount Carmel. Another ran from southwest Arabia north parallel to the Red Sea, carrying luxury goods of Arabia and Africa. At Petra (about 50 miles south of the Dead Sea) it branched to Egypt, Gaza, and Damascus. A road also ran north-south along the watershed, through Hebron, Jerusalem, Samaria, and points north.

Of course Jewish farmers grew more than grain. In fact, diversification kept some of them from going under financially in a bad year. Farmers provided a wide variety of vegetables and fruits in season on the local market day. The housewife could buy cabbage, turnips, lettuce, lentils, beans, chickpeas, cucumbers, asparagus, Egyptian beans, Egyptian pumpkins, and more. They also grew pomegranates, figs, grapes, and olives, as well as plenty of plums, cherries, dates, apples, pears, and peaches.

They sold dates at home and abroad, along with the products of date wine and date honey. Judean dates were famous all over the Mediterranean world. They usually marketed figs as dried fruit, both at home and abroad. Palestinian grape wine was also known and marketed abroad—especially the wines of Carmel, Ascalon, and Gaza. Viticulture also produced dried grapes (raisins) and vinegar.

Any reader of the New Testament knows how important olives and their oil were to the economy of Israel and the life of the people. They ate its fruit raw, but olive oil was more important for cooking, treating wounds, as a fuel (especially in lamps for illumination), and as a cosmetic. And of course they used it in worship, in the sacrificial offerings and the anointing of rulers and priests. It was also extensively exported. While the finest wines came from Judea, the best oils were produced in Galilee. But olives were important in Judea too, as such names as the Mount of Olives and Gethsemane (meaning “oil press") attest. Olive growing was more extensive in Palestine in New Testament times than at present.

While the finest wines came from Judea, the best oils were produced in Galilee. But olives were important in Judea too, as such names as the Mount of Olives and Gethsemane (meaning “oil press") attest. Olive growing was more extensive in Palestine in New Testament times than at present.

The olive tree is slow growing and requires years of patient work before production of fruit. At maturity the tree rises to about twenty feet. The tree flowers about May and the fruit matures between September and December, varying with locality. When ripe, the olives are beaten or shaken from the trees. Then normally they are crushed in a mill, which is a circular stone basin about eight feet in diameter. Into this they put a millstone that was stood up vertically and revolved around a central pivot by either human or animal (donkey) energy. They collected the oil squeezed out in this way in jars. The rest of the pulp was put in baskets and taken to an oil press. The most common of these was a pole with the lower end inserted into a hole in the rock and the upper end weighted down with stones. The baskets of olive pulp were placed on a rock under the pole and the oil allowed to drip into a stone container.

Balsam trees were cultivated in Gilead and Jericho, as well as along the northern and western shores of the Dead Sea. Extract from them served as a spice and medicine and was an expensive luxury product.

Land that would not support grain production could provide small patches for growing vegetables. Terrain not feasible for producing either usually could grow grapes or fruit trees. Rocky hillsides not useful for any type of agriculture provided pasturage for sheep, goats, and cattle.

Jews in New Testament Palestine raised sheep and goats in large numbers. Both were needed for temple sacrifices. Beyond that they were extremely useful in daily life. Goats provided milk (about six pints per goat per day), a type of yogurt and cheese, hair for coarse clothing (sackcloth) and tent covering (for Bedouins), skin for leather, and a skin that was often sewn up and used as a bottle—for either wine (e.g., Mt 9:16-17) or water.

Goatskins are still used as water containers in various places in the Near East. I have seen Egyptians walking along the Nile with their goatskin water bottles at Luxor. Sheep also gave milk and especially provided wool for clothing. Though women wove wool for clothing all over Palestine, they especially preferred it in Judea, while the women of Galilee and the Jordan valley commonly used flax. Shearing time came after the summer grazing and often gave rise to a time of celebration.

Shepherding and the Great Shepherd

Any family in Palestine might keep a few sheep, but large flocks required full-time shepherds and probably some hired hands. Shepherds often cared for the sheep of a whole village. After spring rains there was plenty of pasturage, while after the harvest sheep could eat remains of wheat, oats and rye in the fields. Thereafter shepherds had to take their flocks in search of dried grass or remaining patches of green grass.

The shepherd had to care for his sheep at all times, providing them with food, water, and protection. Jesus called himself the “good shepherd” (Jn 10:11). In protecting the sheep he gave his life for the sheep, as shepherds might have to do in battling wild animals (Jn 10:11, 15). He as the true shepherd did not, as the “hired man,” flee when the sheep were attacked by wild animals (Jn 10:12)

In the words of Ps 23:4: “Your rod and Your staff, they comfort me” (NKJV). The rod or club (and the sling) protected the sheep from harm. And the shepherd used his staff or walking stick to control sheep and to count them as they entered the sheepfold at night.

When a sheep was lost the shepherd went out to search for it (Lk 15:3-6). And when he found a lost or sick sheep, he sometimes tenderly carried it on his shoulders (Lk 15:5). At night a shepherd kept watch over the sheep in the fields, as the shepherds did around the time of Jesus’ birth, near Bethlehem (Lk 2:8). A sheepfold was preferable to the open fields, however. A fold could be a cave or a stone enclosure, and the shepherd would lie down across the opening (“the door of the sheep,” Jn 10:7). In fact, the shepherd had such an intimate relationship with his sheep that they knew him, followed him, and responded to his voice. And they would not follow strangers (Jn 10:4, 5, 14).

Other Animals

Farmers also raised other animals for food and for sacrifices during the New Testament period. Cattle had been raised in significant numbers from antiquity, as had turtle doves and pigeons. Hens and roosters were introduced from abroad (from the East) about the time of Christ. Hunting of wild animals for food assumed less and less significance during the first century.

Fishing around the Sea of Galilee provided the basic economy for several towns, including Bethsaida in the north, Capernaum in the northwest, and Magdala (Taricheae) in the west. Those who profited from the industry included the fishermen who caught the fish, those who processed the fish, and those who marketed the fish (three separate groups). The fish had to be pickled, salted, or dried in order to be preserved and transported. Processed fish were distributed to merchants throughout Palestine and shipped through Cana and Acre to various Mediterranean ports. The shipping containers were large clay jars (amphorae).

Town Industry

The Jewish culture expected every father to teach his son a craft, whether in Jerusalem or elsewhere in Judaism. The list of crafts practiced in the cities is long indeed and included tailors, cobblers, masons, stonecutters, woodworkers or carpenters, bakers, tanners, perfumers, butchers, cooks, cheesemakers, barbers, launderers (men and women), smiths (in gold, silver, copper, iron), dyers, linen weavers, carpet weavers, embroiderers, potters, glassmakers, doctors, scribes, and more. Sometimes a whole town concentrated on one industry. Apparently Nazareth contained a lot of carpenters. In the cities, shops and stalls where bakers, dyers, linen and wool merchants, smiths, clothiers, and others sold their goods provided a livelihood for many. Workers engaged in the same crafts tended to live together in one section of the city. And there is some evidence that they also developed rudimentary guild organizations.

The masons, stonecutters, and woodworkers had plenty to do in Jerusalem during the days of the Herods. Herod the Great rebuilt the temple (20 B.C. – A.D. 64); his palace with the three adjacent towers of Hippicus, Phasael, and Mariamne; the fortress of Antonia north of the temple, a theater, and a hippodrome, among other things. Herod Agrippa I (41–44) built the northernmost wall of the city, two miles long. After completion of the temple, some 18,000 workers were unemployed and conditions in and around Jerusalem grew a little tense. In order to relieve the situation, Herod Agrippa II had Jerusalem paved with white stone (probably limestone). But this was only a temporary solution, so Agrippa, in cooperation with the high priests, began new construction at the site of the temple about 66. This, too, was only partly successful in reducing unemployment.

Increasingly unemployment, a generally worsening economy, heavy taxes, and unwise administrative acts of the prefects (procurators) tended to radicalize the lower classes of the Jerusalem area and to make them supportive of revolt against Rome when it came in 66 and following.

Commerce

"Today or tomorrow we will go to such and such a city, spend a year there, buy and sell, and make a profit." (Jas 4:13 NKJV)

"Beware of the scribes, who… love greetings in the marketplaces." (Mk 12:38 NKJV)

"A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves." (Lk 10:30 NKJV)

By New Testament times Palestine had experienced extensive urbanization. In addition to Jerusalem and the cities of Decapolis, other towns with large populations included Caesarea, Sebaste (Samaria), Hebron, Bethlehem, Lydda, Jamnia, Tiberias, Sepphoris, and Taricheae. This is significant because they provided a market for agricultural goods from their hinterlands, developed town industries, and had aristocratic classes that wanted luxury goods from home and abroad. A large part of the foreign trade of the Jews passed through Greek hands.

From time immemorial, market day had been on Friday in the towns. On this day before the Sabbath, rural people came to sell their produce (food, clothing, etc.) at the town market. In the large towns, where there was a non-Jewish majority (such as Caesarea, Ascalon, or Gaza) fairs were held (connected with pagan religious festivals). At these one could buy all kinds of foreign goods from itinerant salesmen.

Of course pilgrims spent large sums of money in Jerusalem and along the way as they passed through the land on the way to participate in one of the great festivals. Commercial contacts continued at other times of the year between the Jews of Palestine and the Diaspora. Jewish exports were primarily agricultural. From the Sharon plain went wine and cattle; from Jericho and the plain around the Sea of Galilee, fruit; from Judea, wine and oil; from Galilee, oil and vegetables. Chief destinations of these exports were Egypt, Syria, and Rome. It would be tedious to list all the imports (some 250 different items), but asses from Libya, jewelry and papyrus from Egypt, and a variety of wines and beer from Egypt, Babylonia, and Greece were the chief products brought in.

Goods traveled by donkey caravan through the length and breadth of Palestine. This was necessary for protection against ever-present highwaymen who might be lurking around the next bend in the road, as was the case with the Samaritan who fell among thieves (see above, Lk 10:30-37).

Jewish mariners learned the ways of the sea and Jewish boats sailed from Jaffa, Ascalon, Acre, and especially Caesarea, for Spain, Italy, Gaul, Cilicia (especially Tarsus), Greece, Antioch, and elsewhere. And foreign vessels in considerable numbers put in at Israelite ports.

Travel

“His [Jesus] parents went to Jerusalem every year at the Feast of Passover.” (Lk 2:41)

“Now there were dwelling in Jerusalem Jews, devout men, from every nation under heaven.” (Ac 2:5 NKJV)

Jews traveled more than almost any other people of the Mediterranean world during the first century, with the exception of navy men, merchant marines, and a few others. Jews were supposed to go to Jerusalem for Passover, Pentecost, and the Feast of Weeks. And they were supposed to contribute their half shekel annually for the support of the temple.

Since it was not safe for a single family to travel alone, nor a few to transport the temple tax over a great distance, people joined “festival caravans” headed for Jerusalem. Evidently Jesus' parents joined such a group at the time Jesus was twelve (Lk 2:44), and Jesus and his disciples later attached themselves to a similar group around Jericho (Mk 10:46).

The account of the Pentecost just after the Resurrection (Ac 2:9-11) gives a formidable list of pilgrims from Roman provinces and even territories beyond the borders of empire: Parthians, Medes, Elamites, dwellers in Mesopotamia, Judea, Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia, Phrygia, Pamphylia, Egypt, Libya around Cyrene, Rome, Crete, Arabia. Put in modern terms, they came from Iran, Iraq, Turkey, Egypt, Libya, Italy, Crete, and Arabia. Then Barnabas and certainly others had come from Cyprus, and the treasurer of the Ethiopian queen Candace made a journey to Jerusalem for some religious purpose (Ac 8:27-39). Proselytes or God-fearers also went to the festivals: “Now there were certain Greeks among those who came up to worship at the feast” (Jn 12:20 NKJV).

There was constant movement between Syria and Palestine, and within Palestine people who were closer to Jerusalem could come more often. Palestinian residents might hope to go to Jerusalem for one of the three festivals annually. Those living abroad did well to make a pilgrimage to the Holy City once in a lifetime. As we have noted earlier, more than 100,000 might attend one of the festivals.

In addition to all this travel to Jerusalem, religious leaders occasionally came to the city from Jewish communities abroad to confer with members of the establishment. And think of the comings and goings of apostles and other missionary teams as they sought to spread the gospel. That story is told in subsequent chapters.

Of course there were also members of the official circle who moved between Palestine and Rome and members of the commercial community, referred to in the last section, who transported imports and exports.

Goats

Although goats did not need good pasture, they were terribly hard on vegetation; they ate everything within reach, including fledgling trees and shrubs. Their excessive numbers and indiscriminate grazing have been blamed for some of the barren hills of present-day Israel.[1] But to the Israelites goats had great value. They supplied milk and milk products. The meat tasted like venison; the young kids were especially tender. Goat hair was not shorn, but combed from the animals and woven into coarse cloth. Goatskin made good leather and water bottles. Even the horns of rams were used for drinking vessels and musical instruments. A man with a large flock of goats was indeed well off. Goats had their drawbacks—they stank, and they were lively, strong-willed creatures, unlike their docile cousins the sheep. In Jesus' parable, when the sheep and goats were separated, the goats wound up in the position of disfavor (Matt. 25:31–34).

Why did shepherds in Bible times separate sheep from goats?

https://www.jw.org/en/publications/magazines/wp20150101/eunuchs-shepherds-in-bible-times/

When describing a future time of judgment, Jesus said: “When the Son of man comes in his glory, . . . he will separate people one from another, just as a shepherd separates the sheep from the goats.” (Matthew 25:31, 32) Why would literal shepherds separate these animals?

Normally, sheep and goats were herded and allowed to graze together during the day. At night they would be gathered into enclosures that protected them from wild animals, thieves, and the cold. (Genesis 30:32, 33; 31:38-40) The two types of animals would be placed in separate enclosures to protect the relatively docile sheep, particularly the ewes and the lambs, from harm that could be inflicted on them by the more aggressive goats. The shepherd also separated the sheep from the goats when “breeding, milking, and shearing,” says the book All Things in the Bible. Jesus’ illustration thus drew on practices and imagery that would be familiar to listeners in a pastoral environment like that of ancient Israel.

Hebrew Word and The Hebrew Language

Waw-nun names

The Hebrew language contains a class of nouns that are constructed by postfixing a root with וּן, or waw nun. Lexicons will simply state that a וּן-word is a diminutive form, but it's a bit more subtle than that.

The English language (and the mind that contains it) consists predominantly of 'things' that look a certain way and verbs are derived from those things. The Hebrew language works the other way around. Hebrew starts out with a movement or action and derived nouns are those things that perform that action. The specific וּן-nouns are to the parent verb what a bucket of water is to a river. A וּן-noun describes a person who does the verb, or a place at which the verb is done. In effect, the וּן-couple personifies or localizes the root.

For more on the difference between the English language and the Hebrew language, read our article To Be Is To Do.

A dynamic language

The Hebrew language works different from ours. That makes it very difficult to translate, and that causes translations to be often poor and lacking. One of the differences is that the Hebrew language is much more dynamic than ours. Hebrew is all about action. Something is reckoned after what it does, not after how it looks. This principle is quite fundamental in Scriptures; it is applied all over. Probably most drastic in the Second Commandment where the Lord prohibits the making of graven images. A graven image after all does not move, and a statue that, for instance, tries to display a calf is not showing typical calf-behavior but static appearance.

The principle even occurs in the New Testament, which is written in Greek but with a Hebrew way of thinking. The second chapter of James, for instance, explains that a believer is not someone who looks like one, or even says she's one, but rather someone who acts like one. To be is to do.

> Hold that thought:
> > In Hebrew Scriptures, and all models derived thereof, > > entities are reckoned solely after their behavior and not after their appearance.
> > An entity is a behavior, not that which executes the behavior.

It is crucial that the reader takes a firm hold of this principle. If a modern Westerner would see a picture of a lion, she would say, "That is a lion."

If an ancient Hebrew would see someone gather and devour food, she would say, "That is a lion."

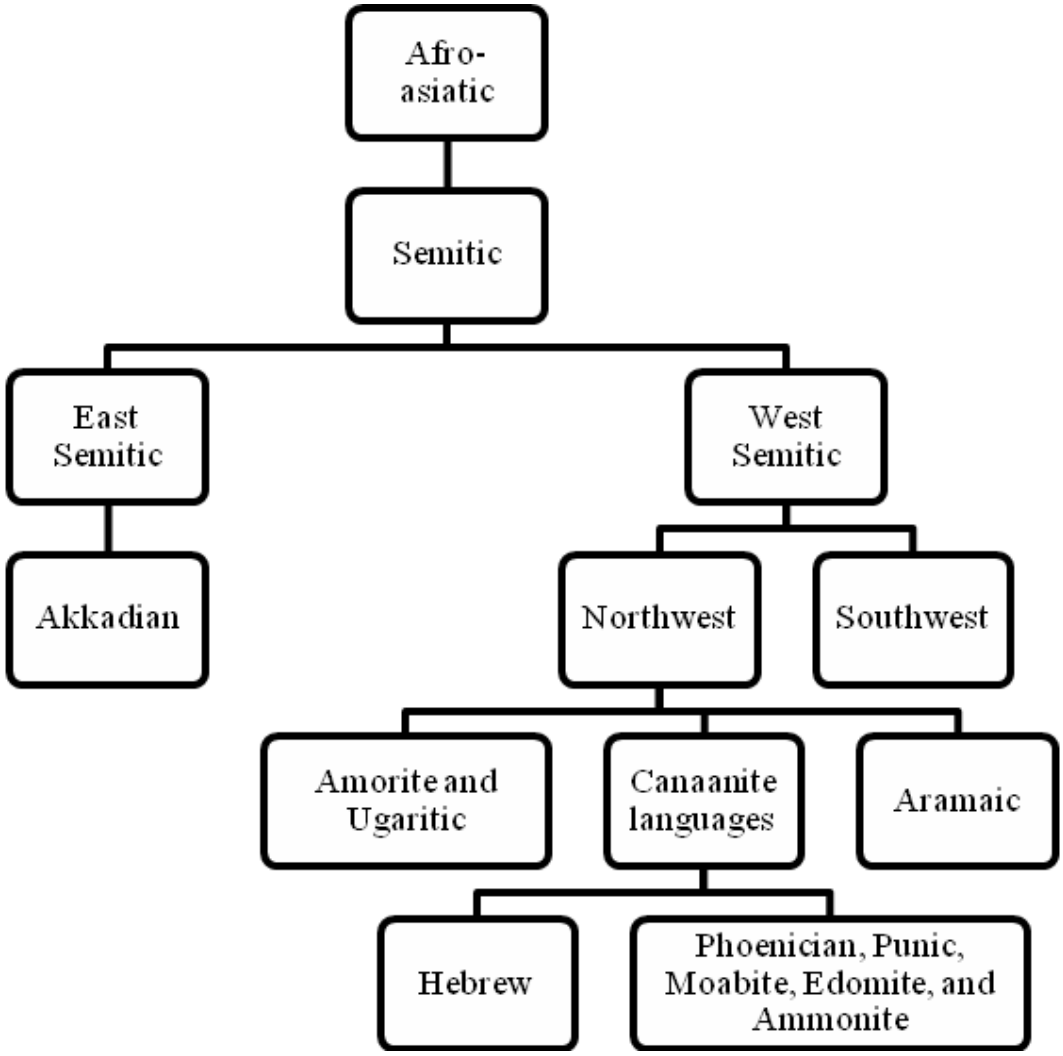
“Hebrew” meaning

To us moderns the name “Hebrew” has a unique and exclusive (and even religious) ring to it, but it should be noted with some stress that this is not at all the case in the narrative of the Bible. The "name" Hebrew isn't an abstract label but much rather an ordinary word used as a appellative, like a nickname or even a signature quality. It means Passed Over or Passer Over or Transition or One Who Transits or One From The Other [Dry] Side or even Flower Forth or Deducer or He Who Looks At Something From All Sides.



In the Bible the name Hebrew obviously does not denote a particular religion or language or nationality, but rather the intrinsic human need to cut through all the legalizing and restricting, all the deceit and ballyhoo, and arrive at something timeless and natural; something as natural as we ourselves are: the natural laws upon which we were designed to operate, the same truth that famously sets us free (John 8:32), that existed before everything else (John 1:1) and in which everything holds together (Colossians 1:17); the same truth that purposes to hand over His kingdom to the God and Father, when He has abolished all rule and all authority and power (1 Corinthians 15:24).

Language Family Tree

Note: Hebrew and Aramaic are related languages. They belong to the Semitic language group within the Afro-asiatic language families. The Semitic languages were the predominant language groups of the Middle East. In scholarly research, these languages are classified into two groups according to their geographic distribution: (1) East and (2) West Semitic languages. The East Semitic group has only one language, Akkadian, the language of the Babylonians and Assyrians. The West Semitic group is divided into the Northwest (present day Lebanon and Syria) and the Southwest (Arabian Peninsula and Ethiopia) Semitic language. The Northwest has three main families: (1) Amorite and Ugaritic, (2) Canaanite languages, and (3) Aramaic. Hebrew belongs to the Canaanite language group, together with Phoenician, Punic, Moabite, Edomite, and 8. Introduction to Hebrew and Aramaic Ammonite. It is no wonder that Hebrew was called „the language of Canaan" (Isa. 19:18).

Languages of the Old Testament

The Old Testament was written in Hebrew and some parts in Aramaic. Almost 99% of the Old Testament was written in the Hebrew language (23,213 verses). The Aramaic section is very small. It consists of a few chapters and verses in Genesis (31:47, two words); Ezra (4:8-6:18; 7:12-26); Jeremiah (10:11); Daniel (2:4-7:28).

Aramaic Language

During its time in the Promised Land, Israel fought several times against the Arameans. David defeated king Hadadezer of Damascus (2 Sam. 8:3-8). When the Assyrians conquered the Arameans, they incorporated the latter's language into their own. Assyrians were able to speak Aramaic, which the leaders of the Israelite army also understood.

Eliakim son of Hilkiah, Shebna, and Joah said to the chief adviser, 'Speak to your servants in Aramaic, for we understand it. Don't speak with us in the Judahite dialect in the hearing of the people who are on the wall' (2 Kgs 18:26 NET).

The influence of Aramaic grew steadily. Aramaic became the official language of the Persian Empire. It dominated from around 331 BC until 200 BC. All important documents of the Persian Empire were written in it. The language was therefore called Imperial or Official Aramaic.

The Aramaic passages of the Old Testament were all written in Imperial Aramaic.

During the time of Alexander, Greek replaced Aramaic as the lingua franca. But Aramaic's influence did not die out. From 200 BC to AD 250 Middle Aramaic developed a number of dialects that were used by, among others, Jews and Christians (Syriac) in Palestine.

During the rise of Islam, Arabic replaced many Aramaic dialects as the spoken language. Christians and Jews continued to use Aramaic. This phase of the language is known as the Late Aramaic. It lasted until the 13th century AD.

Aramaic is considered to be a dead language by some scholars. However, Modern Aramaic is still the mother tongue of hundreds of thousands of speakers in present-day Iraq, Iran, Syria, Lebanon and Turkey.

The Synagogue

A reconstruction drawing of the remains of the synagogue at Capernaum discovered at Tell Hum (ruins of a Jewish village and Synagogue at Capernaum).

During the Babylonian exile in the sixth century BC Jews began gathering to pray and study the scriptures in the synagogue A quorum of ten men was necessary to form a synagogue. Women sat in a separate section, and were not expected to take part.

Numerous synagogues were set up in Jerusalem, including one for freedmen, or ex-slaves. There were no less than 480 synagogues in Jerusalem during Jesus' time. The well preserved synagogue at Capernaum dates from the first or second century AD and is almost certainly the site of the building where Jesus spoke. About the only synagogue visible today which for certain, dates to the first century AD, is the building excavated at Masada.

Wherever the apostle Paul traveled he made first for the local synagogue to preach the Christian message to the Jews. As a qualified rabbi he would be invited to expound the weekly readings from the Torah and the Prophets. At Philippi he went to 'a place of prayer'. This was a common description for a synagogue and may have been a synagogue rather than just a riverside place of prayer, as is traditionally accepted.

Some synagogues were huge. Excavators have discovered an enormous synagogue at Sardis, in western Turkey, which was in use from 200-600 AD. The main hall is 65 yards long, with a forecourt and porch projecting an additional 43 yards. The great Diploston synagogue in Alexandria was so enormous that a man was stationed in the middle of the building so he could signal with a flag the correct moment for the Amen to people at the back of the building.

SYNAGOGUES IN THE TIME OF JESUS

- The first synagogues may have been built by Jews held captive far from the temple during the Babylonian Exile in the sixth century B.C., but synagogues were important religious and social institutions in the time of Jesus.

- The original Greek word synagogue means merely "a place of meeting."

- In the Jewish world synagogues were second only to the temple in Jerusalem itself as religious institutions. They also served as schools of religious instruction and communal halls for civic functions under the direction of a council of elders.

- Typically, a synagogue was a small structure built on a rise above the neighboring houses. Opposite the entrance, a portable ark contained the scrolls of the Law and the Prophets. In front of it, facing worshipers, were the "chief seats" for religious leaders.

- Men and women perhaps sat apart from each other in the congregation as they did in later times.

- For public worship, which was conducted on the Sabbath, a minimum of 10 adult males had to be in attendance.

- The five-part service included prayers, psalm-singing, blessings, readings from the Scriptures, and commentaries on the sacred passages, but there were no sacrifices and no standard liturgy.

- Although a rabbi might be recognized as the leader because of his distinguished teaching, there was no official clergy. In fact, any Jew who felt himself qualified could ask for permission to teach the Scriptures-as Jesus did at Nazareth.

SYNAGOGUE AND CHURCH

In the very beginning, believers in Jesus did not separate themselves from their fellow Jews. Like Pharisees, Sadducees, Essenes, and lesser-known groups, they seemed to form a new sect of Judaism-sometimes called "the Way"; and the first Christians preached in synagogues whose members shared many of the same beliefs and were already familiar with the Scriptures.

Later, as missionaries carried the Gospel out into the Greco-Roman world, services that included gentiles were initially held in synagogues; but soon there were churches specifically for gentile converts.

Soon, the gentile Christianity that grew out of the early churches began to predominate over the Jewish Christianity that was centered in synagogues. In fact, as the faith spread in the West, it failed in Palestine, partly because it did not give encouragement to the Zealots, who wanted to rise up against Rome, and partly because its essential ideas and beliefs struck many traditional Jews as too revolutionary.

Perhaps as early as AD 50, Jews and Christianized Jews split, even rioting against each other in Rome, and soon the gulf between synagogue and church had widened beyond the point of reconciliation.

The Synagogue

The synagogue played a large part in the growth and persistence of Judaism, as previously noted.

The Jews of the Dispersion founded synagogues in every city of the empire where there were enough Jews to maintain one, and foreign synagogues flourished in Jerusalem.

Galilee, which in the days of the Maccabees was largely Gentile (I Macc. 5:21-23), was filled with synagogues in the time of Christ.

The synagogue was the social center where the Jewish inhabitants of a city gathered weekly to meet each other.

It was the educational medium for keeping the law before the people and for providing instruction for their children in the ancestral faith.

It was the substitute for temple worship, which was precluded by distance or by poverty.

In the synagogue the study of the law took the place of ritual sacrifice, the rabbi supplanted the priest, and the communal faith was applied to individual life.

Each synagogue had as its leader the "head of synagogue" (Mark 5:22), who was probably selected from among the elders by vote. The leader presided over the services in the synagogue, acted as instructor in case of any dispute (Luke 13:14), and introduced visitors to the assembly (Acts 13:15).

The synagogue attendant, or hazzan, acted as custodian of the property and had the responsibility of caring for the building and its contents. His duties included warning the village people of the beginning of the Sabbath on Friday afternoon and notifying them also of its close. Probably he was the official mentioned in Luke 4:20 who brought forth the roll of Scripture from which Jesus preached in the synagogue at Nazareth and who replaced the roll in its proper niche when He had finished reading from it. On occasion the hazzan served as the master of the local synagogue school.

The synagogue buildings were usually substantial structures of stone, sometimes richly furnished if the congregation or sponsor were wealthy. Every synagogue had a chest in which the roll of the law was kept, a platform with a reading desk from which the Scripture of the day was read, lamps for lighting the building, and benches or seats for the congregation.

Most of the equipment in use in the ancient synagogues still appears in their modern counterpart.

THE SYNAGOGUE SERVICE consisted of recitation of the Jewish Shema, "Hear, O Israel: Jehovah our God is one Jehovah: and thou shalt love Jehovah thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might" (Deut. 6:4, 5),

This was accompanied by sentences of praise to God called Berakot because they began with the word "Blessed."

Following the Shema was a ritual prayer, concludingwith an opportunity for individual silent prayer on the part of the members of the congregation.

The reading of the Scriptures, which came next, began with special sections of the law which were assigned to holy days; but as time went on the entire Pentateuch was divided into sections which gave a fixed cycle of one hundred fifty-four lessons to be read in a definite period of time. The Palestinian Jews read through the Pentateuch every three years, whereas the Babylonian Jews completed the reading in one year. The Prophets were also used, as Jesus' reading in the synagogue shows (Luke 4:16-.). Probably on that occasion Jesus Himself selected the reading.
